(4) No distributor defendant shall refuse to license its pictures for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run to be designated by the distributor upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor, if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located. Controversies arising from a complaint by an exhibitor for violation of the foregoing provision shall be subject to arbitration under which [fol. 3662] an award based on a finding of violation shall direct the distributor to offer its pictures to the complainant on a run to be designated by the distributor, and upon terms fixed by the distributor, which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of this subdivision.

(5) Controversies arising from the complaint of an exhibitor that a feature licensed by a distributor defendant for exhibition in a particular theatre is generally offensive in the locality on moral, religious, or racial grounds shall be subject to arbitration, and, if the feature shall be found to be thus offensive, an award shall be made cancelling the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of the feature in that theatre.

(6) Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to arbitration. Reasonable clearance as to time and area was stipulated and held by the consent decree to be essential to the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. In determining whether a clearance complained of is unreasonable the arbitrator should consider the historical development of clearance in the area, the admission price of the theatres involved; their character, location, and type of entertainment; the rental terms and license fees paid by them; the extent to which they compete for patronage, and all other business considerations except affiliation of the theatres with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres. If the clearance be found unreasonable, the award shall fix the maximum clearance between the theatres involved, which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by a distributor that is party to the arbitration. The award may also fix, subject to the provisions of Section XVII of the consent decree, such maximum clearance under any existing franchise, i.e., a licensing agreement, or a series of licensing agreements, covering more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by the distributor during the [fol. 3663] entire period of the agreement. Nothing contained in this subdivision, nor any award in arbitration, shall restrict the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which it is able to negotiate, nor shall restrict the distributor's right to license any run which it desires to grant, nor to license the exhibition of any special feature under a contract the terms of which, including provisions for clearance, are applicable only thereto.

(7) Controversies arising upon a complaint by an independent exhibitor that a distributor defendant has arbitrarily refused to license its features for exhibition on the run requested by the exhibitor in one of the latter's theatres shall be subject to arbitration, but the making of any award is to be subject to certain specified conditions and no award made shall affect the license to exhibit any features then under license, but only future licenses.

(8) For three years after the entry of the decree, the consenting defendants are to notify the Department of Justice of any legally binding commitment for the acquisition of any theatre or theatres. During such period, each defendant is to report monthly the changes in its theatre position, together with a statement for the reason of such changes. For three years following the entry of the decree, no consenting defendant shall enter upon a general program of expanding its theatre holdings. Nothing shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purposes of its business.

(9) The decree shall not be construed to limit, impair or alter the right of a distributor to license the exhibition of motion pictures, subject to such terms as may be satisfactory to it, (a) in any theatre in which, or in the proceeds of which it is directly or indirectly interested; (b) in any theatre an interest in which of not less than 50% is acquired after the date of the decree and which it owns at the time of such license, and (c) in any theatre of which a company [fol. 3664] in which the defendant owned not less than 42% of the common stock at the date of the decree and at the time of such license acquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license a financial interest of not less than 50%.

(10) Except as otherwise expressly and specifically provided in the decree, nothing therein shall be construed to limit the right of any distributor to select its own customers, bargain with them in accordance with law, or negotiate with or license to or accept any offer from any exhibitor to license its motion pictures or any number thereof, upon such terms and conditions as it deems advisable or to its best interests.

(11) For a period of three years after the entry of the consent decree the plaintiff shall not seek either in this or any other action against the consenting defendants to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition or to dissolve any defendant or any corporation in which it has directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest and which is engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures, or holds directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest in any corporation so engaged, or to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres of any such defendant or of any such corporation, or to require any such defendant, corporation or circuit to divest itself of its interests or any thereof in motion picture theatres in which it had an interest at the time of the entry of the decree.

(12) The method and conditions of and the procedure for the arbitration of controversies and the powers of an appeal board created by the court to entertain appeals from the arbitration tribunal are set forth in the decree.

(13) Jurisdiction is retained by the decree for the purpose of enabling any parties to apply to the court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry for any modification thereof.

Tho three minor defendants and their subsidiaries did not consent to the decree of November 20, 1940, presumably be- [fol. 3665] cause of their opposition to the provisions requiring trade-showing and prohibiting block-booking of groups of more than five films. It was provided that if the plaintiff did not secure the entry of a decree against the three minor defendants before June 1, 1942, the consenting defendants were to be released from those provisions. Such a decree was in fact not entered by the specified date, and accordingly the sections of the decree regarding trade-showing and block-booking have lapsed. Nevertheless, according to the testimony, the consenting defendants have continued to comply with them.[1]

Block-booking—The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period.

Clearance—The period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same picture within a particular area or in specified theatres.

Exchange District—An area in which an office is maintained by a distributor for the purpose of soliciting license agreements for the exhibition of its pictures in theatres situated throughout the territory served by the exchange and for the physical distribution of such films throughout this territory.

Feature—Any motion picture, regardless of topic, the length of of the film of which is in excess of 4000 feet.

Formula Deal—A licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the rental price of a given film is measured for the circuit as a whole by a specified percentage of the picture's national gross.

Franchise—A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

Independent—A producer, distributor, or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendant in this action or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant.

Master Agreement—A licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal," covering the exhibition of films in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit.

Motion Picture Season—A one-year period beginning about September 1 of each year.

[fol. 3666] Counsel for the five major defendants and their subsidiaries contend that the consent decree has, in some respects at least, the effect of a final judgment which may not be modified. But we cannot see how such a position is consistent with the language of Section XXIII (d), which permits "* * * any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of the decree for any modification thereof." That period has expired, and therefore everything relating to rights under and remedies for violation of the Sherman Act is, therefore, open for consideration, even as between consenting parties; and certainly nothing has hitherto been decided which affected the non-consenting parties. It would seem to follow that we cannot bind any parties to subject themselves to the arbitration system or the board of appeals set up in aid of it without their consent, even though we may regard it as desirable that such a system, in view of its demonstrated usefulness, should be continued in aid of the decree which we propose to direct.

The evidence has established various infractions of the Sherman Act on the part of each of the defendants which we shall proceed to discuss.

Price-fixing

The defendants who have granted moving picture licenses have fixed minimum admission prices which the exhibitor agrees to charge irrespective of whether it is to pay a flat rental or a percentage of the theatre receipts. It is said that these minimum admission prices are in general only those currently charged by the exhibitors and that they are placed in the licenses in order to assure the distributor of a mini-[fol. 3667] mum revenue when it licenses upon a percent-

Road-show—A public exhibition of a motion picture in a limited number of theatres, in advance of its general release, at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in the areas where they are located.

Runs—The successive exhibitions of a motion picture in a given area, first-run being the first exhibition in that area, second-run being the next subsequent, and so on.

Trade-showing—A private exhibition of a film prior to its release for public exhibition, as required by Section III of the consent decree.

age basis, and also to assure a continuation of the conditions which moved it to grant a given run to the exhibitor.[2] Whatever the reason, the various licensing defendants have agreed with their licensees to a system which determines minimum admission prices in all theatres where motion pictures licensed by them are exhibited. In this way are controlled the prices to be charged for most of the motion pictures exhibited either by the defendants, or by independents, within the United States. That the eight defendants distribute most of the features is evident from the record. For example, during the 1943-44 season the eight defendants distributed about 77.6% of all features nationally distributed except "westerns" and low cost productions, and even if the latter inferior and non-competitive pictures are included, they distributed 65.5%. See Plaintiff's Exh. 426; Record p. 2400. The control of distribution closely resembles that appearing in Goldman Theatres, Inc., v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738, 744-5 (C. C. A. 3), where the court said:

> "Defendants control the production and distribution of more than 80% of feature pictures in this country, and no exhibitor can successfully operate without access to defendants' product."[3]

The licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors. Such combinations we hold to be forbidden by the Sherman Act. [fol. 3668] The exhibits submitted in this case contain

[2] That the distributor-defendants have more than merely a passive interest, as they claim, in the maintenance of specified minimum prices is shown by their inclusion in the licenses of provisions for severe penalties if less than those prices are charged. Some licenses provide that if the schedule of minimum prices is violated, all existing licenses of the distributor for that theatre may be cancelled at the option of the distributor; other licenses provide that the particular license may be cancelled or that the exhibitor's clearance over subsequent runs be greatly reduced. See Plaintiff's exhs. 275-290.

[3] The defendants in the Goldman case were substantially the same as those here, except the Universal Corporation was there eliminated by agreement.

numerous express agreements between the various distributing defendants and their licensees stating the minimum admission prices which licensees are required to maintain in showing the distributors' pictures in the areas concerned. The agreements are not only between the distributor-defendants and other defendants owning theatres, but also between the distributor-defendants and independent theatre owners. A correlation of these agreements shows that in many instances the minimum prices set forth in the license agreements by the various defendants are in substantial conformity. Indeed, it is conceded in the joint brief filed on behalf of Loew's, Paramount, Warner, RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox that the admission prices included in licenses of the various distributor-defendants are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitors. At pages 31-2 of the joint brief it is stated:

> "The testimony shows that it is the general practice of all the distributors, whether dealing with independent exhibitors or affiliated ones, to include a provision in the license agreement that the exhibitor shall not charge less than a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the particular picture or pictures licensed. * * * The minimum admission price included in the license is not one which the distributor dictates, but is the usual admission price currently charged by the exhibitor. (R. 433, 718, 968, 999, 1382-3). It is the practice of exhibitors to charge the same scale of admission prices over a period of time and not to change them according to whose pictures are being exhibited or according to any fluctuations in the type of picture."

A similar statement is made at page 18 of the brief of Columbia, and the brief of United Artists and Universal appears to argue on the same assumption at pages 24-39.

It does not seem important whether the distributor was the more controlling factor in determining the minimum admission prices. Whether it was such a factor or merely [fol. 3669] acceded to the customary prices of the exhibitors, in either event there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both distributors and exhibitors were involved. But it is plain that the distributor did more than accede to existing price schedules.[4] The licenses required them to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction, and the evidence shows that the distributors in the case of exceptional features, where not satisfied with current prices, would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised.[5] Moreover, the distribu- [fol. 3670] tors, when licensing on a percentage basis, were interested in the prices charged and even when licensing for a flat rental were interested in admission prices to be charged for subsequent runs which they might license on a percentage basis. Likewise all of the five major defendants had a definite interest in keeping

"Q. Well, does that (the admission price) fix his right to a particular run or to clearance? A. It would have an influence upon the run and clearance, yes sir."

* * * * * *

"Q. Why would you be interested in the minimum admission price or the admission price charged by the exhibitor in connection with determining what run you would negotiate for? A. Because the admission price that he charges determines the film rental that I can earn for my pictures." Record pp. 718-9.

See also testimony of Kupper in charge of distribution organization of RKO. Record p. 1084.

"Q. Are there occasional instances of special attractions where there is a negotiation as to a higher admission price with the distributor? A. That has come up on several occasions. In the case of the picture 'Woodrow Wilson', and several other pictures, they have been released by the distributors as road show attractions, and in those cases the distributors insisted upon road show prices, and it was the option of the purchaser, or the theatre, to buy or not to buy those pictures at those prices; but if he expected to play the picture at that time, he would have to charge such admission price.

up prices in any given territory in which they owned theatres, and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing their films to independent exhibitors in those areas. Even if the licenses were at a flat rate, a failure to require their licensees to maintain fixed prices would leave them free by lowering the current charge to decrease through competition the income in the licensors' own theatres in the neighborhood. The whole system presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas.

The similarity of specified minimum prices prescribed for the same theatres in the distributor-defendants' contracts of license is shown by the following table collated from exhibits in evidence.[6] The exhibits used to prepare

"Q. And if he was not willing to advance his admission price to meet the distributor's terms, he had the opportunity to play this picture on regular run, is that right? A. At a later date, that is correct.

"Q. Is the provision for that minimum admission price included not only in license contracts for first-run exhibition but also for subsequent-run exhibition? A. Yes, I think it applies in all cases.

"Q. Is it included in license contracts for percentage pictures and also for flat rental pictures? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where the admission price is included for subsequent-run exhibition, does your answer with respect to who determines the admission price apply to that as well? A. That is correct. But, of course, it is reasonable to assume, to understand, that in setting our admission prices, we do not do that on an arbitrary basis because it is reasonable to expect that the larger theatres playing the first-runs would get the maximum price for the protection of the distributor and the producer. And in the secondary houses the prices are less.

"Q. That is, generally speaking, the first-run houses charge a higher price than subsequent-run, and then the prices step down among the runs? A. That is correct." Record p. 1000.

admission price given included or excluded taxes. When this information was given in the exhibits, it is stated in the table as "tax incl.", or "tax excl." The word "none" is used to mean that though a license was in evidence, no admission price was specifically stated in the contract, either through inadvertence or on the understanding that the admission prices currently being charged or contained in previous licenses would be continued. Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1211. The symbol "x" is used to indicate that no license of that distributor for that particular theatre was in evidence.

It is apparent from the foregoing that there was great similarity and in many cases identity in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatre in the licenses of all the defendants. Where there was a marked difference in price, as for example in the admissions specified by RKO, Columbia and Universal, in a theatre in Charleston, South Carolina, it is likely to have been due to the showing of a picture of a different class from the others, or upon a different run.

Such uniformity of action spells a deliberately unlawful system, the existence of which is not dispelled by the testimony of interested witnesses that one distributor does not know what another distributor is doing; and there can, in [fol. 3673] our opinion, be no reasonable inference that the defendants are not all planning to fix minimum prices to which their licensees must adhere. See Record p. 1322.

In addition, several of the exhibits disclose operating agreements between the five distributor-defendants who are also theatre owners, or between them and independent theatre owners in which joint operation of the theatres covered by the agreements is provided and minimum admission prices to be charged are either stated therein, or are to be jointly determined by other means. Apparently those particular price-fixing agreements do not involve the three minor defendants or their subsidiaries. For example, in Plaintiff's Exh. 220 there are agreements between subsidiaries of Loew's and Warner, covering the period of May 5, 1938 to August 31, 1947, according to which the admission prices for three theatres in Pittsburgh—two of Warner and one of Loew's—are to be fixed by a joint committee. In Plaintiff's Exh. 218, an agreement between Warner and Paramount provides that from March 1, 1936, to August 31, 1953, two theatres previously operated by Warner, and one theatre previously operated by Paramount in Hammond, Indiana, should be managed by Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation and the then present scale of admission prices maintained. By other agreements in Plaintiff's Exh. 219, RKO and Warner provided for joint operation from August 27, 1937, to August 31, 1950, of five theatres in Cleveland—three of RKO and two of Warner—for which minimum prices are to be determined by a joint operating committee. See also, e.g., Plaintiff's Exh. 229 (Warner and independent); Exh. 213 (Loew's and independents); Exh. 202

(RKO and independent); Exhs. 226, 226a (Paramount, Warner, and independent); Exh. 223 (Warner and independent); Exh. 386 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exhs. 238, 239 (Fox and independents); Exh. 387 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exh. 206 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 221 (Warner and Paramount); Exh. 209 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 205 (Paramount and inde-[fol. 3674] pendent). These agreements show the express intent of the major defendants to maintain prices at artificial levels.

As further evidence of a conspiracy among the distributors to fix prices, we find master agreements and franchises between various of the defendants in their capacities as distributors and various of the defendants in their capacities as exhibitors. These contracts stipulate minimum admission prices often for dozens of theatres owned by an exhibitor-defendant in a particular area of the United States. Loew's as distributor, for example, fixed minimum prices for nearly all of Paramount's 133 theatres in Florida in an agreement covering the 1943-44 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (11). In the Chicago area Loew's again as distributor specified prices in a single agreement for upwards of 50 theatres owned by a Paramount subsidiary, Balaban & Katz Corporation. Plaintiff's Exhs. 250, 173. United Artists as distributor also specified prices for the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago for the 1941-42 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 369 (6). Similarly, Loew's specified prices for the entire Warner circuit of theatres for the 1943-44 season, Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (8-10, 21-2, 30, 32, 35, 38, 48); for the same season United Artists specified prices for five RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 274; Paramount for seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 240; Loew's for the same seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 248; Warner for forty or more RKO theatres in Greater New York, Plaintiff's Exh. 126; Loew's for six Fox theatres in Los Angeles County, Plaintiff's Exh. 249; Warner for subsequent run Paramount theatres in Detroit and Birmingham, Michigan, Plaintiff's Exh. 244.

A master agreement between United Artists as distributor and Fox as exhibitor for the season 1938-39 covered distribution of pictures of five independent producers in Fox theatre circuits in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Denver, and other cities, all on a percentage basis. It contained the following clause:

> "Where pictures are licensed on a percentage rental basis the scale of admission prices to be not less [fol. 3675] than the scale of admission prices charged to view pictures of comparable quality exhibited by the exhibitor and distributed by distributors other than United Artists."

The foregoing quotation shows an acquiescence of United Artists in admission prices fixed by any other distributor and an adherence to those prices in its own licenses. Plaintiff's Exh. 199.

A franchise agreement between Universal Corporation as distributor and Interstate Theatres, Inc., and Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., for the seasons 1941-44 is similar. Plaintiff's Exh. 261. In each of the two latter companies Paramount had a 50% interest. The franchise covered pictures distributed by Universal to the theatres of the two licensees and contained the ordinary provisions for penalties if minimum admission prices were not maintained. See note 2 supra. While no minimum prices were specified in the agreements it is not really questioned that in such circumstances the current prices were implied as part of the contract. See Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1210-11.

There is also in evidence a franchise agreement between Columbia Pictures Corporation as distributor and Marcus Loew Booking Agency, a Loew's subsidiary, for the seasons 1944-46 covering pictures distributed to Loew's Metropolitan New York Circuit. Plaintiff's Exh. 471. Minimum admission prices were not specified, but, as in other cases, were implied.

Licenses granted by one defendant to another for exhibition in only one theatre, while less striking evidence of conspiracy than the above master agreements and franchises, disclose the same inter-relationship among the defendants. Each of the five major defendants as a theatre-owning exhibitor has been licensed by the other seven defendants as distributors to exhibit the pictures of the latter at specified minimum prices. RKO, for example, as a theatre-owner, has been granted licenses with price restrictions by the other defendant-distributors. [fol. 3676] In turn, RKO, being itself a distributor, has granted similar licenses to the other four exhibiting defendants. We think that RKO, Loew's, Warner, Paramount and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum prices specified, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and that Columbia, Universal and United Artists, in requiring the maintenance of minimum prices in their licenses granted to these exhibitor-defendants, have participated in that system.

It is a reasonable inference from all the foregoing that the distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices. Such a conspiracy is per se a violation of the Sherman Act. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265.

Moreover irrespective of the conspiracy among distributors to which we have referred, each distributor-defendant has illegally combined with its licensees, for in agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's picture in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby created. That the combination is made up of a sum [fol. 3677] of separate licensing contracts, individually executed, does not affect its illegality, for tacit participation in a general scheme to control prices is as violative of the Sherman Act as an explicit agreement. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v.

Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3).

This practice of stipulating minimum admission prices in the contracts of license is illegal in another respect. The differentials in price set by a distributor in licensing a particular picture in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area are calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see the picture in the prior-run theatres where they will pay higher prices than in the subsequent runs. The reason for this is that if 10,000 people of a city's population are ultimately to see the picture—no matter on what run—the gross revenue to be realized from their patronage is increased relatively to the increase in numbers seeing it in the higher-priced prior-run theatres. In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible. This, we believe, to be in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, at least when the distributor's own theatres are not exhibiting its picture on a prior-run and it is to theatres other than its own that it attempts to give a monopoly.

It is argued that the practice of minimum admission price-fixing is permitted under the Copyright Act. But that act has never been held to sanction a conspiracy among licensors and licensees artificially to maintain prices. We do not question that the Copyright Act permits the owner of a copyrighted picture to exhibit it in its own theatres upon such terms as it sees fit, nor need we now decide whether a copyright owner may lawfully fix admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor for the exhibition of its film, if other licensors and exhibitors are not in contemplation. Interstate Cir- [fol. 3678] cuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; cf. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476. As other licensors and exhibitors are always in contemplation, so far as we can see, the question would appear academic.

This does not contravene the rule announced in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, for there a license to only a single licensee—the Westinghouse Company—was involved, and, therefore, no conspiracy which sought to amplify the rights of the licensor under the Patent Act. The other question involved in that case was whether a patentee might lawfully require its bona fide agents to maintain minimum prices in selling the former's patented articles. The court held that it could. There is no claim here, however, that the exhibitors as licensees under the distributors' copyrights are agents in any sense, and we do not see that such a claim could be made. In any event, United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, involved facts closely analogous to those here and affords ample basis for our decision.

Some argument has been made that the defendants' fixing of minimum admission prices is exempted from operation of the Sherman Act by the Miller-Tydings Amendment to that act, 50 Stat. 693 (1937), 15 U. S. C. A. § 1 (1940). The amendment pertains, however, only to "contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity", and the undisputed evidence is that the distributors merely grant licenses to the exhibitors for exhibition of their films and that title to none of their films at any time passes to the exhibitors. Furthermore, the distributor-defendants have engaged in a conspiracy, and the amendment explicitly states that despite its other provisions, contracts or agreements between "persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other" to establish or maintain minimum prices remain illegal. United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241.

The foregoing holding, that the defendants have all engaged in unlawful price-fixing does not prevent the distributors from continuing their present methods of deter-[fol. 3679] mining film rentals; they may measure their compensation by stated sums, by a given percentage of a particular theatre's receipts, by a combination of these two, or by any other appropriate means. What is held to be violative of the Sherman Act is not the distributors' devices for measuring rentals, but their fixing of minimum admission prices which automatically regulates the ability of one licensee to compete against another for the patron's dollar and tends to increase such prices as well as profits from exhibition.

If the exhibitors are not restrained by the distributors in the right to fix their own prices, there will be an opportunity for the exhibitors, whether they be affiliates or independents, to compete with one another. This is because one exhibitor by lowering admission prices will be able to compete with other exhibitors in obtaining patrons for his theatre—a competition which may well benefit both exhibitors and the public paying the admission fees.

Clearance and Run

Among provisions common to the licensing contracts of all the distributor-defendants are those by which the licensor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit a certain motion picture before a specified number of days after the last date of the exhibition therein licensed. This so-called period of "clearance" or "protection" is stated in the various licenses in differing ways: in terms of a given period between designated runs, as for example in the Chicago area, Plaintiff's Exh. 369, see Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. — (February 25, 1946), and as in Washington and New York, Plaintiff's Exhibits 244, 471; in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres, as "20 days over 30¢ theatres, 28 days over 25¢ theatres," Plaintiff's Exhibits 57, 173, 178, 189; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres, Plaintiff's Exhibits 94, 181, 242, 253, 259; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified [fol. 3680] areas or towns. Plaintiff's Exhibits 126, 175, 182, 182A, 183, 194, 244, 250, 255, 470, 476; in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 417; or in terms of combinations of these formulae.

It appears to be plaintiff's contention that clearance practices inherently operate to produce unreasonable restrictions of competition among theatres and are therefore per se violative of the Sherman Act. With this we do not agree, for it seems to us that a grant of clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration, affords a fair protection to the interests of the licensee without unreasonably interfering with the interests of the public. At common law a vendor of income-producing property may validly covenant with his purchaser not to compete for a given time or within a given area so long as the restrictions are reasonably necessary to protect the value of the property purchased. Cincinnati, Portsmouth, Big Sandy and Pomeroy Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179; see Rogers v. Parry, 2 Cro. 326 (K. B. 1613); United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 6). It is true that licenses of property rather than sales are here concerned and that the distributors covenant not only not to exhibit the films themselves, but also not to license them to others. Nevertheless, we believe these are not differences which affect the applicability of the common-law rule to the present case, for licenses between one distributor and one exhibitor with reasonable clearance provisions do not, in our opinion, involve anything unlawful. Such provisions are no more than safeguards against concurrent or subsequent licenses in the same area until the exhibitor whose theatre is involved has had a chance to exhibit the pictures licensed without invasion by a subsequent exhibitor at a lower price. It seems nothing more than an adoption of the common law rule to restrict subsequent exhibitions for a reasonable time within a reasonable area. While clearance may indirectly affect admission prices, it does not fix them and is, we believe, a reasonable restraint permitted by the Sherman [fol. 3681] Act. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106; Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830, affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4); see United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436.

The costs of each block and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800. Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger, high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs with a reasonable protection for the earlier runs is adopted in the way of clearance.

In Section VIII of the Consent Decree, moreover, there is the explicit statement to which all parties, including the plaintiff, consented.

> "It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures."

While, as previously stated, we do not deem ourselves bound by any provision of the consent decree if we now find that it violates the Sherman Act, the forcefulness of the phrasing of this sentence indicates the proved utility of clearance practices in the movie industry and also their apparent necessity for a reasonable conduct of the business. Indeed, it is practically conceded that exhibitors would find extremely perilous the acceptance of licenses for the exhibition of films without assurance by the distributor that a nearby competitor would not be licensed to show the same film either at the same time or so soon thereafter that the exhibitor's expected income—perhaps on the basis of which he agreed to the specified rental—would be greatly diminished. Moreover, we understand the plaintiff to concede that the licensor may license its pictures for different successive dates. A reasonable clearance is in practical effect much the same. Either a license for successive dates, or one [fol. 3682] providing for clearance, permits the public to see the picture in a later-exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates.

Several courts have previously considered the validity of clearances under the Sherman Act and have concluded that in the absence of an unconscionably long time or too extensive an area embraced by the clearance, or a conspiracy of distributors to fix clearances, there was nothing of itself illegal in their use. Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830 (D. Md.), affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4), and unreported cases therein cited; Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., 120 F. 2d 891 (C. C. A. 7). We find the reasoning of these cases persuasive.

It is true that in some instances large theatre circuits by use of their great film-buying power have been able to negotiate successfully with the distributor-defendants for grants of unreasonable clearances or unjustified prior runs for their theatres. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. — (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3); United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 229 (W. D. N. Y.). While we cannot find sufficient evidence to support an inference that the major defendants here, though controlling some of the largest circuits of theatres in the country and thus possessing potential weapons of great strength, have either collectively or severally entered upon a general policy of discriminating against independents in their grants of clearances, yet they have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents and perhaps even of affiliates. The decision of such controversies as may arise over clearances should be left to local suits in the area concerned, or, even more appropriately, to litigation before an Arbitration Board composed of men versed in the complexities of this industry.

In determining the reasonabl-ness of the specific clearances which may come before these tribunals, they should [fol. 3683] consider whether the clearance has been set so as to favor affiliates or control the admission prices of the theatres involved. A distributor will naturally tend to grant a subsequent run to and clearance over a theatre for which the owner of his own volition sets a low admission price, for the distributor will be inclined to seek out the higher priced theatres first where the revenue is likely to be greater and consequently in case of licenses on a percentage basis where a percentage share will be higher. This, however, would seem the inevitable result of the competition for the distributor's films from theatres which are the larger or better equipped, and for which higher admission prices may therefore be charged by their operators. Such competition the lower priced theatres must be prepared to meet, or else be content with subsequent runs and [illegible]unts of clearance over them. The temptation to the [illegible]outor to use clearance grants to force a theatre to raise its prices and thus to qualify for prior runs having less clearance over it, and [illegible]ore clearance over competitors are nevertheless obvious and the courts or arbitration board should guard that this is not done. Clearance should be granted on the basis of theatre conditions which the exhibitor creates, not the distributor. The line to be drawn is indeed indistinct, but its existence is no less real.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the following factors should be taken into consideration and accorded the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The admission prices, as set by the exhibitors, of the theatres involved;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.:

[fol. 3684] (4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The foregoing has been directed to the validity of clearance provisions resulting from separate negotiations between individual distributors and exhibitors in free and open competition with other distributors and exhibitors, and, as stated, we believe their reasonable use to be lawful. It is here claimed by plaintiff, however, that the distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they license their films and that the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system. This we find to be the case and hold to be in violation of the Sherman Act.

The following testimony warrants the inference that the defendants, as we found to be the case in the fixing of admission prices, have acted in concert in their grants of run and clearance. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager and vice-president of Loew's, testified that the field managers determine whether a theatre shall be licensed to exhibit on a first or on a subsequent run, that the clearance of a given theatre is more or less historical, except for that of new theatres, and that there has been very little change in clearance over a period of years. Record pp. 542-3. Prior to 1943-44 Loew's license agreements provided that the clearance granted therein should apply to any theatre thereafter opened. Record p. 556.

[fol. 3685] Charles M. Reagan, vice-president of Paramount in charge of sales, stated that once clearance is agreed upon, it remains the same unless either exhibitor or distributor wants to change it. Record pp. 710-11. There is a difference between a distributor's and an exhibitor's interest in the period of clearance granted. The distributor wants to get the most possible in film rental from all the runs, the exhibitor to get as much clearance over a succeeding run as possible, because he has no interest in any succeeding run. The distributor, however, has a definite interest. Record p. 710. Clearances as granted apply to all pictures regardless of their quality. Record p. 715.

Martin J. Mullen, vice-president of M & P Theatres, a managing corporation which operates a group of New England theatres affiliated with Paramount, said that clearance is generally negotiated each time a license contract is made, but is actually carried along from year to year and generally understood when once established; that originally, before his time, clearance was established as a result of individual negotiations and followed along the same lines as they were with some changes. Record p. 968. All defendants grant the same clearance to the same theatre. Record p. 977.

John J. Friedl, president and general manager of the Minnesota Amusement Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Paramount, said that he generally got from the various distributors the same clearance for the particular theatre for which he is negotiating; that while clearance is negotiated with each license, it generally remains the same, and the same clearance is granted by distributor-defendants and non-defendants alike, Record p. 1003; that clearance is pretty well established, and it is definitely followed in all cases. Record p. 1013.

Morton J. Thalheimer, an independent theatre exhibitor in Richmond, Virginia, called as a witness by Fox, testified that clearance was in effect in Richmond when he first went into business, and it seemed perfectly normal and natural that it should remain that way; that it protects his first-run [fol. 3686] against his own sub-runs and against his competitors' sub-runs. Record p. 1384. To his knowledge, the system of clearances had existed in Richmond for over nineteen years, during which time there had not been any change. Record p. 1401.

Harold J. Fitzgerald, president of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc., operating sixty-six motion picture theatres in Wisconsin and Michigan, a wholly owned subsidiary of the defendant National Theatres Corporation, testified by affidavit that the situation with respect to the licensing of films, and the runs and clearance involved, were much the same in 1928 as they are today, Record p. 1973; that licensing arrangements were vital to distributor and exhibitor and that clearance obviously had a definite effect upon the capacity of his corporation to secure patronage at its top admission price. If Fox-Wisconsin undertook to pay a distributor the film rental based upon a high percentage of gross, it would be interested in clearance over any neighborhood theatre which the distributor might license on a competing subsequent run. Generally negotiations as to clearance do not take place with respect to each block of pictures licensed because once a fair and reasonable clearance has been determined by the distributor and exhibitor it tends to become fixed, and ordinarily will be the same in a series of contracts in the absence of any unchanged circumstances and conditions. Record p. 1983.

Benjamin Kalmenson, sales manager of Warner Bros. Distributors Corporation, testified that clearances have been pretty well set through the country for a great many years, and are "acquiesced in by exhibitors, producers, independents, affiliates and everybody, until there has grown up a kind of a system of clearance." Record p. 1506.

Robert Mochrie, general sales manager of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., stated upon his examination that RKO in determining the length of clearance between theatres, takes into consideration the amount of clearance which in its opinion will yield it the largest revenue, taking all theatres [fol. 3687] into account as a whole and subject to a clearance condition that has built itself up in the city over a period of time. In negotiating licenses, there is frequent occasion to give consideration to the existing clearance between theatres, but they do not consider it anew each time because the factors which determined it originally at some past time remain stable from year to year. He said there are no general or frequent instances in his practice of clearances different in some particular city from those granted by a co-defendant. He usually knows what clearances other distributors are granting. His customer usually tells him what clearance he wants, which is what he is getting from other distributors. He has no agreements with other distributors that he will adopt the same clearance, and his explanation as to why in some instances the clearances granted by RKO to a prior run theatre is the same as a clearance granted by one or more other distributors serving the same theatre is that clearance has been the outgrowth in time between those two theatres, and the exhibitor buys such products on such a clearance basis and offers the witness the same. Record pp. 1714-5.

Abraham Montague, general sales manager of Columbia, testified that in negotiating deals, the "clearance is something we usually find when we arrive there, and we usually negotiate our deal within the clearance we find"; that it would be impracticable and impossible to set up new clearance. Record p. 1268. His company keeps a record of clearances in the community. Record p. 1347. Where his company grants clearance to one theatre over another, it usually follows the pattern set by clearance that is given by other major distributors as well as those which are not majors. He usually does not make any independent determination of whether the clearance is reasonable or unreasonable. He takes it as he finds it, and finding it in most cases standardized, his company does not feel that it is strong enough to change it. Record pp. 1376-7.

Paul N. Lazarus, manager of the contract department of United Artists, testified that clearances are "generally [fol. 3688] understood, and they follow along their established custom." Record p. 1440. For testimony of other witnesses to the same effect as the foregoing, see Record pp. 2012, 2043, 2049, 2086, 2110-11.

The fixed character of clearances and the uniformity of the distributor-defendants' practice with reference thereto are shown by the exhibits, as well as the testimony. Many of the franchises, master agreements, and so-called "formula deals" which are in evidence provide that clearances shall be the same as those in effect on the date of the agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 419A (RKO and independent); 419B (RKO and Paramount); 241 (Paramount and Fox); 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 473 (RKO and Universal); 245 (Warner and Fox); 251 (Fox and Paramount); 254 (Fox and RKO). Some of the agreements establish clearances for more than a season. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 181 (3 years, Loew's and Warner); 187 (3 years, Loew's and Fox); 249 (9 years, Loew's and Fox); (3 years, Warner and Universal). Others provide that the clearance is to be no less favorable to the exhibitor than that which had been granted by the distributor for the previous season or in the preceding agreement. See Plain-tiff's Exhibits 265, 472, (Columbia and Fox); 190 (RKO and Fox); 199, 272A 383, (United Artists and Fox).

In some of the agreements, the clearance therein stated was also to be granted to all theatres which the exhibitor-party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 266, 266A (Columbia and Warner); 471 (Columbia and Loew's); 192 (Fox and Warner). Moreover, the license forms for 1936-7 of Paramount, Fox, Loew's, Warner, RKO, Columbia and Universal, and for 1943-44 of Paramount, Warner, Columbia and Universal, each contain a provision identical or similar to the following:

> "If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres [fol. 3689] in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre, then unless otherwise provided in the schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened." See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275, 277, 279-81, 283-6, 289-90.

It is clear that the purpose of these two types of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened, not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive factors normally entering into such a determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor-party to the agreement.

Much that has been said about clearances is applicable also to runs; the two are practically alike. Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent run, and the practice of clearances is so closely allied with that of run as to make comment on the one applicable to the other.

Rodgers, of Loew's, testified that a run usually remains static for a given theatre. Record p. 421, and he determines what runs shall be "offered" to an exhibitor. Record p. 418. The size of the theatre does not necessarily determine whether it is satisfactory for operation on a first run. Record p. 566.

Reagan, of Paramount, said that negotiations with an exhibitor are "usually conducted on the basis of a particular run." In the case of a new theatre, the distributor usually considers whether it wants to do business on the run the theatre would like.[7] In the New York area, second runs are sold by him only to Loew's and RKO. Record pp. 815-16.

[fol. 3690] The evidence we have referred to shows that both independent distributors and exhibitors when attempting to bargain with the defendants have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatres or with theatres to which the latter have licensed their pictures. Under the circumstances disclosed in the record there has been no fair chance for either the present or any future licensees to change a situation sanctioned by such effective control and general acquiescence as have obtained. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures; Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U.S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman

[7] "Q. And some negotiations are conducted on the basis of a first-run of a product, some second, some subsequent? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: You mean the particular run is established before the negotiation with the exhibitor?

The Witness: Sometimes it generally is established, although that has been the result of years of experience that we have had in negotiating with our customers.

Judge Bright: How about a new theatre or new exhibitor?

The Witness: There is nothing established there, and we consider all the factors there and make a decision on whether we want to do business with him on the run that we would like to have.

Q. Now, how is the matter of terms upon which Paramount films will be licensed, determined? A. Determined by negotiations based upon experience we have had with the particular theatre with whom we are negotiating." Record, p. 693.

Q. You do not mean that each time there is a negotiation the whole question of run is opened up again? A. No, it is not.

Q. The policy on which the theatre is operated has usually been established over a long period of time? A. Yes.

v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3); Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, 60 F. 2d 538 (D. C. Neb.). The only way competition may be introduced into the present system of fixed prices, clearances, and runs is to require a defendant when licensing its pictures to other exhibitors to make each picture available at a minimum fixed or percentage rental and (if clearance is desired) to grant a reasonable clearance and run. When so offered, the licensor shall grant the license for the desired run to the highest bidder if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment to present the picture to advantage. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable the one offering the best terms shall receive the license. Thus price fixing among the licensors or between a licensor and its licensees as well as the non-competitive clearance system may be terminated, [fol. 3691] and the requirements of the Sherman Act, which the present system violates, will be adequately met. The administrative details involved in such changes will require further consideration. We are satisfied that existing arrangements are in derogation of the rights of independent distributors, exhibitors, and the public, and that the proposed changes will tend to benefit them all.

Formula Deals, Master Agreements, and Franchises

Formula deals, certain master agreements, and franchises have tended to restrain trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion picture features and in view of the history and relation to the moving picture business of the various parties to this action have exercised unreasonable restraints. In our opinion these restraints will be obviated or at least sufficiently mitigated by requiring a distributor wishing its pictures to be shown outside of its own theatres to offer to license each picture to all theatres desiring to show it on a particular run and, if the theatres are responsibly owned and otherwise adequate, to grant the desired run to the highest bidder.

Formula deals have been entered into by Paramount and by RKO with independent and affiliated circuits. By such agreements a particular circuit has been licensed to exhibit a certain feature in all its theatres at a specified percentage of the national gross receipts realized from that feature by all theatres in the United States. The circuit may allocate playing time and film rentals among the various theatres as it sees fit. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 419A, 419B. Arrangements whereby all the theatres of a circuit are included in a single agreement, and no opportunity is afforded for other theatre owners to bid for the picture in their several areas, seriously and as we hold unreasonably restrain competition. These formula deals have been negotiated without, so far as we are informed, any competition on the part of independent theatre owners who would labor under [fol. 3692] a great disadvantage in attempting severally to match or outbid the offers of a circuit that was making offers for all of its theatres.

Certain master agreements are open to the same objection as formula deals, for they cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best, and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 196, 251, 267, 270, 270A, 273, 476. These are different from some other master agreements in which there are separate provisions covering the licensing of the picture for each particular theatre. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 182, 182A, 189, 190, 191, 248. These later agreements in effect only combine in one document a number of theatres with proper licenses for each. This may be done if there is an opportunity for exhibitors to bid for the same runs at an offered price.

Franchises which so far as the five major defendants are concerned were forbidden by the consent decree are also objectionable because they cover too long periods (more than one season) and also because they embrace all the pictures released by a given distributor. They necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture theatre by theatre, to the highest bidder.

It is true that a prohibition of formula deals, master agreements and franchises will interfere with certain contracts which have been made in the past but their formation was a restraint upon trade which was unlawful at the time they were made, and therefore should not be continued. We see no reason to hold that the failure to bring in to this suit one of the contracting parties prevents the issue of an injunction forbidding one who is a party to the suit from continuing to carry out an arrangement which causes unlawful restraints. While our decision will not be res judicata as to those not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily and properly bound, and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the questions [fol. 3693] of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce.

In our opinion it follows from the foregoing that provisions in license agreements known as moveovers which give to a licensee the privilege of exhibiting a given picture in a second theatre as a continuation of a run in a first theatre are incompatible with the system we have prescribed of bidding for pictures and runs theatre by theatre. The same would seem to be true of so-called overage-and-underage provisions which are often inserted in licenses to permit an exhibitor owning a number of theatres to apply a deficit in the playing time in one or more others. Under such provisions it is not possible to determine the amount payable for the account of one theatre until the performances in the others have been completed, or practically to apply the bidding system we are establishing. But provisions in licenses for "extended" or "repeat" runs in the same theatre, though apparently criticized by the government, would not seem to be objectionable if reasonably limited in time when other exhibitors are given the opportunity to bid for similar licenses. Likewise, any other license provisions which may be called to our attention that would substantially interfere with the effectiveness of the bidding system would have to be revised and perhaps may have to be specially dealt with in the decree to follow this opinion.

Block-booking and Blind-selling

For many years the distributor-defendants licensed their films in "blocks," or indivisible groups, before they had been actually produced. In such cases the only knowledge prospective exhibitors had of the films which they had contracted for was from a description of each picture by title, plot and players. In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any, though sometimes the exhibitor was given a right of subsequent cancellation for a certain number of pictures. Because of complaints [fol. 3694] of block-booking and blind-selling based upon the supposed unfairness of contracts which often included pictures—the inferior quality of which could not be known—Sections III and IV of the consent decree required the five consenting distributors to trade-show their films before offering them for license and limited the number which might be included in any contract to five. More than one block of five however could be licensed where the contents of any had been trade-shown. While this restriction in the consent decree has now ceased by time limitation, the consenting distributors have continued to observe the restriction. The non-assenting distributors have retained up to the present time their previous methods of licensing in blocks, but have allowed their customers considerable freedom to cancel the license as to a percentage of the pictures contracted for.

The plaintiff argues that the Sherman Act forbids block-booking in toto. This is said to be because it is illegal to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another, and it therefore can make no difference whether the group of films involved in a license be two or forty. In our opinion this contention is sound, and any form of block-booking is illegal by which an exhibitor, in order to obtain a license for one or more films, must accept a license for one or more other films.

A patentee who has granted a license in consideration that the patented invention shall be used by the licensee only with unpatented material furnished by the licensor may not restrain as a contributory infringer one who sells to the licensee like materials for like use. Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680; Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488, 491; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502; Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Corp., 283 U. S. 27; Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458. Moreover, as was said in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670, a decree for an injunction against [fol. 3695] a contributory infringer would sanction both "a misuse of the patent privilege and a violation of the anti-trust laws." The same rule would appear to apply to copyrights and prevent a suit for contributory infringement by a copyright owner who had licensed the printing of his book, only in connection with paper supplied by him, against a third party supplying paper to the licensee in violation of the agreement. See Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent

Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Straus v. Am. Publishers' Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222.

It is true that a copyrighted motion picture when united with another copyrighted picture by block-booking is not tied to an uncopyrighted article. Nevertheless the objections to conditioning the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another are the same, for the result is to give the copyright owner not only the reward which is his due from the licensing of a single copyrighted film, but to extend his monopoly by requiring his licensee to accept one or more other films and to pay royalties therefor as an additional consideration. We cannot see that this differs in principle from requiring the licensee to purchase uncopyrighted articles in connection with the license of a copyright. In either case the copyright owner is obtaining something which the decisions have forbidden as beyond the grant of his limited monopoly. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, 519, argued persuasively that the right of the owner of a patent to keep his device out of use included the right to condition its use. Such a doctrine would contravene the rule we are laying down, but his views were rejected by the majority of the Supreme Court in that decision, as well as in Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490, and have proved to be contrary to a long line of subsequent decisions of that court—indeed to have been supplanted by the general trend of authority ever since the days of Henry v. Dick, 224 U. S. 1.

It may be argued that the common law gives a right to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of [fol. 3696] another—that it is as though the owner of ordinary chattels refused to sell a lot to A unless the latter would purchase in a larger quantity than he desired. The question whether such a contract involving patents or copyrights was good at common law was apparently left open in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 503, and Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Co., 157 U. S. 659, and in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sustained contracts of block-booking.

Block-booking, when the license of any film is conditioned upon taking of other films, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single pictures on their individual merits and adds to the monopoly of a single copyrighted picture that of another copyrighted picture which must be taken and exhibited in order to secure the first. It differs from such a sale of chattels as we have mentioned because it extends a monopoly which the owner of the chattels is not assumed to have. We are not inclined to follow Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152 (C. C. A. 2), for the reason we have given and particularly because of recent decisions of the Supreme Court. As Stone, C. J., said in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 459,—when dealing with the use of one patent to exploit another.

> "• • • It [Ethyl Gasoline Corporation] has chosen to exploit its patents by manufacturing the fluid covered by them and by selling that fluid to refiners for use in the manufacture of motor fuel. Such benefits as result from control over the marketing of the treated fuel by the jobbers accrue primarily to the refiners and indirectly to appellant, only in the enjoyment of its monopoly of the fluid secured under another patent. The licensing conditions are thus not used as a means of stimulating the commercial development and financial returns of the patented invention which is licensed, but for the commercial development of the business of the refiners and the exploitation of a second patent monopoly not embraced in the first. [fol. 3697] The patent monopoly of one invention may no more be enlarged for the exploitation of a monopoly of another, see Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, supra, than for the exploitation of an unpatented article, United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, supra; Carbice Corporation v. American Patents Corp., supra; Leitch Manufacturing Co. v. Barber Co., supra; American Lecithin Co. v. Warfield Co., 105 F. 2d 207, or for the exploitation or promotion of a business not embraced within the patent. Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra, 228-230."

apolis Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680, 684; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 277-8; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 227-230; Stokes & Smith Co. v. Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp., decided by Second Circuit Court of Appeals May 1, 1946.

We however declare illegal only that aspect of block-booking which makes the licensing of one copyright conditional upon an agreement to accept a license of one or more other copyrights. A distributor may license to an exhibitor at one time as many films as the latter wishes to receive, but the distributor may not constitute groups of pictures which it refuses to license separately. The distributor may of course not license his pictures at all, but if he does license them, he must do so severally and, in accordance with the bidding procedure previously indicated, must license them to the exhibitor or exhibitors who are qualified and offer the best terms for the various runs.

Blind-selling does not appear to be as inherently restrictive of competition as block-booking, although it is capable of some abuse. By this practise a distributor could promise a picture of good quality or of a certain type which when produced, might prove to be of poor quality or of another type—a competing distributor meanwhile being unable to [fol. 3698] market its product and in the end losing its outlets for future pictures. The evidence indicates that trade-shows, which are designed to prevent such blind-selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors. Record pp. 1178-9. Accordingly, exhibitors who choose to obtain their films for exhibition in quantities, need to be protected against burdensome agreements by being given an option to reject a certain percentage of their blind-licensed pictures within a reasonable time after they shall have become available for inspection. Such right of rejection has been incorporated in numerous licenses given by the defendants and should be afforded whenever licenses of unproduced films and films not trade-shown are secured by an exhibitor who has made the best competitive bid for them.

The only group licensing we are prepared to sanction is licensing by which the group is not offered on condition that the licensee shall take all the pictures included in it, or none, but in which the pictures are separately priced, and each picture is to be sold to the highest duly qualified bidder. As we have already indicated in discussing formula deals, master agreements, and franchises, the offering of pictures should be theatre by theatre, and if more than one picture is included a license agreement, it will be only because of business convenience and to the extent that each picture so included has received the best bid.

"Pooling" Agreements

It is claimed by plaintiff that the theatre-owning defendants have combined with each other and with independent theatre-owners by "pooling" their theatres through operating agreements, leases, joint stock ownership of theatre-operating corporations, or through joint ownership of theatres in fee. We are asked to determine the validity of these various means of joining interests.

By far the most numerous type of agreement in evidence is that by which given theatres of two or more exhibitors, [fol. 3699] normally in competition with each other, are operated as a unit or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, and by which profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 100, 200, 206, 213, 218, 220-1, 223, 226, 226A, 232. Some of the agreements provide that the parties thereto may not acquire other theatres in the competitive vicinity without first offering them for inclusion in the "pool". See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 201, 205-6, 219.

These operating agreements we hold to be in clear conflict with the Sherman Act, for through them a defendant-exhibitor reduces to a minimum opposition between its own and other theatres in the "pool". Cooperation, rather than competition, characterizes their operation, and in view of the exhibitor-defendants' financial strength, control of first-class film distribution, ownership of concentrated numbers of first-run theatres, and especially their combination to reduce competition in exhibition through systems of price-fixing and clearances, such restraints as these agreements impose upon free commerce in motion pictures are far less than reasonable. The result is to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of films which would flow almost automatically to the theatres in the earnings of which they have a joint interest.

Other forms of operating agreements are between major defendants and independent exhibitors rather than between major defendants, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 97, 118, 208, 238-9, 358, but we are not of the opinion that this renders them legal. The effect is to ally two or more theatres of different ownership into a coalition for the nullification of competition between them and for their more effective competition against theatres not members of the "pool". Even if the parties to such combinations were not major film producers and distributors but were all wholly independent exhibitors, such agreements might often be regarded as beyond the reasonable limits of restraint allowance under [fol. 3700] the Sherman Act. This result is certain when some of the parties are of major statute in the movie industry and have in other ways imposed unlawful restraints upon it, as we have found to be the case upon the record before us.

In certain other cases the operating agreements are accomplished by leases of theatres, the rentals being determined by a stipulated percentage of profits earned by the "pooled" theatres, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 106, 118, 204. This appears to be but another means of carrying out the illegal objection discussed above. While a theatre-owner may of course remove itself from the business of operating theatres by leasing them to anyone it deems fit upon a fixed rental basis, so long as a monopoly in exhibition is not thereby achieved by the lessee, any arrangement whereby one of the exhibitor-defendants in this case allies its theatres with those of a competing exhibitor, independent or affiliated, and yet itself remains in the trade of exhibiting motion pictures by retaining an interest in the profits earned by the allied theatres, is unlawful under the anti-trust acts.

Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, in some cases in conjunction with independents. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 46, 48, 62, 164, 355, 387; RKO's Exhibit 11. As these joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively, we find them illegal for the reasons above stated. Appropriate steps should be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant will own theatres (whether represented by fee, beneficial, or stock interests) jointly with other exhibitor-defendants, regardless of the size of the interests involved. Appropriate steps should also be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant or defendants will jointly own a theatre or stock interest therein with any independent exhibitor, except when a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, which we deem de minimis and only to be treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition. See infra p. 71. This result may be reached in situations like Florida, [fol. 3701] Texas, Minnesota and Michigan by a sale, purchase, or exchange of interests in jointly-owned theatres so long as the transaction sought to be achieved will not result in an unreasonable restraint of competition in exhibition within the particular competitive area. To this end the court will control the manner in which rearrangements of these joint interests are effected.

It seems impracticable to do more than lay down general rules as to the foregoing situations. If further details are required to cover specific provisions of the various pooling agreements, they should be set forth in the decree to be hereafter entered.

It should be added that in our opinion there can be no objection to operating, booking, or film buying through agents, provided the agent is not also acting in respect to theatres owned by other exhibitors, independent or affiliated, and provided that in case the agent is buying films for its principal he does this through the bidding system, theatre by theatre.

Discrimination among Licensees

The amended and supplemental complaint alleges that in licensing films each of the distributor-defendants has discriminated against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. Of the various contract provisions by which such discriminations are said to have been accomplished, plaintiff sets forth the following in its brief: suspending the terms of a given contract, if a circuit theatre remains closed for more than eight weeks, and reinstating it without liability upon reopening, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 265-6, 383-4, 472-3; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films, Plaintiff's Exhibits 172, 177, 192, 263-6, 383-4, 472; allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played, Plaintiff's Exhibits 183-4, 190, 199, 242, 245, 247, 258-9, 262, 264-6, 271-2a, 274, 382-3, 473; granting moveovers and extended runs, Plaintiff's Exhibits 182-2a, 199, 260, 262, 265, 267, 274, 383-4, 474, 476; granting roadshow privileges, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187-8, 199, 232, 265-6, 383-4, 472; allow[fol. 3702] ing overage and underage, Plaintiff's Exhibits 190-1, 194, 259, 265-6, 383; granting unlimited playing time, Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 267, 269, 471; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent producers, Plaintiff's Exhibits 173-4, 181, 190-1, 194, 199, 262, 265-6, 272a, 383-4, 395, 470-2; granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes Plaintiff's Exhibits 187, 232, 259, 265, 472-3; and especially, discriminating in film rentals, clearances, and minimum admission prices, see Plaintiff's Brief pp. 56-70, 75-85.

These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Record pp. 1432-3; Columbia's Exhibit 9a; Universal's Exhibit 2; Plaintiff's Exhibits 195, 198, 259, 261, 265-6a, 384, 396, 470-3. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. Record pp. 1432-3; Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-90. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors in violation of the anti-trust laws. It seems unnecessary to decide whether the record before us justifies a reasonable inference that the distributor-defendants have conspired among themselves to discriminate among their licensees, for each discriminating contract constitutes a conspiracy between the licensee and licensor. Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

The defendants argue that these privileges granted to the circuits flow from their negotiations with the individual theatre-owners rather than from a standard policy of discrimination deliberately pursued by them. This is perhaps true, but the result is the same whether the bargaining power of the large exhibitors forces upon the distributors a discriminatory policy, or whether the latter voluntarily carry such a policy into effect. Acquiescence in an unreasonable [fol. 3703] restraint, as well as the creation of such a restraint, violates the Sherman Act. Under the bidding system we are requiring such discriminations would appear impossible. Those provisions which are not compatible with the operation of this system, or which are inherently unreasonable, such as a provision for clearance between theatres where there is no substantial competition, will no longer be includible in licenses, as mentioned elsewhere, but otherwise the bidders will compete for licensing contracts on a parity, in that the same offer will be made to all prospective exhibitors in a community.

The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices. They have perhaps done so, but we are without sufficient knowledge of the many factors entering into the determination of these provisions such as the character of specific communities, the nature of the different theatre appointments, of the patrons, operating policies, locations, and responsibilities of operators. In the absence of such facts, we are unable to infer that the distributor-defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard, but any discriminations in the other ways noted above in favor of affiliated licensee or licensees connected with independent circuits as against individual independents must be enjoined, and we believe will not exist in future licenses under the bidding system for which we are providing.

Divestiture of Theatres

We cannot accede to the prayer of the plaintiff that the major defendants should be divested of their theatres in order that no distributor of motion pictures shall be an exhibitor. Undoubtedly such a step, while not ipso facto preventing price-fixing agreements or unreasonable clearance would terminate the government's most urgent objections to [fol. 3704] the present methods of conducting the motion picture business, but it would also withdraw the defendant-distributors from competition in the exhibition field and at the same time would create a new set of theatre owners which would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted in view of the latter's demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded as in general the largest and best equipped theatres. We think that the opportunity of independents to compete under the bidding system for pictures and runs renders such a harsh remedy as complete divestiture unnecessary, at least until the efficiency of that system has been tried and found wanting.

In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137 or 17.35 per cent. Of the latter, Paramount or its subsidiaries owned independently of the other defendants 1395—a little less than half, or about 7.72 per cent; Warner 501, or about 2.77 per cent; Loew's 133, or about .74 per cent; Fox 636, or about 3.52 per cent, and RKO 109, or about .60 per cent. There were 361 theatres, or about 2.00 per cent, in which two or more of these defendants had joint interests, whether held directly or indirectly through stock ownership in the same corporation or through a lease or operating agreement. This tabulation excludes theatres connected with one or more of the defendants through film-buying or management contracts or through corporations in which a defendant owns an indirect minority stock interest. It includes all theatres in which each defendant otherwise owns a direct or indirect interest of any amount. See Loew's Exhibit 2; RKO's Exhibit 11; Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 12-3, 22, 47-8, 64, 87-8, 97, 100, 118-20, 156-64, 360.

It would seem unlikely that theatre owners having aggregate interests of little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States are exercising such a monopoly of the motion picture business that they should be subjected to the [fol. 3705] drastic remedy of complete divestiture in order to effect a proper degree of free competition. It is only in certain localities, and not in general, that an ownership even of first-run theatres approximating monopoly exists. Under the proposed system, the only theatres the competition of which in exhibition even Paramount—the largest owner—would in anywise control are the 7.72 per cent which it now owns. Each of the other four major defendants would control a far smaller percentage of the theatres. Even in places like Philadelphia and Cincinnati, where Warner and RKO have owned all the first-run theatres, their theatre interest cannot properly be aggregated to establish a conspiracy in restraining exhibitions, for in such localities there would seem to be nothing to prevent other persons from building theatres of a similar type if the market for the distribution of films should be opened to the highest bidder and the builder of a new theatre could compete with the other theatre owners in obtaining pictures for exhibition in the theatre he had built. The only pictures that the present sole exhibitors in such localities could control would be their own, which they can always exhibit freely in their own theatres.

In about 60 per cent of the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000 on which the government mainly relies to prove its case, there are independent first-run theatres in competition with those of the major defendants except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices we have criticized[8]. In about 91 per cent of these cities there is competition in first runs between independents and some of the major defendants or among the major defendants themselves [fol. 3706] except so far as it may be restricted by the above trade practices.[9] If the bidding system we propose to set up, minimum admission prices in licenses eliminated, and the other restrictive agreements which we have discussed terminated, it is our opinion that adequate competition would exist. Indeed in all of the 92 cities, even where there is no present competition in first runs there is always competition in some run.

Moreover, there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416 (C. C. A. 2). The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. They can only be restrained from the unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block-booking, and other things we have criticized.

[8] According to Loew's Exhibit 13 and RKO's Exhibit 11, there are independent first-run theatres in all but the following 38 cities: Albany, Bridgeport, Charlotte, Chattanooga, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dallas, Dayton, Des Moines, Elizabeth, Erie, Flint, Fort Worth, Grand Rapids, Houston, Jersey City, Kansas City, Mo., Knoxville, Lowell, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Newark, New Haven, Norfolk, Omaha, Paterson, Peoria, Rochester, San Antonio, Scranton, South Bend, Syracuse, Toledo, Wichita, Worcester, Yonkers.

[9] Upon the termination of "pooling" agreements a major defendant may control all of the first-run theatres in only the following 8 cities: Charlotte, Chattanooga, Cincinnati, Erie, Knoxville, Peoria, South Bend, Wichita. Loew's Exhibit 13; RKO's Exhibit 11.

If in certain localities there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from "inherent vice" on the part of these defendants. Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, and it takes greater proof than that each of them possessed great financial strength, many theatres, and exhibited the greater number of first-runs to deprive it of the ordinary rights of ownership. Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have [fol. 3707] found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures. Record p. 1062.

As was said by the expediting court in United States v. The Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, (E. D. Pa., 1945):

> "If there is only one store in a town at which every one trades, that fact does not itself constitute a monopoly in the legal sense. It is only when the merchant maintains his position by devices which compel everyone to trade with him exclusively that the situation becomes legally objectionable."

In the case at bar, as we have reiterated, many of the objections are to the trade practices we have alluded to, and not to the ownership of theatres either by the major defendants or by their wholly-owned subsidiaries. If those theatres were all owned by entirely independent corporations the distributing-producing defendants, if not in competition in the distribution of their films, would control competition in the exhibition business by in the aggregate control-ing the distribution of most of the best pictures in the United States and imposing restrictions upon their use. The root of the difficulties we have discovered lies not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five major defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited. That such would be the case seems amply demonstrated by the decisions where [fol. 3708] powerful independent circuits were involved. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208. If the objectionable trade practices were eliminated, the only difference between such an assumed situation in which the defendants owned no theatres and the present would be the inability of the major defendants to play their own pictures in their own theatres. The percentage of pictures on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatres would be relatively small and in nowise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition.[10]

There has however been restraint of competition in exhibition by the five major defendants through ownership of theatres jointly with one another or if their interests be more than five per cent even where jointly held with inde- [fol. 3709] pendents which, in our opinion, calls for a divesti-ture of such interests whether such partial interest is in fee or through stock ownership or otherwise.

There is no evidence that in a city such as Cincinnati, in which a major defendant owns all of the first-run theatres, other exhibitors, affiliated or unaffiliated, have been prevented from also owning theatres for exhibition on first-run and there consequently is no monopoly in the legal sense, see United States v. Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, and no reason for directing a divestiture. But when theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. In such case their joining of interests is illegal under the anti-trust laws for the reason that the major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently. Such an elimination of competition is unreasonable in view of the defendant's being a powerful factor in the industry capable of exerting vast influence to its ends, and of the methods it has employed to restrain and control normal competition in distributing and exhibiting motion pictures through price-fixing, system of clearances, block-booking, pooling and the other practices we have alluded to.

We find such joint interests in a great number of theatres, a summary of which is set forth below,[11] and hold that they

The decree or subsequent orders to be entered in conformity with this opinion will control sales or exchanges of such fractional interests for the purpose of restoring or creating a reasonable competition in the areas in question.

General Considerations

It may be said that such restrictions in commercial dealings as we would impose will interfere with the right of a copyright owner to choose his customers or contract for the disposition of his own property. The answer is that no such absolute right exists where its exercise will involve an extension of a copyright monopoly or an unreasonable interference with competition in the distribution and exhibition [fol. 3711] of moving pictures. A system of fixed admission prices, clearances and block booking is so restrictive of competition in its tendency that it should be modified to comply with the terms of the Sherman Act. The modifications in practices we have indicated will relieve conditions that have grown up through the years. Indeed the practices are defended on the ground that business convenience and long usage ought to sanction them. But, in spite of their long continuance, we cannot escape the conclusion that in various ways the system stifles competition and violates the law and that business convenience and loyalty to former customers afford a lame excuse for depriving others of rights to compete and for perpetuating unreasonable restrictions. The remedy we are giving against the infractions is certainly no more drastic in effect than the one the Supreme Court granted in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, nor more severe than the one it imposed in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. The defendants have built up great business enterprises in a very popular field. Yet they have carried on practices we have found unduly restrictive of interstate commerce and even though we do not suggest that they any more than "those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell" have been "sinners above all men", yet measures should be taken to restore the moving picture business to a condition of competition that will benefit both competitors and the general public and to abate practices that are unlawful.

It is argued that the steps we have proposed would involve an interference with commercial practices that are generally acceptable and a hazardous attempt on the part of judges—unfamiliar with the details of business—to remodel its delicate adjustments which have hitherto provided the public with what is a new and great art. But we see nothing ruinous in the remedies proposed. Disputes which may arise under the bidding system are likely to relate to questions whether the bidder has a theatre adequate for the run for which he bids, whether the clearance requested is reasonable as regards his own theatre and those of others, and [fol. 3712] similar matters generally involved in comparing bids. If the defendants will consent to an arbitration system for the determination of such disputes of the kind that has worked so well under the consent decree, they will facilitate the adjustment of most of the differences that are likely to occur, with a large saving of time and money as compared with separate court actions.

A suit in the district court for violation of the Sherman Act is doubtless an awkward way to cure such ills as have arisen, but it is perhaps the best remedy now available to the government. There surely are evils in the existing system, and the Sherman Act provides a mode of correction which is lawfully invoked. At all events, that which is written is written, and is controlling on us.

It does not follow from the foregoing that we should wholly break up the exhibition business of each of the major defendants even though a "root and branch" decree might be legally possible. Such total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned, and, if we are right in our analysis of the situation, we should still have to give relief against price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements, and other agreements we have held invalid. The relief proposed we believe should suffice, while total divestiture would be damaging to the public as well as to the defendants and not accomplish any useful purpose at the present time.

The Decree

A decree is granted in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion to be settled on ten days' notice. It should provide for the dismissal of all claims asserted by the plaintiff against any of the defendants which act only as producers of motion pictures and for the dismissal of claims against any other defendants based on their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

[fol. 3713] The granting of licenses by any of the defendant-distributors which fix minimum prices for admission to theatres either of the defendants or of any other exhibitor should be enjoined in which such minimum admission prices are fixed by the parties either in writing, or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event, or in any other wise.

The defendants should be enjoined from concertedly agreeing to maintain a system of clearances as among themselves or with other exhibitors, and no clearances should be granted against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving a license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Existing clearances in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensees in the runs awarded to them shall be invalid pro tanto. In determining what is a reasonable clearance the following factors should be taken into consideration:

(1) The admission prices of the theatres involved, as set by the exhibitor;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and [fol. 3714] (7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The further performance by any of the defendants of existing formula deals, master agreements to the extent that we have previously found them invalid, or franchises should be enjoined, and the defendants should also be enjoined from entering into or carrying out any similar agreements in the future.

Defendants owning a legal or equitable interest in theatres of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries may exhibit pictures of their own or of their wholly owned subsidiaries in such theatres upon such terms as to admission prices and clearances and on such runs as they see fit.

No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least ninety-five per cent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered. The license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatever. Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. No contracts for exhibition shall be entered into, or if already outstanding shall be performed, in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon an agreement of the licensee to take a license of one or more other features, but licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade-shown prior to the granting of a license [fol. 3715] for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject a percentage of such pictures not trade-shown prior to the granting of the license to be fixed by the decree. But that right to reject any picture must be exercised within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it.

The defendants shall be enjoined from entering into or continuing to perform existing pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition, are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. They shall also be enjoined from making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in the competitive area without first offering them for inclusion in the pool. The making or continuance of leases of theatres under which defendants lease any of their theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the competitive area in return for a share of the profits shall be enjoined.

Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership of an interest in any theatre, whether in fee or in stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant-exhibitor. Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership, jointly with an independent, of an interest in any theatre, greater than five per cent, unless such defendant's interest is ninety-five per cent or more; and where the interest of such defendant is more than five per cent and less than ninety-five per cent, such joint interests shall be dissolved either by a sale to, or by a purchase from, such co-owner or co-owners. Rearrangements of such joint interests with an independent, if by purchase, shall, however, be subject to the direction of this court so that their effectuation may promote competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. Where a defendant owns a ninety-five or greater per cent interest in any theatre, such theatre may [fol. 3716] be considered as its own so far as this opinion and the decree to be entered hereon are concerned. Each of the defendants shall be enjoined from expanding its theatre holdings except for the purpose of acquiring a co-owner's interest in jointly owned theatres, and this only in cases where the court shall permit such acquisition, instead of requiring an outright sale of the undivided interest of the defendant in question. The foregoing provision as to divestiture of partial interests in theatres shall apply both to interests held in fee and beneficially and to those represented by shares of stock. But it shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the later case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor.

Each defendant shall be enjoined from operating, booking or film-buying through any agent who is also acting in such matters for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliated.

The decree shall also provide for arbitration of disputes as to bids, clearances, runs, and any other subjects appropriate for arbitration in respect to all parties who may consent to the creation of such tribunals for adjustment of such disputes. It shall also provide for an appeal board generally similar to the one created by the consent decree as to any parties consenting thereto. It shall make such disposition of the provisions of the existing consent decree signed November 30, 1940, as may be necessary in view of the foregoing opinion.

In order to secure compliance with the decree to be entered, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall on the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust matters, and on reasonable notice to the defendant or defendants affected, be permitted reasonable access to all books and papers of the defendants and reasonable opportunity to interview their officers or employees, as provided in Section XVIII of the Consent Decree.

[fol. 3717] Proceedings under the decree to be entered shall be stayed pending appeal or for the purpose of enabling the parties to adjust their business without an unfair burden or as practice may require upon such terms as the decree shall provide.

Jurisdiction of this cause shall be retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the decree to apply to the court at any time for such orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

Findings should be proposed by the parties for the assistance of the court, but such proposed findings will form no part of the record.

Augustus N. Hand, U. S. Circuit Judge, Henry W. Goddard, U. S. District Judge, John Bright, U. S. District Judge.

[fol. 3719] Please take notice that on October 1, 1946, or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, the undersigned intervening petitioners will move this Honorable Court for an order permitting them to intervene as parties in the above-entitled action, on and in accordance with the attached Motion for Leave to Intervene and the accompanying pleading designated as "Intervening Petition."

American Theatres Association, Inc., Southern California Theatre Owners Association (and various individual theatre owners named in the attached motion and pleading) by Thurman Arnold, Arnold & Fortas, 821- 15th Street, N. W., Washington 5, D. C.; Paul Williams, General Counsel to Southern California Theatre Owners Association, Attorneys for Intervening Petitioners.

[fol. 3720] IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE

American Theatres Association, Inc.; Southern California Theatre Owners Association; Joseph Moritz; Southern California Amusement Company, Inc.; Exhibitors' Service, Inc.; Lawrence Capitol, Inc.; Bijou Amusement Company and Paul Realty Company; Andy Anderson; Arch and Milas L. Hurley; Raymond and Willard Gervers; Gamble Enterprises, Inc.; and St. Louis Ambassador Theatre, Inc., Eden Theatre Company, St. Louis Missouri Theatre, Inc., and Fanchon & Marco Service Corporation move this Honorable Court for leave to intervene as parties in this action on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated. Intervention is sought as of right under Rule 24(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Their purpose in intervening is limited to asserting their defenses as set forth in their proposed pleading, a copy of which is attached, to the order proposed in the recent opinion of this Court, the effect of which will be to compel them as exhibitors to purchase their supplies of defendants' motion pictures by competitive bidding.

For ground of this motion your petitioners state that they are independent exhibitors and associations of exhibitors engaged in showing motion pictures at theatres throughout the country. They will be bound by the decree as more particularly set forth below and in the annexed pleading. Their interests are at present unrepresented in this action, particularly in relation to the proposed inclusion in the decree of a requirement that the defendants' motion pictures be sold to the "highest responsible bidder."

American Theatres Association, Inc., is a mutual improvement corporation, incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia, having as its objective the fostering [fol. 3721] of the common interest of those engaged in the motion picture exhibition industry in the United States, and similar purposes and objects. It has an extensive membership throughout the country (over 6000 theatres) consisting of exhibitors of all types; independent exhibitors in large cities; independent exhibitors in small towns; independent exhibitors in competition with the majors; and exhibitors having no competition. Its membership, scattered throughout the country comprehends chains of various sizes and, exhibitors of every type and class, having the most various arrangements with the majors.

The policy of the above named petitioner has been to impose no restrictive limitations on membership. Every kind of theatre is eligible to join. For that reason a small minority of its members are corporations wholly owned by the defendants in this suit. The interests of such members are already represented by counsel for the defendants. It is obvious that the interests of these members are not the same as the interests of independent exhibitors. Consequently said petitioner does not intend to and will not represent the interests of such members in this matter, and it is understood that no position which the Association takes in the course of this proceeding is in any way representative of the views which members owned by the defendant may entertain. Likewise the Association does not represent in this matter one other of its members which is not a defendant in this action, namely, the Skouras Theatres Corporation, which operates theatres in the metropolitan area of New York City. No part of the expense of prosecuting this petition will be borne by members of the Association owned by defendants in this suit or by Skouras Theatres Corporation, nor will their support, advice, or counsel be sought. The members which the Association represents in the prosecution of this motion comprise the great bulk of its membership.

The Association's membership also includes other associations of exhibitors. Its membership is in every respect representative. The membership has urged intervention in this proceeding and the Association has widely publicized its intention to bring the plight with which exhibitors are threatened by the proposed decree to the Court's attention. The act of intervention has been approved by the directors of the Association at a special meeting and the overwhelming body of the members of the Association of all types have expressed approval of this action.[1]

[1] There have been some individual dissents, e. g. a vice president of the Association operating a large chain has expressed confidence that he has sufficient economic power to be able to survive under a competitive bidding system and that he is in favor of it. The Film Daily, September —, 1946.

The Southern California Theatre Owners Association is a non-profit corporation incorporated under the laws of California and has in its membership exhibitors of all types, including owners of single theatres and of large chains and independent theatre owners and owners having various [fol. 3722] degrees of affiliation with the majors. A decision to seek intervention has been made by the Board of Directors of the Association. This action has been widely publicized, and no dissent has been voiced by any of its members. The Association has directed coordination of its activities in this endeavor with the American Theatres Association, with which it is affiliated.

Joseph Moritz is the owner and operator of the Victor Theatre located at 1718 South Main Street, Los Angeles, California. He operates an independent, subsequent-run theatre in competition with all the theatres located in downtown Los Angeles. In the same competitive area are theatres owned by the majors, i.e., Fox West Coast, operating both first run and subsequent run and various other independent theatres operating first run and subsequent run.

The Southern California Amusement Company, Inc., is a California corporation with offices at 1824 South Vermont Avenue, Los Angeles 6, California. It owns or operates approximately 40 theatres in Southern California, about half of which are located in the city of Los Angeles. The theatres it operates in Los Angeles are all subsequent run theatres. The other theatres which it operates are located in various rural communities in Southern California and it has no first runs except in small towns which are subject to clearance of larger cities.

Exhibitors Service, Inc., is a California corporation which operates a complete theatre service including buying, booking and administration. It acts as the buying agent for a number of small independent theatres in the smaller towns in Southern California, Arizona and Nevada. Some of the theatres it represents have opposition from theatres affiliated with defendants and from independent circuits, whereas others have independent opposition or no opposition.

Lawrence Capitol, Inc. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Massachusetts. Its capital stock is owned by Jeremiah Campopiano and Jean C. Campopiano. It operates an independent first run theatre, the Capitol Theatre, at 139 Common Street, Lawrence, Massachusetts, in competition with four theatres affiliated with one of the defendants herein, two of which are first run houses, one a move-over first run house, and one a second run house, and all of which are larger than your petitioner's Capitol Theatre.

Bijou Amusement Company and Paul Realty Company are corporations organized and existing under the laws of the state of Rhode Island. Their capital stock is owned by Mr. Fred J. Greene and Mr. Raymond F. Murphy of Woonsocket, R. I. They operate two independent theatres: the Bijou Theatre, located at 273 Main Street, in Woonsocket, R. I. and the New Park Theatre, located at 37 N. [fol. 3723] Main Street, Woonsocket, R. I. Both of these theatres are first run houses. They compete with a first run theatre affiliated with one of the defendants in this action, which has a larger seating capacity than either of your petitioner's theatres.

Andy Anderson is the owner and operator of the following independent theatres: the Kentucky Theatre, with a seating capacity of 425, located in Hartford, Ky., the population of which is approximately 1,800 people; the Majestic Theatre, with a seating capacity of 265, located in Beaver Dam, Ky., the population of which is approximately 1,600 people; the Lincoln Theatre, with a seating capacity of 375, located in Hodgenville, Ky., the population of which is approximately 2,000 people. The aforementioned theatres are the only theatres in their respective towns, and all of them play first run and repeat run pictures.

Arch and Miles L. Hurley are individuals doing business under the name and style of Princess-Odeon Theatres who operate two independent theatres in the city of Tucumcari, New Mexico. These are the only theatres in Tucumcari, the population of which is less than 7,500 people.

Raymond Gervers and Willard Gervers are co-partners who own and operate the Uptown theatre at 18 E. McMicken Street and the Fairview Theatre at 333 Warner Street in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio. These are independent subsequent run theatres which are not in competition with any theatres affiliated with the defendants in this action, their competition consisting of five other independent theatres.

Gamble Enterprises, Inc. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Oregon, operated by Ted R. Gamble, who, with his wife, owns its capital stock. It operates two independent subsequent run theatres, the Capitol and the Bagdad, in Portland, Oregon, both of which compete with theatres affiliated with one of the defendants in this action.

St. Louis Ambassador Theatre, Inc., Eden Theatre Company, St. Louis Missouri Theatre, Inc., and Fanchon & Marco Service Corporation are interrelated corporations organized and existing under the laws of the State of Missouri. They own and operate a group of independent first and subsequent run theatres in the city of St. Louis, Missouri. Their first run theatres are in competition with theatres affiliated with one of the defendants. Their subsequent run theatres compete with other independent subsequent run theatres.

Your petitioners seek to intervene for the sole purpose of being heard in this Court and on appeal in respect of the direction in the Court's opinion that the relief to be prescribed in the decree should include a provision to the following effect:

> [fol. 3724] "No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least 95 percent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered." (Emphasis supplied.)

Your petitioners desire to intervene because if it is signed and entered the decree of this Court requiring the granting of licenses to the "highest responsible bidder" will drastically affect their access to the films necessary to operate their theatres and the values of their property. It will likewise impair the competitive positions which many of these theatres hold in the industry.

Your petitioners are entitled to intervene in these proceedings as of right, because otherwise they will be bound by a decree in the framing of which they will not have been represented and the effect of which upon their interests, as vital as those of the major producers, will not have been adequately presented to the Court.

All the requirements of Rule 24(a) have been complied with.

A. Your petitioners' application for leave to intervene is timely.

The application was filed promptly after your petitioners had notice of the proposed prescription of competitive bidding. It is presented before the entry of the decree and in advance of the institution of appellate proceedings.

So far as your petitioners are able to ascertain, no such relief as "auction bidding" was ever prayed for by the Government either in its numerous pleadings or its various briefs. Rather, its final brief urged only divestiture and injunctive relief. Neither did the defendants at any time suggest or propose such a system. Not until the final oral arguments on the merits was there any reference to such a mechanism for the distribution of motion pictures. Even then discussion was limited to the most casual colloquy; there was no attempt to define competitive bidding, to elaborate arrangements for its operation, to discover how well or poorly it served the interests of exhibitors variously situated or of the public, or to explore its incidence upon other parties to the industry. And your petitioners' first knowledge that "auction bidding" was under serious consideration as a mode of relief came only with this Court's opinion of June 11, 1946. Your petitioners have moved for permission to intervene as parties as promptly after that date as it was possible to act. It took time to discover what was involved in that section of the decree and to assess the consequences of so novel an arrangement upon the [fol. 3725] fortunes of types of exhibitors who are very differently situated. And, after the somewhat protracted process of finding a common mind among exhibitors whose unlike arrangements with the majors fall only into a quite intricate pattern, it has taken time to translate the conclusions which have been reached into the necessary legal papers.

B. Your petitioners have a direct, specific and vital interest in the provision of the proposed decree for the exclusive sale of motion pictures (except to a "95 per cent subsidiary" of the distributor) to the "highest responsible bidder."

A motion picture theatre requires continuous availability of film in order to operate. The defendants in this case produce and distribute the great bulk of all motion picture product and almost all quality product. Regulation of the terms on which almost all films may be licensed is, of course, regulation of the terms on which the exhibitors can buy. Consequently the decree requiring the defendants to license their pictures by competitive bidding is a direct regulation of the entire business of the exhibitors.

The proposal for competitive bidding will create a revolution in the business of all exhibitors. The proposal has been the central topic of discussion in the industry in recent months. Almost every exhibitor has expressed himself forcefully on the subject. The overwhelming majority of exhibitors are convinced that the system of competitive bidding will reinforce and strengthen the monopoly power of the major distributors and will so injure the independent exhibitors as to force many of them out of business, lead to their classification as lower run houses, or force them to become satellites of the majors. Even the strongest independent circuits will have difficulty facing the buying power of the majors under a competitive bidding system, and only the most optimistic face the prospect with anything but despair.

The exhibitors are the intended beneficiaries of the suit. It is to protect them against oppression by the majors that the present action is being prosecuted, and this is recognized by the Court's decree. Yet it is the almost unanimous judgment of the exhibitors that the proposed remedy will effect no constructive change in the situation. It will in fact aggravate the very troubles it was designed to cure. Your petitioners desire to present to this Court, and to the Supreme Court if necessary, the reasons why they believe competitive bidding will have these effects under the pattern of the motion picture industry. It is for that purpose that the present intervention is sought.

Whatever may be said of the right of the exhibitors as intended beneficiaries to control the course of the litigation at earlier stages, it is clear that at the present time the opinion of the court proposes an immediate imposition upon them of a system of business operation which their experi-[fol. 3726] ence indicates will be disastrous. Under the circumstances the immediate interest of the exhibitors is clear, and their right to be heard through representative organizations and individuals is essential to prevent the imposition of a system of regulation upon them without the opportunity to urge their case.

C. The interests of the applicants are now or may be inadequately represented.

It cannot be said now that independent exhibitors are adequately represented by the Attorney General, as was said earlier while the concern of the case was to establish monopolistic and restrictive practices on the part of the majors. That matter is now finished business. At this stage the concern of the case is to contrive a remedy for the wrongs which have been found. That remedy, set down in the decree, vitally affects the interests of various classes of exhibitors. These varied interests, and the incidence of the proposed "competitive bidding" have never been presented to the Court. In the absence of such concrete presentation, the Court can only frame its decree in the light of the way in which competitive bidding might generally be expected to work. But the motion picture industry is a distinctive industry. The pictures are leased, not sold; there is neither a standardized product nor a standard by which product can be measured. An auction market, without a standard unit, is hard to visualize. It is an argument on this subject, with concrete illustrations which it is the very purpose of this intervention to elaborate. Thus, even if at one stage, the Attorney General can be said to have represented the exhibitors, it is clear at this point, because his views on competitive bidding are diverse from theirs, that he no longer does so.

As has been indicated above exhibitors of all classes are almost unanimously opposed to the requirement of competitive bidding. The Government, on the other hand, has indicated no disposition to oppose it. Indeed during the final oral arguments on the merits Mr. Wright, government counsel, himself advanced the suggestion that competitive bidding might be proper. He stated specifically, "I see no reason why they [motion pictures] should not be sold competitively . . . I do not see why they should not go on the auction block." In the light of this statement, there can be no question that if the Government is proposing to represent the applicants' interests, its representation is not only inadequate but will also prove misleading.

Certainly no other party, whether in industry or within the Government, can even claim to represent the interest of exhibitors. Consequently, the petitioning exhibitors and others similarly situated face the very real prospect that the Government will ignore the incidence of competitive bidding upon the posture of various classes of exhibitors [fol. 3727] and will direct its attention to other matters of much less concern to exhibitors. Furthermore exhibitors have no assurance that the Government will not drop the matter without exhausting appellate proceedings to reverse any decree which may be instituted to compel competitive bidding. Representation must be either by representatives of one's own choosing or else by persons whose own situation impels them to serve the interests in question. While the suit was in trial the exhibitor might be regarded as only incidentally involved—at that time representation by the Attorney General might be adequate. However, when relief of the type here contemplated is considered, the exhibitor's interest becomes not only direct but dominant. He can be protected only by representatives of his own choosing.

D. Applicants and those they represent will be bound by a judgment in this action to an extent necessary to require their admission to the proceedings as intervening parties.

It is an undisputable fact that a court decree dictating the sale by auction of defendant's motion pictures directly governs your applicants' method of doing business. Almost the entire business of your applicants depends upon obtaining the defendants' product, and such product can be obtained only on the terms upon which this court requires the defendants to sell their product. If, as petitioners believe, competitive bidding will increase the power of the defendants and will accentuate the power of the strong and the weaknesses of the small independent operator, no practical remedy exists except through the admission of your petitioners as parties to this action. For if, as applicants believe, the bidding system will inevitably destroy almost all independents faced with the power of the majors, the proposed decree will in practical effect deprive an independent of relief. For what can be the chances of success in an antitrust suit of an independent driven out of business by the majors as a result of the competitive bidding system when he is faced with a defense that what the majors did was required by the decree of this Court? The exhibitors are convinced that the decree would legalize and extend the exercise of the gigantic power of the majors which otherwise would be illegal. The obstacle the decree would create to full relief is an imposition binding on exhibitors and one which they are entitled to attempt to remove.

E. Intervention at this stage will not hamper or unduly delay the proceedings.

The interests of your petitioners require no more than their representation as parties to the proceedings for the limited purposes of entitling them to be heard on the form of the decree insofar as it relates to competitive bidding and of protecting their right to appeal from an adverse decision solely on that subject. The allowance of this petition will [fol. 3728] not and cannot be used as an occasion to encumber the record with additional evidence or to delay these proceedings. All of the facts on which petitioners' argument will be based are already in the record or else can be found from authoritative statistical compilations or common knowledge within the industry of which the court can take judicial notice. The argument of petitioners will consist of an economic analysis of these facts. It will be presented prior to the convening of this Court on October 21, 1946.

F. Intervention by exhibitors will not be unwieldy.

The fears expressed that intervention would result in great numbers of exhibitors desiring to appear will not materialize in this case. Exhibitors have a right to intervene. However, it is true that they are "so numerous as to make it impracticable to bring them all before the court." See Rule 23, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Under the circumstances the court should permit intervention by such of them "as will fairly insure the adequate representation of all." See id. This task has been performed for the court by the exhibitors themselves. They are organized into associations. The associations have to a large extent cooperated in presenting to the court typical groups and individual exhibitors. American Theatres Association is an organization of the most widely representative character representing exhibitors of all types throughout the country and including in its petition a typical regional association, the Southern California Theatre Owners Association, and individual members of various types. And the individual petitioners who are parties to this motion include independent exhibitors of practically every type and situation.

Wherefore, your petitioners pray this Court to enter an order admitting them as parties to this action for the limited purpose of appearing and of being heard in opposition to the entry of such part of the decree as may require the sale of defendants' motion pictures to "the highest responsible bidder" and to grant your petitioners such other and further relief as to the Court may seem appropriate.

Respectfully submitted, Thurman Arnold, Arnold & Fortas, 821 15th St., N. W., Washington, D. C.; Paul Williams, General Counsel to Southern California Theatre Owners Association, Attorneys for Intervening Petitioners.

INTERVENING PETITION

American Theatres Association, Inc.; Southern California Theatre Owners Association; Joseph Moritz; Southern California Amusement Company, Inc.; Exhibitors' Service, Inc.; Lawrence Capitol, Inc.; Bijou Amusement Company and Paul Realty Company; Andy Anderson; Arch and Milas L. Hurley; Raymond and Willard Gervers; Gamble Enterprises, Inc.; and St. Louis Ambassador Theatre, Inc., Eden Theatre Company, St. Louis Missouri Theatre, Inc., and Fanchon & Marco Service Corporation respectfully represent for a defense or answer to the proposed plan of competitive bidding set out in the court's opinion, that

(1) The above named petitioners are exhibitors of motion pictures not owned by the defendants in this proceeding and associations which appear only on behalf of the majority of their members who are not owned by said defendants.

(2) The plan of competitive bidding will not carry out the purpose of the decree to create competition in the motion picture industry; nor will it provide a mechanism to prevent the domination of that industry by the defendants in this suit, which domination the court found in its opinion.

(3) The defendant-producers and their affiliates have resources available for bidding upon pictures and for the purchase of pictures which far exceed the available resources of independent exhibitors, including your petitioner-exhibitors and the exhibitors represented by your petitioners. Any plan of competitive bidding for pictures approved by the court will enable and authorize defendants and their affiliates to use their superior bargaining power to strengthen their monopolistic position. Accordingly, the basic purpose of the court will be defeated by this provision.

(4) At the same time, your petitioner-exhibitors, exhibitors represented by your petitioners and independent exhibitors generally will be deprived of existing protection [fols. 3730-3735] and benefits under the anti-trust laws without receiving proportionate protection from monopolistic practices from this court's decree. This will result as follows:

(a) The determination of the best competitive bid must necessarily depend not only upon price, but also upon a variety of other factors of uncertain weight, such as the location of the theatre, the reputation and good will of the exhibitor, type of patronage of the exhibitor, clearance, length of run, and the infinite variations of time, place and type of exhibition.

(b) These factors are of such variety, complexity and diverse weight that the judgment as to which is the "highest responsible" bid must necessarily be entrusted to the producer or distributor, within broad and practically meaningless limits.

(c) For such reasons and because of the thousands of individual transactions involved, effective supervision by this court of the performance of its decree with respect to competitive bidding cannot be expected.

(d) Accordingly, competitive bidding, if decreed by this court, will be competitive in name only. In result it will be merely a mechanism of distribution which can and will (1) deprive independent exhibitors of the protection which the antitrust laws now provide against the use by defendants and their affiliates of their superior economic and strategic power to monopolize the market; and (2) legitimatize the domination of the market already condemned by this court.

(5) Your petitioner-exhibitors, exhibitors represented by your petitioners, and all other exhibitors who are not affiliates of defendants will accordingly be irreparably injured if the competitive plan for bidding for motion pictures is made part of the decree.

Wherefore, your petitioners pray that the plan for competitive bidding proposed by the opinion of this court be not promulgated as part of any decree which the court may make.

Respectfully submitted, Thurman Arnold, Arnold & Fortas, 821 15th St., N. W., Washington, D. C.; Paul Williams, General Counsel to Southern California Theatre Owners Association, Attorneys for Intervening Petitioners.

Directions of the Court Sought To Be Eliminated.

1. Under date of June 11, 1946, this Court rendered its opinion in the above entitled action and in said opinion without authority of law, directed that the decree to be entered thereon provide among other things the following:

> "No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least ninety-five per cent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered. The license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatever. Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. No contracts for exhibition shall be entered into, or if already outstanding shall be performed, in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon an agreement of the licensee to take a license of one or more other features, but licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had [fol. 3743] the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade-shown prior to the granting of a license for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject a percentage of such pictures not trade-shown prior to the granting of the license to be fixed by the decree. But that right to reject any picture must be exercised within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it" (66 F. Supp. 323, 358).

Associations Supporting Petition

2. The following associations of exhibitors have the purpose, among others of promoting the interests of exhibitors in the States indicated by their names. Each Association has approved and is supporting this application for leave to intervene.

Name of Associations	Addresses	No. of Theatres	No. of Seats	Percentages of Theatres in Area
M. P. T. O. of Virginia	Richmond	160	110,000	65%
Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, Incorporated	Charlotte	384	220,000	61½%
Texas Theatre Owners, Incorporated	Menard	800	600,000	75%
* Southeastern Theatre Owners Association	Atlanta	900	569,500	100%

* Its area is northern Alabama, eastern Tennessee, Georgia and Florida.

The members of the associations include theatres owned by defendants, but no contributions have been made by any of them to the expense of the intervention or will be accepted by petitioners or said associations; the members also include "Paramount partners" or their theatres, who have made or will make contributions to that expense.

Varied Characteristics of Petitioners

3. Every petitioner is an independent exhibitor, as that term is defined in the opinion. No petitioner is a partner of, or otherwise financially interested in the business of another petitioner. Petitioners include some exhibitors which are not circuits † and some which are circuits. The theatres of petitioners include downtown and neighborhood theatres; some exhibit features first run, some second run, some subsequent run, and some vary their practices as to run. Some exhibit single feature programs, some double feature programs, and some exhibit double feature programs on certain days of the week and single feature programs on other days of the week. Some of the theatres of petitioners are in a city or town where there is no theatre except the theatre or theatres of one petitioner; some are in [fol. 3744] a city or town where there are theatres of competing exhibitors. In one or more cities or towns competing exhibitors include only independent exhibitors; in one or more they include defendants. In one or more cities or towns where there is competition a petitioner is a circuit, and has circuit competition; in one or more no competitor is a circuit; in one or more one exhibitor is a circuit and one is not. Some of the first-run theatres of petitioners are in the same or a nearby city block with second or subsequent run theatres of their competitors. In these situations the lower admission charges to the second or subsequent run theatres render them unusually competitive with the first-run theatres of petitioners, notwithstanding difference of run.

The seating capacities of the first-run theatres of petitioners vary from 1396 to 270. The seating capacities of their second and subsequent run theatres vary from 1440 to 194. The seating capacities of some of the first-run theatres of defendants which compete with some of petitioners are largely in excess of the seating capacities of the first-run theatres of said petitioners in the same cities or towns. The same is true as to the seating capacities of some of the first-run theatres of independent competitors with one or more of petitioners. But in one or more of those cities and towns a petitioner has more than one first-run theatre and the combined seating capacity of those theatres substantially equals or exceeds the seating capacity of the competitor's theatre.

Conditions Necessary for Profitable Operation by Petitioners

4. In the conduct of their business petitioners have invested substantial amounts of money in theatre buildings and in the equipment, furnishing and decorating of the buildings, and in the building up of goodwill for their theatres by advertisement thereof and by service to the public; they employ numerous theatre managers, film buyers and bookers, general office workers, electricians, projector operators, ticket sellers and takers, ushers, cleaners, and workers in other categories. They buy substantial quantities of supplies; and they pay substantial amounts of property and license taxes to the states and their subdivisions. In order for the business of a petitioner to be operated at a reasonable profit, it is necessary that its theatre or theatres be accessible to its patrons, adequately equipped, furnished and decorated; that the prices of admission be reasonable; that the pictures exhibited shall be of a character to attract the public; that the performers in the features be individuals with large popular followings; that an adequate and continuous flow of suitable pictures be assured; and that the exhibitions be well publicized in advance. The amount paid to the licensors of motion pictures is the largest item of expense of a first-run theatre, and is a substantial item of the expense of every theatre. In order for the business of a petitioner to be operated at a reasonable profit, it is necessary that the amount paid to licensors be reasonable. At least seventy (70%) per centum of all pictures are distributed by one or another of the defendants in this action and become available for exhibition only under license from a defendant. No petitioner can conduct its business profitably without exhibiting pictures licensed by one or more of the defendants.

[fol. 3745] Considerations Other Than Amounts of Film Rental Which Are Material in the Procurement of Licenses

5. In the conduct of the business of petitioners, they have found numerous factors to be materially helpful to an exhibitor in the effort to license features of a distributor for exhibition. The factors include the following: that the exhibitor be willing to agree to pay for the licenses a percentage of its gross receipts from admissions during the periods of the exhibitions; that the exhibitor shall be believed to be wholly honest in his accounting to the distributor. and to maintain complete and accurate box-office records; that the exhibitor be efficient; that the exhibitor shall furnish efficient service to the public in respect of selling and taking of tickets, ushering, projector operation, comfortable seats, cleanliness, rest rooms, and the like; that the exhibitor cooperate with the distributor in the advance exploitation of features, by substantial advertising paid for by the exhibitor, and in particular in exploiting features by appropriate use of publicity material and devices made available by the distributor; that the exhibitor shall not be unreasonable in his requests for adjustments of prices or for cancellations of licenses, or unreliable, unpleasant or unreasonable in the booking and in the other numerous contacts and transactions which are incidental to the execution of the license agreements from the time they are made until they are fully performed.

Certain Advantages of the Present System of Licensing

6. Up to the present time petitioners have had the opportunity to discuss the values of pictures for exhibition by them and to bargain as to the amounts of rental to be charged. Petitioners have been able to procure an adequate and steady flow of features and shorts for exhibition in their theatres under this system, without being required to pay such minimum fixed or percentage rentals therefor as may originally be demanded by the distributors, and without being required to be the highest bidders therefor. Petitioners have not been required to license the pictures theatre by theatre or picture by picture, but have been able to license a picture for exhibition in more than one theatre under one agreement, and to license more than one picture under one agreement. A petitioner which operates more than one theatre on the same run in a particular city or town has been able to license a feature for exhibition in such one of the theatres as he may thereafter select. Some of petitioners have exercised all of these privileges and have found them materially valuable. Each petitioner has also been enabled, subject to his conformity with the conditions mentioned in the preceding paragraph hereof, to have available for exhibition in his theatres, all of the pictures distributed by one or more of the defendants, over a period of years, either under agreements made annually, or under agreements made with respect to individual pictures or with respect to small blocks of pictures.

[fol. 3746] Rental Value of a Feature Varies in Different Localities, and Post-Exhibition Adjustments of Rental Are Often Necessary and Are Made Under Present System

7. Features are very much more favorably regarded by the public, and are very much more popular, in some localities than in other localities. Sometimes the subject of a feature will cause it to be clearly discernible both to the distributor and to potential exhibitors of the feature that it will not be attractive to the public in a particular locality; but as to other features popular in certain localities, there are sharp differences of opinion between the distributors and the potential exhibitors as to whether they will be equally popular, or more or less popular in a particular locality. The result of such differences of opinion is that a distributor of a feature will frequently consider that it is much more valuable to an exhibitor in a particular locality, than the exhibitor considers it to be. Petitioners find themselves frequently in that situation. It is recognized by both exhibitors and distributors that a motion picture, unlike the ordinary marketable commodity, is of uncertain value and that the principal hazard of the business of both is the unpredictability of the public taste. For this reason, and also because it is to the economic interest of the distributors that their outlets operate at a profit, it has been a general practice that when such differences of opinion arise the petitioner will agree to pay the rental demanded by the distributor for the feature, and if the petitioner proves to be correct in his prophecy that the feature will not be attractive to the public in his locality, as evidenced by the gross receipts from its actual exhibition there, the distributor will lower the amount of the rental agreed to be paid, by an equitable amount. In many instances a potential exhibitor among petitioners will agree with a distributor that a feature which has proven attractive to the public elsewhere will prove equally attractive to the public in the locality of that exhibitor. The event will prove that for one reason or another, sometimes made known to the exhibitor by the expression of criticism and opinion by his patrons, and sometimes never known, the public in that locality does not find the feature attractive, and the gross receipts from its exhibition are unexpectedly small. In these situations it has been the general practice of the defendants in their dealings with petitioners to make equitable reductions of rental and they have frequently been made.

The expenses of the operation of a theatre, other than the amount of its expense for film rental are very stable from week to week and month to month. They are not substantially increased when the gross receipts from admission charges are unusually large, nor are they substantially decreased when the gross receipts from admission charges are unusually small. An exhibitor may reasonably pay a larger percentage of his gross receipts, as rental for the pictures exhibited, during a period when the gross receipts are unusually large, than he may reasonably pay during a period when his gross receipts are unusually small, because the larger the gross receipts the smaller is the percentage of them which is represented by the expenses other than film rental, and the larger is the percentage of the gross receipts remaining available for the payment of film rental and for the provision of profit to the exhibitor. While [fol. 3747] adjustments in rentals of pictures which are rented at fixed amounts of rental are made for the reasons above set out, it is especially material to petitioners to have been able to procure such adjustments when the rentals of pictures are a stated percentage of gross receipts. It frequently happens that the licensing agreement between a defendant distributor and a petitioner will provide for the payment by the petitioner to the distributor of a certain stated percentage of the gross receipts of the exhibitor during the period of the exhibition of the picture, provided that such gross receipts shall not exceed a stated amount, but will require the payment of higher percentages of said gross receipts, if the said gross receipts shall exceed said amount to stated extents.

Petitioners operating on a double feature policy ordinarily exhibit one very attractive and one less attractive feature, and naturally pay a larger amount of film rental for the former than for the latter. When a theatre operates on a mixed policy, sometimes exhibiting single feature programs, sometimes double, it is not always known when a picture is licensed that it will be exhibited as a part of a double feature program, and in those situations, if it shall be so exhibited, its rental is frequently reduced in consideration of the gross receipts and the exhibitors' expenses being increased by the exhibition of the other feature.

If petitioners should be precluded from receiving the benefits of the adjustments mentioned in this paragraph, or if they should be precluded from making the "sliding scale" agreements referred to in this paragraph, the business of petitioners would be rendered materially more hazardous, the attractiveness of their programs to the public and their opportunity to make reasonable profits, would be materially lessened.

Booking of Pictures

8. When one of the petitioners shall have licensed a feature for exhibition, only the first one of two agreements essential to its exercise of the exhibition privilege has been accomplished, for the booking of the picture still remains to be done. As elsewhere alleged, in order to operate each of his theatres efficiently, an exhibitor must have a steady flow of features attractive to the public, one of which must be in his hands to be exhibited in each theatre when the exhibition period of another feature has terminated. Feature programs of the theatres of petitioners are changed from once a week to four times a week. Occasionally, a popular feature will be exhibited for a longer period than usual. It may be substantially damaging to an exhibitor to exhibit in a particular theatre (except for a specialized type, as an "action" theatre, in the main exhibiting "westerns" and melodramatic features) successively or at close intervals of time, two or more pictures of the same type; i.e., western, crime, comedy, historical, musical, etc.; or to book for his theatre a feature of a particular type at the same time that a feature of the same type is being exhibited by a competing theatre. Only a portion of the total features licensed for exhibition in a particular theatre are outstanding attractions. It is more profitable to space them among the programs than to have a substantial period of exceptional [fol. 3748] ly attractive programs, followed by a substantial period of mediocre ones. If a theatre is in a city or town other than a key town, a feature should be booked as closely as possible after its run in the nearest key town. When the feature of a program is mediocre, the shorts should be exceptionally entertaining. If a feature is unusally brief, the shorts should be more substantial, in order to have a well balanced program acceptable to the public; and the reverse is true. Features expected to be outstandingly popular with the public should primarily be booked for preferred playing times (as Saturdays, Sundays, or holidays); in many situations it is advisable to book for Sunday a different picture from the one booked for Saturday.

The booking for a theatre consists of arranging for pictures to be exhibited according to the foregoing principles, and efficient booking is essential to the efficient operation of a theatre. As a rule, features are not even theoretically "available" for exhibition at the dates they are licensed, but become theoretically "available" at later dates of which notices are given to licensees. When notice of availability is received, licensees are informed that a limited number of prints is available for use in rotation by the whole number of theatres in the geographical area of the distributors' exchanges in which the theatres are located. This number is invariably far less than the number desired by the exhibitors for immediate exhibition in the theatres of the exchange area. The bookers for the several licensees must then book a print of the feature for each of their various theatres in which it is to be exhibited, i. e., agree with the exchange on the precise date the print is to be received at the theatre and the date of the commencement of its exhibition.

The booker for a theatre maintains a tentative schedule for the exhibition of features therein, at dates when he hopes prints will be available, for a month or two in advance of exhibition dates. The booker is greatly aided in this schedule planning by being able to anticipate that there will become available for exhibition in the theatre, all of the features distributed by those distributors who usually make all their features available for such exhibition. When he finds he is unable to secure a print of a particular feature at the date tentatively scheduled by him, as frequently occurs, he must arrange through the exchange of its distributor, to procure a substitute from among the other features currently under license, or in emergency when none such is available must arrange for the theatre to license another feature suitable and available which can be booked for the desired date. His schedule will be altered from time to time as new features are licensed, or the licenses for the exhibition of features are cancelled because the feature for one reason or another comes to be considered unsuitable for exhibition.

The degree of the booker's efficiency and the consequent degree of success of the operation of his theatre inevitably depends materially upon the ability and personality of the booker and the personal relations existing between him and the personnel at the distributors' exchanges, and the extent to which the booker is thought reasonable, fair, considerate, reliable, courteous, forehanded in his negotia- [fol. 3749] tions and transactions with them. The booking of shorts presents lesser problems than the booking of features, and suitable shorts are less difficult to book than are features, but the efficient booking of shorts is also material to the efficient operation of a theatre. When a booker is responsible to book for more than one theatre, not only does the volume of his duties increase, but the complexity of his duties increases greatly, since a change in his schedule for one theatre often renders necessary or advisable changes in the schedules for others.

Some Disastrous Results of the Auction Selling System

9. The directions by the court with reference to auction selling as set forth in Paragraph 1 above will:

(a) Inflict irreparable damage upon each petitioner by causing him to suffer material losses. Such losses will inevitably accrue to all petitioners from the denial to them of the bargaining processes, and the freedom to contract according to the varied methods as alleged in Paragraph 6 above and the benefits of equitable post-exhibition adjustments of film rentals as alleged in Paragraph 7 above. Material losses to each petitioner will result from the fact that an exhibitor cannot determine at the time of making a bid for the privilege of exhibiting a feature in his theatre, the probable value to him of the license to exhibit the feature without knowing the date at which it will be received by him for exhibition and also knowing what other features will be in his hands for exhibition at that date, and the extent of his obligations to exhibit the latter at that date. Material losses to each petitioner will result from the fact that of the bids made by him, an unpectedly large proportion during particular periods of time will sometimes be unsuccessful. This will cause him to be from time to time, at least for short periods, without any features for exhibition, or else without a sufficient number of attractive ones. The bulk of his expenses must continue undiminished during these periods. Material losses will accrue to each petitioner because an unexpectedly large number of his bids will sometimes be successful during particular periods and he will be over-bought, from time to time, at least for short periods, and will not be able to exhibit all of the purchased pictures in such a manner as to secure an increase of gross receipts sufficient to offset his increase of film rentals. In some instances he will not have enough playing time to enable him to comply with the playing obligations of his license agreements. Material losses will accrue to each petitioner because of his uncertainty at all times as to which of his contemplated or open bids will be successful and which will be unsuccessful. This uncertainty will require him to make bids for an undesired number of pictures of the same type, with the hope that his bids for a desired number, and no more, will be successful, and at the risk that too many or too few bids for pictures of a particular type will be successful, with consequent damage to the attractiveness of his programs. Material damage to each petitioner will accrue from the delay to which he must submit, under the auction selling system, in planning his schedule of programs and in booking and publicizing the programs, due to the uncer- [fol. 3750] tainty as to what pictures will be licensed to him under the auction selling plan and since the offering of a picture by a distributor, the making of bids, the scrutiny of the same, and the giving of notices of the result of each auction, must consume a substantial period of time;

(b) Inflict irreparable damage upon those petitioners which are in competition with exhibitors who operate larger theatres or exhibitors who have larger resources. An exhibitor with a larger theatre than the theatre of his competitor can afford to bid more for each of the outstandingly attractive features which may become available to the successful bidder for exhibition. Even without a larger theatre, a competitor with substantially greater resources can afford to make the highest bids for all the outstanding features and drive out of business the competitor with the smaller resources. Under the present system of licensing as alleged in Paragraphs 6 and 7 hereof, the smaller exhibitor has been able reasonably to compete with the larger one;

(c) Increase the prices of admission paid by the public. The auction selling system will materially increase the cost of operation of theatres because it will materially increase the amount of film rentals.

The auction selling system will materially increase the cost of the operation of theatres because of the material increases in buying expenses which will be imposed upon exhibitors by the adoption of the auction selling system. Since the film rent of an exhibitor is ordinarily his largest item of expense, it is essential that the amounts of his bids for pictures under the proposed decree should be limited to their approximate probable values. He must inform himself as to the probable values to him of all the individual pictures among the entire body of approximately five hundred features, and several times as large a number of shorts, annually distributed, by all distributors. The information must be much more accurate than under the present system with its equitable adjustment practices; must cover all pictures rather than the smaller number which the exhibitor will have playing time to exhibit and which are distributed by the individual distributors from whom under the present system the exhibitor usually licenses pictures; and when an exhibitor operates more than one theatre, the proposed auction selling system will require the forming by him of a separate conclusion as to the probable value of each picture in each separate theatre. In order to secure for one theatre only, the fifty to three hundred features, and the one hundred and fifty to nine hundred shorts, annually required, the exhibitor must make many more bids since only a portion will be successful. The prohibition against bidding at one time for the privilege of exhibiting more than one picture or of exhibiting a picture in more than one theatre or of exhibiting in one theatre to be thereafter designated from a number operated upon the same run in one city or town, will greatly increase the number of required bids to be made by the exhibitor with more than one theatre. The auction system will greatly increase the time and labor required for buying and the necessary qualifications of buyers. The preparation and making of bids by exhibitors; the verifications by un- [fol. 3751] successful bidders of the correctness of the determinations by distributors of successful bidders; correspondence seeking clarifications of offerings and making requested clarifications of bids; the making, filing, indexing and maintenance of records of bidding: all of these will cause large increases in the present buying expenses of exhibitors. All of the increases of the costs of the exhibitors will inevitably be reflected in the long run by equivalent increases in the prices of admission paid by the public;

(d) Render the programs less attractive and amusing to the public by substantially interfering with their planning because, for the reasons set forth in Paragraphs 6, 7 and 8 hereof, under the auction selling system, the exhibitors will not be able effectively to license and book appropriate pictures;

(e) Give rise to a large and an endless stream of controversy and litigation arising out of the questions of due notice of auctions, interpretation of provisions as to run and clearance, whether a particular theatre is of a size, location, and equipment to present a picture to advantage or "upon the terms agreed," "responsibility" of a bidder, interpretation of bids, discrimination among bidders, and the like.

Binding Effect of Judgment.

10. Substantial rights of petitioners are determined by the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Court as set forth in the said opinion. No petitioner can conduct his business profitably without exhibiting pictures licensed by one or more defendants. The entry and enforcement of a decree, containing provisions based upon the directions of the Court set forth in Paragraph 1 hereof, would cause irreparable damage to them and all others similarly situated by the destruction of their goodwill and other property rights, and the disorganization of their business, all as herein set forth.

Adequacy of Representation.

11. Petitioners have caused to be examined the original and the amended and supplemental complaint filed herein, the briefs filed herein, and the oral arguments of counsel. The directions hereinabove set forth in Paragraph 1 hereof were not prayed for in the original or the amended and supplemental complaint, and neither in the said briefs nor in the oral argument of counsel were said directions sought on behalf of any party. The question of whether or not such directions should be made was not in issue at any time between the parties. On the contrary the defendants or some of them opposed such directions, and plaintiff's position as stated by its counsel was that such directions were unnecessary and inadvisable. The Court has not been adequately informed either by evidence or argument as to the effect of said directions upon petitioners or the public or as to the practicability of the same or their efficacy to achieve the desired results.

Petitioners have never been represented adequately or otherwise or permitted to be heard in respect to said directions as set forth in the opinion.

12. The aforesaid opinion containing the directions set forth in Paragraph 1 hereof was rendered without notice to petitioners, or any of them, and without any opportunity being afforded them to be heard in opposition thereto. The directions relating to auction selling came as a complete surprise to petitioners. Following the rendering of the opinion, time was required for its dissemination by the trade papers and by other means among the exhibitors. The exhibitors not being parties to the suit, were not fully conversant therewith, and required further time to study, digest and analyze the effects on their business of the many provisions of the opinion. As they gradually became or were made aware of the harmful effects of the proposed auction selling plan, additional time was required for the crystallization of that opinion, and, because the exhibitors and the associations are widely spread, in organizing to present their objections to auction selling. Upon the completion of the necessary organization, counsel was expeditiously sought, and under the advice of counsel the relevant facts were assembled, all to the end of presenting to this Court at as early a date as possible (so as not unduly to delay the final determination of this matter or to prejudice the rights of the parties or the public) the facts as set forth herein and the legal conclusions arising therefrom, and seeking the relief herein prayed. As a result of this petition being approved and supported by the associations designated in Paragraph 2 and the extreme variation in the characteristics of individual petitioners, as alleged in Paragraph 3, it is believed that there will be presented to the Court by exhibitors only one or two petitions for intervention other than this one.

It is further believed that as the statements in this petition cannot be successfully contraverted, the relief herein sought may be granted without taking further evidence.

Prayers for Relief.

Wherefore, petitioners respectfully pray as follows:

1. That an order be made permitting petitioners to intervene as parties defendant herein for the purposes set forth in this petition;

2. That the opinion of the Court, dated June 11, 1946, be modified so as to exclude therefrom the directions set forth in Paragraph 1 of this petition;

3. That petitioners have such other and further relief in the premises as the Court may deem just and proper.

Plaintiff's Proposed Judgment—October 8, 1946

The Court having rendered its opinion herein on June 11, 1946, having duly considered the proposals of [fol. 3754] the parties as to its findings and judgment and having filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with said opinion wherein certain of the defendants herein were found to have violated Sections 1 and 2 of the act of Congress, approved July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, commonly known as the Sherman Act,

It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

1. The complaint is dismissed as to the defendant Screen Gems, Inc. and the corporation named in the complaint as Universal Pictures Company, Inc., merged during the pendency of this case into the defendant Universal Corporation. The complaint is also dismissed as to the claims made against the remaining defendants herein based upon their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

Each of the defendants,[1] Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation (formerly known as Vitagraph, Inc.); Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Pictures Company, Inc. (formerly known as Universal Corporation); Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation are hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event, or in any other wise.

2. From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances.[2]

3. From granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From granting any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted.

5. From enforcing any existing agreement which grants clearance to any theatre not its own in which a defendant owns a direct or indirect financial interest of more than 5%.

[1] Wherever a defendant is enjoined herein, the injunction shall also apply to its successors such individuals as act on its behalf with respect to the matters enjoined, and to corporations in which it owns a direct or indirect stock interest of 50% or more.

[2] The term "clearance" as used herein means the period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same picture within a particular area or in specified theatres.

6. From further performing any existing franchise [3] to which it is a party and from making any franchises in the future.

[fol. 3756] 7. From further performing any existing formula deal [4] or master agreement [5] to which it is a party, except such agreements as may have been made after the defendant had offered the films licensed to theatres operated in competition with those covered by the agreement in a manner which permitted such theatres to compete on a theatre by theatre basis with the theatres covered by these agreements for the privilege of exhibiting such films, and from making any similar agreements in the future.

8. From performing or entering into any license in which the license to exhibit one feature [6] is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. Licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given,

[3] The term "franchise" as used herein means a licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of agreement.

[4] The term "formula deal" as used herein means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the rental price of a given film is measured for the circuit as a whole by a specified percentage of the picture's national gross.

[5] The term "master agreement" as used herein means a licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal," covering the exhibition of films in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit.

[6] The term "feature" as used herein means any motion picture, regardless of topic, the length of the film of which is in excess of 4000 feet.

by the licensor, the right to reject 25% of such pictures not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release [fol. 3757] within 10 days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it.

9. From licensing any film more than six months in advance of its release.

10. From offering films for license in the future for exhibition in any theatre not its own [7] in any manner except the following:

(a) A license to exhibit each film released for public exhibition shall be offered upon reasonable terms for some run [8] to the operator of each theatre which desires to exhibit it;

(b) Where a run is desired upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, it shall be offered to the competing exhibitors involved having a theater adequate to show the picture upon such a run and granted to the highest responsible bidder, provided that such exclusive run does not unreasonably restrict competition in the area covered.

(c) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any ~~person whatsoever~~;

[fol. 3758] (d) Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture; and

(e) Each license shall specify a date of availability of a print for the run licensed and provide that such run shall commence within 30 days after such availability.

[7] A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre for the purpose of this decree unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of 95% or more, either directly or through subsidiaries.

[8] The term "run" as used herein means one of a succession of exhibitions of a motion picture in a given area, first run being the first exhibition in the area, second run being the next subsequent, etc. Where successive exhibitions occur in different theatres, they shall be regarded as separate runs for the purpose of this decree, even though such theatres may be under a common ownership or management.

11. From combining, conspiring, or agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to eliminate competition among themselves or with others in any manner whatsoever.

III

The defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Loew's Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Proctor Corporation; RKO Midwest Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; and National Theatres, Inc. are hereby enjoined and restrained:

1. From performing or enforcing agreements referred to in paragraphs 5, 6, and 7 of the foregoing Section II hereof to which it may be a party.

2. From making or continuing to perform pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to prearranged percentages.

[fol. 3759] 3. From making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in a competitive area where a pool operates without first offering them for inclusion in the pool.

4. From making or continuing leases of theatres under which it leases any of its theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits.

5. From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or in shares of stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant and from continuing to own or acquiring such an interest in conjunction with an independent [9] where such interest shall be greater than 5%, unless such interest shall be 95% or more. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years The relationships between the defendants and independents which violate this provision shall be dissolved by a sale of the defendants' interest to operators not owned or controlled by any of the defendants herein. In dissolving relationships among defendants which violate this provision, one defendant may acquire the interest of another, if the Court shall first find that such acquisition will promote competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. Each of the defendants shall submit to this Court within 90 days a statement outlining the extent to which it has complied and the manner in which it proposes to comply with this provision, setting forth in detail the names, locations, and general descriptions of the theatres, corporate securities, and beneficial interests of any kind involved, the sales thereof that it has made, and such interests as it proposes to acquire, with a statement of facts regarding each competitive situation involved in such proposed acquisition sufficient to show the probable effect of such acquisition on that situation. Similar reports shall be made quarterly thereafter until this provision shall have been fully complied with. Reasonable notice of such acquisition plans shall be served upon the Attorney General and plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the Court.

6. From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever.

7. From operating, booking, or buying films for any of its theatres through any agent who is also acting in such manner for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliated.

8. From licensing for exhibition in any theatre owned or controlled by it films distributed or produced by another defendant named in this section which is not affiliated with it, for a period commencing one year after the entry of this decree and continuing for a period of not less than ten years. At the conclusion of said period, any party may move to modify this provision in any manner which the facts then appearing to the Court may warrant.

IV

The provisions of the existing consent decree are hereby declared to be of no further force or effect, except insofar as may be necessary to conclude arbitration proceedings [fol. 3761] now pending and to liquidate in an orderly manner the financial obligations of the defendants and the American Arbitration Association, incurred in the establishment of the consent decree arbitration systems. Existing awards and those made pursuant to pending proceedings shall continue to be enforceable to the extent that they may be consistent with the provisions of this decree.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, or correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this decree, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for the company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, [fol. 3762] except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VI

Paragraphs 8, 9, and 10 of Section II of this decree shall not become effective until January 1, 1947.

VII

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the decree to apply to the Court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

VIII

Plaintiff shall recover, jointly and severally, from the defendants enjoined herein, its costs.

[fol. 3765] 4. From granting any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted or enforcing any existing clearance to the extent of such excess. In determining what is a reasonable clearance the following factors should be taken into consideration:

(a) The admission prices of the theatres involved, as set by the exhibitor; statement outlining the extent to which it has complied and the manner in which it proposes to comply with this pro- [fol. 3769] vision, setting forth in detail the names, locations, and general descriptions of the theatres, corporate securities, and beneficial interests of any kind involved, the sales thereof that it has made, and such purchases as it proposes to make, with a statement of facts regarding each competitive situation involved in such proposed purchases sufficient to show the probable effect of such purchase on that situation. Similar reports shall be made quarterly thereafter until this provision shall have been fully complied with. Reasonable notice of such purchase plans shall be served upon the Attorney General and plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such purchases shall be approved by the Court.

(b) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

6. From expanding its theatre holdings, except in the course of acquiring a co-owner's interest in jointly owned theatres pursuant to the provisions of Section III(5) above. Other theatre interests necessary to protect a defendant's investment or in order to enter a competitive field may be acquired providing that no expansion of its theatre holdings shall result therefrom. In the latter case such acquisitions shall not occur until after approval of this Court is obtained therefor. Reasonable notice of such an application shall be served upon the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect to such approval before it shall be granted.

7. From operating, booking, or buying films for any of its theatres through any agent who is also acting in such manner for any other exhibitor, independent, or affiliated.

Provision shall be made for the arbitration of claimed violations of Section II of this decree, as to bids, clearances, runs, and any other subjects appropriate for arbitration in respect to all parties who may consent to the creation of such tribunals as may be hereunder created for adjustment [fol. 3770] of such disputes. The awards thereof shall be reviewable by an appeal board generally similar to the one created by the existing consent decree as to any parties consenting thereto. Within days the defendants shall submit to the Court their proposals as to the creation and operation of such arbitration and appeal board machinery as they are willing to consent to for the purpose of implementing this section of the decree. Copies thereof shall be served on the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall have a reasonable time after receipt thereof to advise the Court as to any objections it may have to such systems as the defendants may propose. The provisions of the existing consent decree are hereby declared to be of no further force or effect, except as to arbitration proceedings now pending. They shall remain in effect as to such proceedings until final disposition shall have been made thereof. Existing awards and those made pursuant to pending proceedings shall continue to be enforceable to the extent that they are consistent with the provisions of this decree.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any consenting defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this decree, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview [fol. 3771] counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for the company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

PROPOSED DECREE OF DEFENDANTS PARAMOUNT, LOEW, FOX, WARNER AND RKO—Filed October 7, 1946

The Court having rendered its opinion herein on June 11, 1946, and having filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with said opinion wherein certain of the defendants herein were found to have violated, in the respects therein specified, the act of Congress, approved July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, commonly known as the Sherman Act,

It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

The petition and the amended and supplemental complaint are dismissed as to the defendants Screen Gems, Inc. and Universal Pictures Company, Inc. They are also dismissed as against the remaining defendants herein as to all claims based upon their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others, or based upon any alleged violations of the Sherman Act with respect to production, including all claims based upon alleged acts of discrimination against producers.

II

Each of the defendants,[1] Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation, (formerly known as Vitagraph, Inc.); Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation, when acting as a distributor of features,[2] is hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which a minimum admission price or prices to be charged at any theatre during [fol. 3774] the exhibition of the feature licensed is or are agreed upon between the licensor and the licensee in any manner or by any means, provided that nothing in this Decree shall limit or affect the right of a distributor defendant to require that any offer by an exhibitor[3] to license any of its features shall include a statement by the exhibitor of the admission price or prices, fixed by the exhibitor, which the exhibitor intends to charge for admission to the exhibitor's theatre during the exhibition of the feature.

2. From concertedly agreeing with each other to maintain a system of clearances.[4]

[1] Whenever a defendant is enjoined herein the injunction shall be binding upon its officers, agents, servants, employees, and attorneys, and upon those persons in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise.

[2] The term "feature" as used in this Decree means any motion picture, regardless of topic, the length of the film of which is in excess of 4,000 feet.

[3] The term "exhibitor" as used in this Decree means a person, firm or corporation which is engaged in the business of operating a theatre or theatres exhibiting feature motion pictures for profit for its own account.

[4] The term "clearance" as used in this Decree means the period of time, agreed upon between the distributor and its licensee and usually stipulated in a license agreement, prior to the expiration of which a feature licensed for prior exhibition in a theatre may not be exhibited in another theatre or theatres.

3. From granting any clearance in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted, or the licensor's revenue from the exhibition of the feature licensed, and from enforcing any existing clearance to the extent of such excess. In determining what is a reasonable clearance, the following factors, among others, should be taken into consideration:

(a) The admission prices of the theatres involved, as set by the exhibitors;

(b) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(c) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cutrate tickets, lotteries, etc.

(d) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor defendant from such theatres;

[fol. 3775] (e) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(f) The fact that a defendant or an independent circuit of theatres has an interest in one or more of the theatres involved should be disregarded; and

(g) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From further performing any existing franchise [5] to which it is a party and from making any franchise in the future.

5. From further performing any existing formula deal [6]

[5] The term "franchise" as used in this Decree means a licensing agreement or a series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of features released by a distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

[6] The term "formula deal" as used in this Decree means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross.

or master agreement[7] to which it is a party, and from making any formula deal or master agreement in the future.

6. From performing and from entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensing by the exhibitor of one or more other features.

7. From licensing a feature in any case where two or more exhibitors operating competing theatres have notified a distributor that they desire to license such feature on a [fol. 3776] run designated by the distributor defendant in any manner except the following:

(a) The distributor defendant shall offer such feature to each such exhibitor who has a theatre of the size, location and equipment suitable and adequate to show the feature to advantage upon such run. The offer may include minimum terms[8] upon which the distributor defendant will grant a license for such run. The license shall be granted to the exhibitor whose offer for the feature satisfies the minimum terms, if any, and in the judgment of the distributor defendant exercised in good faith affords the best terms. Each such license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination as between exhibitors competing for the run, whether in favor of theatres in which any other defendant has an interest, old customers, or any person whatsoever.

(b) In determining which exhibitor's offer affords the best terms the following factors, among others, should be taken into consideration and accorded the importance and weight to which each is entitled regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The film revenue which the distributor defendant will derive from each theatre for the exhibition of such fea-

[7] The term "master agreement" as used in this Decree means an agreement licensing the exhibition of a feature in two or more theatres in a particular circuit in which there are not separate provisions covering the licensing of the feature for exhibition in each particular theatre.

[8] The minimum terms may include, among other things, the minimum license fee; the exhibition period; the time when the exhibition is to commence; and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run.

ture on the run in question and upon the terms offered by the exhibitor. In estimating such film revenue, the distributor defendant should take into consideration, among other things:

The number of days for which and the particular days of the week or year or other playing arrangements upon which each exhibitor plans to play the feature; the character, location and size of each theatre; the type of entertainment which each exhibitor intends to present with the feature involved and which the exhibitor in the past has customarily offered the public; the appointments and equipment of each theatre; transit facilities; the admission prices of each theatre as set by each exhibitor for the period of the exhibition of the feature; the distributor defendant's actual experience with each of the exhibitors in fulfilling its obligations in past contracts; each exhibitor's reputation generally in the industry and in the community for honesty, fair dealing and showmanship; and the financial responsibility of the exhibitor operating each of the theatres involved.

[fol. 3777] (2) The comparative suitability of the theatres for the advantageous exhibition of the distributor defendant's feature on the run in question; and

(3) The effect which the exhibition of the feature in each of the theatres would have upon other exhibitions of the feature.

(c) Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and feature by feature.

(d) The distributor defendant may reject any and all offers which are the product of collusion among exhibitors.

(e) Each distributor defendant shall adopt and publicly announce reasonable rules and regulations applicable to the licensing of features pursuant to this subdivision 7 which may, from time to time, be amended by such distributor defendant. These may include a designation of areas within which it intends to offer each feature for license and the type, number and sequence of run to be offered therein, and the number, if any, of simultaneous exhibitions it will offer on any such run. Each distributor defendant shall file a copy of such rules, regulations and amendments, if any,

with the Clerk of the Court and with the Department of Justice.

(f) The provisions of this subdivision 7 of this Section II shall become effective not later than — months after the date of this Decree.

8. A license to exhibit one or more features in one or more theatres may be included in a single instrument provided that the license has been negotiated and entered into in a manner not inconsistent with the provisions of this Section II. To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown[9] prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given, by the licensor, the right to reject —% of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, but, such right to reject any such feature must be exercised by the exhibitor by notice in writing within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the exhibitor to inspect it within the distributor's exchange district in which the exhibition is to be held.

[fol. 3778] 9. The provisions of subdivisions (3), (6) and (7) of Section II hereof may be enforced in arbitration against any consenting defendant,[10] as follows:

(A) Clearance

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has not complied with the provisions of subdivision 3 of this Section II shall be subject to arbitration in the manner provided in the Rules of Arbitra-

[9] A distributor's feature shall be deemed to have been trade shown where it is exhibited at a theatre or projection room for the benefit of exhibitors generally within such distributor's exchange district in which the public exhibition is to be held.

tion which are annexed hereto and made a part hereof, and the power of the arbitrator in each of such controversies shall be limited to the making of an award fixing the maximum clearance between the theatre involved which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by the distributor defendant which is a party to the arbitration or, where the arbitrator finds that the theatres involved are not in substantial competition, prohibiting the granting of clearance between the theatres in licenses thereafter entered into.

Any distributor defendant or any exhibitor affected by any such award may institute a further arbitration proceeding for a modification thereof upon the ground that since the making of the award the conditions with respect to the theatres involved therein have so changed as to warrant modification, and, in the event that the arbitrator finds that there has been such change, he shall make a redetermination of the clearance and may make an award fixing the maximum clearance, if any, which may thereafter be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by the distributor defendant which is a party to the arbitration.

[fol. 3779] When, in any arbitration under this subdivision, the finding of the arbitrator shall be that the complainant has not sustained his complaint, the arbitrator shall enter an award dismissing the complaint.

(B) Conditioning

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has not complied with the provisions of subdivision 6 of this Section II in licensing or offering to license a feature to such exhibitor shall be subject to arbitration in the manner provided in the Rules of Arbitration.

Where a license has been entered into, an exhibitor shall have no right to assert any such claim unless he shall have mailed to the distributor defendant at its home office a notice in writing of such claim and of the grounds therefor not later than two days after receipt by the exhibitor of the distributor defendant's written approval of the exhibitor's signed application or applications.

The power of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the licensing of a feature was in compliance with such provisions, and if the finding be in the negative, (2) an award cancelling the license for (or to the extent that it may relate to) such other feature or features and (3) in the discretion of the arbitrator, an award of an amount not exceeding $500 to be paid to the complainant.

Where no license has been entered into an exhibitor shall have no right to assert any such claim unless he shall have mailed to the distributor defendant at its home office a [fol. 3780] notice in writing of such claim and of the grounds therefor not later than five (5) days after the exhibitor claims the alleged offer was made.

The power of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the offer to license such feature was made in compliance with such provisions, and, if the finding be in the negative, (2) in the discretion of the arbitrator, an award of an amount not exceeding $250 to be paid to the complainant.

In any arbitration under this heading (B) if the Arbitrator finds in favor of the distributor defendant, he shall enter an award dismissing the complaint.

(C) Licensing

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has not complied with the provisions of subdivision 7 of this Section II shall be subject to arbitration in the manner provided in the Rules of Arbitration.

If the Arbitrator finds in favor of the distributor defendant, he shall enter an award dismissing the complaint. If the Arbitrator finds in favor of the complainant, he shall make an award specifying the respects in which the distributor defendant has failed to comply with the provisions of said subdivision 7 of Section II, and may also award to the complainant its actual compensatory damages in an amount of not less than $100. nor more than $5,000. No such award, however, shall affect any license agreement theretofore entered into or the exhibition of any feature thereunder.

An exhibitor shall have no right to assert such claim unless the arbitration shall be commenced within 30 days after the exhibitor shall have had notice of the facts constituting the claimed non compliance with subdivision 7 of Section II hereof.

Each of the defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Loew's Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Proctor Corporation; RKO Midwest Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; and National Theatres Corporation when acting as an exhibitor is hereby enjoined and restrained:

1. From entering into and from continuing to perform any agreements with a distributor defendant, of the type prohibited in subdivisions 4 and 5 of the foregoing Section II hereof.

2. From entering into and from continuing to perform any agreement for the pooling of theatres whereby

(a) a given theatre of a defendant and a given theatre of an exhibitor, normally in competition with the defendant's theatre, are operated as a unit, or whereby the business policies for such theatres are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors, and whereby the profits of such pooled theatres are divided among such defendant and such exhibitor according to pre-agreed percentages or otherwise; or

(b) the parties thereto may not acquire other theatres in the competitive area where the pool operates without first offering such other theatres for inclusion in the pool; or

(c) such defendant leases any of its theatres to another defendant or to another exhibitor operating one or more theatres in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits of any two or more of the allied theatres.

Existing agreements which violate the provisions of this section shall be terminated within 2 years after the date of this Decree.

[fol. 3782] 3. From continuing to own, in conjunction with another exhibitor-defendant, any proprietary interest in any theatre or in a firm or corporation owning, leasing or operating any theatre and from leasing a theatre to another exhibitor defendant upon a rental based upon a percentage of the profits of the leased theatre. Existing relationships which are inconsistent with this provision shall be terminated within two years from the date of this Decree by a sale to or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners or by a division of the assets so jointly held or by a sale of the joint interest of one of such exhibitor-defendants to a party not a defendant herein or by the termination or revision of any lease inconsistent with the provisions of this Sub-division 3 of this Section III.

4. (a) From continuing to own in conjunction with any independent exhibitor[11] a proprietary interest in any theatre or in any firm or corporation owning, leasing or operating any theatre unless such interest is 5% or less or 95% or more, and provided, further, that any defendant owning an interest of more than 5% but less than 95% in any theatre may apply to this Court for permission to retain the same in accordance with the provisions of subdivision 4(d) hereof.

(b) The existing relationships between an exhibitor defendant and an independent exhibitor which are inconsistent with the provisions of 4 (a) above shall in each case be dissolved or otherwise dealt with within —— years after the date of this Decree, by ——.

[fol. 3783] (1) A sale or other disposition of the exhibitor defendant's interest; or

(2) A purchase by such exhibitor defendant of the outstanding interest; or

(3) A division of some or all of the assets between the parties to such relationship.

Purchases or divisions of assets pursuant to (2) and (3) above shall be subject to the approval of the Court upon application by the exhibitor defendant.

(c) The provisions of subdivision 4(a) shall not apply, nor shall the dissolution of any joint relationship between an exhibitor-defendant and an independent exhibitor be required, in any case where such joint relationship resulted from the sale, transfer or other disposition by the exhibitor-defendant of the partial interest to such independent exhibitor, except to the extent, if any, to which and in the places in which the parties were in competition at the time of such sale, transfer or other disposition by the exhibitor-defendant to the independent exhibitor.

(d) In any application by any defendant pursuant to subdivisions 4 (a) and 4 (b) of this section III, if the Court, after hearing, shall find that the transaction sought to be achieved will not result in an unreasonable restraint of competition in exhibition within the particular competitive area in which the theatres are situated, it shall approve the application.

5. From expanding its theater holdings except in the course of acquiring the interests of co-owners in jointly owned theaters pursuant to the provisions of subdivisions 3 and 4 above; provided, however, that nothing herein con- [fol. 3784] tained shall prevent an exhibitor-defendant from acquiring theaters or interests therein in order to protect its investments or in order to enter a competitive field; if, in the latter case, this Court or the District Court of the United States for the district in which the theater or theaters are located, shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor.

6. Reasonable notice of any application pursuant to the provisions of sub-divisions 4 and 5 of this Section III shall be served upon the Department of Justice and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto.

Each exhibitor defendant is hereby enjoined from booking or buying films for any of the theatres which it operates, or from operating any theatre, through any agent known by it to be acting in such capacity with respect to any theatre in which it is not permitted to retain or acquire a proprietary interest, or from acting as a booking or buying agent with respect to any such theatre or any theatre which is not operated by it or by a corporation in which it is permitted to retain or acquire a proprietary interest.

V

Nothing contained in this Decree shall be deemed to limit the right of any defendant to lease or otherwise contract for the temporary use of a theatre for the road showing[12] by it of a particular feature distributed by it or a corporation controlled by it upon such terms and conditions as may be negotiated by such defendant.

VI

Nothing contained in this Decree shall apply to operations or activities of any defendant outside of the Continental United States[13] or to operations or activities of any defendant within the Continental United States in so far as they relate to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures outside of the Continental United States.

VII

Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of each distributor-defendant to license, or in any way to arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any of its own theatres.[14]

[12] A road show shall be deemed to be the exhibition prior to its general release of a feature which, because of its character or unusual cost, cannot, in the judgment of the distributor defendant, exercised in good faith, be distributed as advantageously by the distributor's normal method of distribution and which is exhibited by such defendant at advanced admission prices.

[13] The term "Continental United States," as used herein, means the territory within the boundaries of the forty-eight (48) States and the District of Columbia.

[14] A theatre is a defendant's own theatre for the purpose of this Decree if such defendant has therein a proprietary interest of 95% or more, either directly or through subsidiaries, or if it has therein such an interest of 50% or more which it is permitted to retain or acquire under the provisions of this Decree or order of this court, and which theatre is operated by it or a subsidiary, or by a corporation in which it is permitted to retain or acquire such an interest.

VIII

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other [fol. 3786] records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

IX

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of

(a) enabling the plaintiff or any defendant to apply to this Court at any time for such orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the interpretation, construction, application or carrying out of the Decree, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of willful violations thereof;

(b) enabling the plaintiff or any defendant to apply to this Court at any time to modify or to set aside the Decree or to take further proceedings in the event that it should appear that the operation of this Decree has failed to bring about a correction of the violations of the Sherman

Act hereby found to exist and which are the basis of this Decree;

[fol. 3787] (c) enabling any defendant to make any application to this Court provided for in this Decree including any application to enlarge its time to do or refrain from doing any act required by this Decree or to be relieved from any requirement of this Decree upon the ground that special circumstances exist which would make enforcement of such requirement inappropriate, oppressive, unduly burdensome or otherwise inequitable;

(d) enabling any defendant to apply to this Court at any time to modify or set aside, as to such defendant, this Decree or any modification thereof or to vacate or modify, as to such defendant, any provision thereof upon the ground that, under the economic, competitive or other conditions existing at the time of such application (regardless of whether or not such economic, competitive or other conditions are new or unforeseen), the Decree or any modification thereof or any provision thereof, as applied to such defendant is inappropriate or unnecessary or oppressive or unduly burdensome.

X.

Whenever any provision of this Decree is altered or modified or any further Decree is entered in this or any other cause awarding relief substantially similar to the relief prayed for by the amended and supplemental complaint herein and not granted by this Decree, or legislation is enacted by The Congress of the United States which has similar effect, each consenting defendant affected thereby and not agreeing thereto shall have the right at any time within one hundred twenty (120) days after such alteration, modification or further Decree, as the case may be, becomes effective, to withdraw its consent to arbitration by filing with this Court a written notification of such withdrawal. Upon any such withdrawal the withdrawing defendant shall cease to be a consenting defendant except as to licenses previously entered into and the provisions of subdivision 9 [fol. 3788] of Section II of this Decree shall, except as to such licenses, thereupon cease to be applicable to such defendant.

XI

Whenever in this Decree a defendant is required to do an act within any period of time after the date hereof such period of time shall commence upon the date when this Decree becomes final either by the expiration of the time within which to appeal therefrom without any appeal being taken or, in the event of an appeal, from the date when a final Decree is entered herein upon the mandate of the Supreme Court.

XII

The effective date of this Decree shall be stayed pending appeal.

XIII

The existing Consent Decree entered herein on November 20, 1940 shall remain in full force and effect with respect to any acts or conduct occurring prior to the effective date of this Decree.

[fol. 3789] SUGGESTED SUBSTITUTE FOR DEFENDANTS. PROPOSED DECREE II (7)

7 (a) From arbitrarily refusing the request * of an exhibitor that the distributor defendant license a feature to him for exhibition in his theatre on any run licensed by the distributor instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. A distributor defendant shall not be deemed to have arbitrarily refused any such request if it has granted the license for the feature for such run theatre by theatre; feature by feature; solely upon the merits, and without discrimination as between the competing theatres, whether in favor of a theatre in which any other defendant has an interest; of a circuit theatre, of an old customer, or of any person whatsoever. In determining which of two competing exhibitors is entitled on the merits to the license for a particular feature for his theatre, the distributor defendant shall take into consideration the following factors, among others, and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled regardless of the order in which they are listed.

* For the purposes of this subdivision a request by an exhibitor must be made in writing to the distributor defendant at its home office, by registered mail, and such demand shall be deemed to have been refused by the distributor defendant either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of the distributor defendant's refusal in writing, or upon the expiration of days after such mailing of the exhibitor's request.

[fol. 3790] (1) The film revenue which the distributor defendant will derive from each theatre for the exhibition of such feature on the run in question, and upon the terms offered by the exhibitor. In estimating such film revenue, the distributor defendant should take into consideration, among other things:

The number of days for which and the particular days of the week or year or other playing arrangements upon which each exhibitor plans to play the feature; the character, location and size of each theatre; the type of entertainment which each exhibitor intends to present with the feature involved and which the exhibitor in the past has customarily offered the public; the appointments and equipment of each theatre; transit facilities; the admission prices of each theatre as set by each exhibitor for the period of the exhibition of the feature; the distributor defendant's actual experience with each of the exhibitors in fulfilling its obligations in past contracts; each exhibitor's reputation generally in the industry and in the community for honesty, fair dealing and showmanship; and the financial responsibility of the exhibitor operating each of the theatres involved.

[fol. 3791] (2) The comparative suitability of the theatres for the advantageous exhibition of the distributor defendant's feature on the run in question; and

(3) The effect which the exhibition of the feature in each of the theatres would have upon other exhibitions of the feature.

7 (b) From refusing to license its features for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run (to be designated by the distributor) upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor defendant which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of this subdivision 7 (b), if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms to such exhibitor for said theatre will have the effect of reducing the defendant distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located.

C. Arbitration Under Section II 7. (a)

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has failed to comply with the provisions of Subdivision 7 (a) of Section II of this Decree shall be subject to arbitration in the manner provided in the Rules of Arbitration.

If the arbitrator finds in favor of the distributor defendant, he shall dismiss the complaint.

[fol. 3792] If the arbitrator finds that the distributor defendant has arbitrarily refused to license the feature or features to the complainant on the run requested, and has instead licensed it or them to a competitor of the complainant on such run, he shall make an award against the distributor defendant, which award shall not affect any license to exhibit any features then under license to the complainant's competitor, but shall direct the distributor defendant thereafter in good faith to afford the complainant as well as such competitor the opportunity to negotiate for such run of any features thereafter released by the distributor defendant, for exhibition on such run, for which they desire to negotiate, and the arbitrator may in addition, in his discretion, direct the distributor defendant to pay to the complainant his actual pecuniary loss resulting from the distributor defendant's failure to comply with sub-division 7 (a) of this Section II, which damages shall be in the sum of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000.

After a final award in favor of a complaining exhibitor has been made under this section, such exhibitor may institute a further arbitration proceeding (to be held before the arbitrator who made the original award, if available) upon the ground that such award has not been complied with in good faith by the distributor defendant against which it was entered, and in any such proceeding, if the arbitrator shall find that the distributor defendant has not complied in good faith with the original award, [fol. 3793] he may award further damages to the complaining exhibitor for his actual pecuniary loss resulting from the defendant distributor's failure to comply with the original award, which damages shall not be less than $100 nor more than $5,000.

An exhibitor shall have no right to assert such claim unless the arbitration shall be commenced within thirty (30) days after the refusal constituting the claimed non-compliance with Subdivision 7 (a) of this Section II.

D. Arbitration Under Section II 7 (b)

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has not complied with the provisions of subdivision 7 (b) of this Section II, shall be subject to arbitration in the manner provided in the Rules of Arbitration.

If the Arbitrator finds in favor of the distributor defendant, he shall enter an award dismissing the complaint.

If the Arbitrator finds in favor of the complainant, he shall make an award directing the distributor defendant thereafter in good faith to offer its features for license to the complainant for exhibition in said theatre on a run to be designated by the distributor and upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor defendant which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of said subdivision 7 (b) of this Section II. The burden of showing that granting a run on any terms to the complainant will have [fol. 3794] the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the complainant's theatre is located shall be upon the distributor.

Any distributor defendant affected by such an award may institute a further arbitration proceeding to be relieved therefrom on the ground that since the making of the award the granting of a run in compliance therewith has had the effect of reducing the distributor defendant's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the complainant's theatre is located, and, in the event that the Arbitrator finds that the granting of a run in compliance with the award has had the effect of reducing the distributor defendant's total film revenue in said area, he shall vacate the award.

E. Election of Remedies

Any exhibitor shall be free to avail himself of the right (1) to file a complaint under the arbitration provisions of this subdivision 9 of this Section II of this Decree or (2) to pursue remedies at law or in equity, but his election of one remedy or the other as a particular controversy shall be final.

10. Nothing contained in this Decree, affording to exhibitors the right to proceed by Arbitration, as in this Decree provided, shall impair or affect the right of the plaintiff to take any proceedings which it otherwise could to enforce the provisions of this Decree or to punish wilful violation.

[fol. 3795] In the District Court of the United States

Defendant United Artists Corporation's Proposed Decree

The Court having rendered its opinion on June 11, 1946, and having duly considered the proposals of the parties as to its findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with said opinion wherein certain of the defendants herein were found to have violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress, approved July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, commonly known as the Sherman Act,

It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows, as to the defendant, United Artists Corporation:

I

1. The defendant, United Artists Corporation, is hereby enjoined from granting any license for the exhibition of any picture distributed by it wherein the minimum admission prices for the public performance of said motion picture in any theatre, are fixed by United Artists Corporation and the exhibitor party to said agreement;

2. From agreeing with other distributors or with any group of exhibitors to fix or maintain uniform systems of clearances;

3. From granting any clearance in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect United Artists Corporation's revenue from the exhibition of the picture licensed;

[fol. 3796] 4. From licensing the exhibition of any of its motion pictures in any theatres through any agent who is also acting as licensing agent for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliated.

5. From combining, conspiring or agreeing with any exhibitors or distributors to eliminate competition;

II

Provided, however, that nothing contained in this decree shall limit, impair or affect the right of United Artists Corporation to do the following:

1. To enter into distribution agreements with independent producers, wherein and whereby each independent producer retains control over the sales policy and marketing of each picture licensed to United Artists Corporation for distribution;

2. To enter into distribution agreements with independent producers, wherein and whereby United Artists Corporation grants to such independent producer the right to approve each and every exhibition license agreement solicited by United Artists Corporation from each and every exhibitor desiring to exhibit said motion picture;

3. To have the right to insert in any exhibition license agreement it may make for the exhibition of any of its pictures a stipulation by the exhibitor that the exhibitor warrants that at the time of the making of the exhibition license agreement the exhibitor charged the minimum admission prices for admission to his theatre set out in said agreement, provided there was nothing stipulated in said agreement that the exhibitor agrees to charge said price for the exhibition of the picture licensed to him or that he would continue to maintain said minimum admission prices, and, provided, further, that said agreements contained no provisions of a penalty nature in the event the exhibitor failed to charge said minimum admission prices;

4. From offering to license the exhibition rights in and to motion pictures distributed by it separately and individually in a free and open market so that the returns therefrom shall be as large as possible;

5. To have the right, separately and independently, to license the exhibition of its pictures for separate runs and with separate clearances between runs provided said runs and said clearances are negotiated with each separate exhibitor separately and independently;

6. To roadshow * upon such terms and conditions as may be fixed by United Artists Corporation or the producer of motion pictures which have a negative cost of not less than Three Million Dollars ($3,000,000), provided that United Artists Corporation may commence only one such motion picture roadshow during any consecutive twelve months' period from and after the date of this Decree (the commencement shall be deemed to be the first roadshow exhibi- [fols. 3797-3798] tion of the picture in the United States), and, provided, further, that the licensing of such motion picture when it is subsequently placed in general release shall be subject to the terms of this Decree.

7. Further, that United Artists Corporation shall have the right to license in groups of not more than six, so-called "Western" motion pictures which are released in a series, where the principal character remains the same throughout the series and where the negative cost does not exceed the sum of Two Hundred Thousand Dollars ($200,000) per Western, such as the so-called "Hopalong Cassidy" series, provided the exhibitor shall have the right to reject not more than 20% of any series whether the same be trade shown or not trade shown, as the term is understood in the business.

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling either Plaintiff or Defendant United Artists Corporation or any of the parties to the Decree to apply to the Court at any time for such orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying

DECREE PROPOSED BY THE UNIVERSAL DEFENDANTS

The Court having rendered its opinion herein on June 11, 1946, and having filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with said opinion wherein certain of the defendants herein were found to have violated, in the respects therein specified, Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress, approved July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, commonly known as the Sherman Act,

It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

The petition and the amended and supplemental complaint are hereby dismissed as to Universal Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and Big U Film Exchange, Inc.

In the event the foregoing decree is refused, the Universal defendants propose the following decree in the alternative, without prejudice, however, to their contention that the petition and the amended and supplemental complaint should have been dismissed as against them, without acquiescing in any of the Court's findings or conclusions holding them guilty of violations of the Sherman Act, and without prejudice to their right to appeal therefrom.

1. The complaint is dismissed as to the corporation named in the complaint as Universal Pictures Company, Inc., merged during the pendency of this case into the defendant Universal Corporation. The complaint is also dismissed as to the claims made against the remaining Universal defendants which are based upon their acts as producers, either alone or in conjunction with others, including all claims based upon alleged acts of discrimination against producers.

II.

Each of the defendants, Universal Pictures Company, Inc. (formerly known as Universal Corporation), Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and Big U Film Exchange, Inc., are hereby enjoined:

1. From performing any existing license agreement, in which minimum prices for admission to such theatre have been fixed by the licensor, and from hereafter making any such agreement with any affiliated exhibitor. In future licenses with affiliated exhibitors Universal may require the exhibitor to state the admission price it is currently charging and to warrant the truth of such statement, but the exhibitor may not be required to agree to maintain said price.

2. From carrying out any existing agreement to grant clearances, from agreeing hereafter with any distributor to fix clearances, and from participating hereafter in any system of clearances unreasonably restraining interstate commerce.

3. From granting hereafter any clearance in excess of what is reasonably necessary to enable Universal to reap the reward to which it is entitled under the legal monopolies granted to it in its copyrights.

4. From further performing any existing franchise to which an affiliated exhibitor is a party, and from hereafter [fol. 3801] entering into any franchise to which an affiliated exhibitor is a party. Universal may retain the franchises it now has with independent exhibitors and may enter hereafter into such franchises with independent exhibitors or with any exhibitor which it may hereafter own or control, as may be necessary or desirable to enable it to exploit its own motion pictures to the fullest extent, consistent with not unreasonably restraining interstate commerce.

5. From further performing any existing formula deal or master agreement with any affiliated exhibitor, and from making hereafter any formula deal or master agreement with any affiliated exhibitor.

6. From carrying out any existing license agreement with an affiliated exhibitor, and from entering hereafter into any license agreement with an affiliated exhibitor, in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensing by the exhibitor of one or more other features.

7. From refusing to grant reasonable rejection rights to exhibitors in respect of pictures not trade shown. In no event shall Universal be required to grant rejection rights in excess of 10% of the features not trade shown. The right to reject any feature must be exercised within ten days after the licensee has had an opportunity to inspect it within the distributor's exchange district in which the exhibition is to be held.

The aforesaid injunctions with respect to performing existing agreements shall be permanent; those injunctions relating to future agreements shall continue in effect pending a finding of this Court that the effects of the combination and conspiracy, found herein to have been participated in by said defendants, have been dissipated.

III.

Nothing contained in this decree shall be deemed to apply to the leasing or otherwise contracting for the temporary use of a theatre for the road showing of a particular feature.

IV.

Nothing contained in this decree shall apply to operations or activities of any defendant outside of the Continental United States or to operations or activities of any defendant within the Continental United States in so far as they relate to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures outside of the Continental United States.

(Footnotes 2 through 7, 9, 12 and 13 of the decree proposed by the major defendants, which define the terms, "feature", "exhibitor", "clearance", "franchise", "formula deal", "master agreement", "trade-shown", "road-show" and "continental United States", are hereby incorporated by reference. The term "independent exhibitor" means an exhibitor which is neither a defendant exhibitor in this action nor a subsidiary of a defendant (other than a Universal defendant) nor is controlled by a defendant (other than a Universal defendant) through stock ownership. The term "affiliated exhibitor" means an exhibitor which is a defendant exhibitor in this action, or a subsidiary of a defendant (other than a Universal defendant), or an exhibitor which is controlled by a defendant (other than a Universal defendant) through stock ownership.)

V.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained [fol. 3803] in this decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VI.

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of

(a) enabling the plaintiff or any Universal defendant to apply to this Court at any time for such orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the interpretation, construction, application or carrying out of the decree, for the enforcement or compliance therewith and for the punishment of willful violations thereof;

(b) enabling the plaintiff or any Universal defendant to apply to this Court at any time to modify or to set aside the decree or to take further proceedings in the event that it should appear that the operation of this decree has failed to bring about a correction of the violations of the Sherman Act hereby found to exist and which are the basis of this decree;

(c) enabling any Universal defendant to make any application to this Court provided for in this decree including any application to enlarge its time to do or refrain from doing any act required by this decree or to be relieved from any requirement of this decree upon the ground that special circumstances exist which would make enforcement of such [fols. 3804-3805] requirement inappropriate, oppressive, unduly burdensome or otherwise inequitable;

(d) enabling any Universal defendant to apply to this Court at any time to modify or set aside, as to such defendant, the decree or any modification thereof or to vacate or modify, as to such defendant, any provision thereof upon the ground that under the economic, competitive or other conditions existing at the time of such application (regardless of whether or not such economic, competitive or other conditions are new or unforeseen), the decree or any modification thereof or any provision thereof, as applied to such defendant is inappropriate or unnecessary or oppressive or unduly burdensome.

VII.

Whenever in this decree a defendant is required to do an act within any period of time after the date hereof such period of time shall commence upon the date when the decree becomes final either by the expiration of the time within which to appeal therefrom without any appeal being taken or, in the event of an appeal, from the date when a final decree is entered herein upon the mandate of the Supreme Court.

VIII.

The effective date of this decree shall be stayed pending appeal.

Entered this — day of ——, 1946.

MEMORANDUM OF COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION ON FINDINGS AND DECREE—September 10, 1946

Jurisdiction of this Court is Limited

This is not a consent decree. At the outset, Columbia wishes to make perfectly clear that it consents to nothing in this decree.

We believe that it is the sole function of a Federal Court of Equity in a suit of this kind to enjoin the defendants only from continuing to do those acts which are in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. It is not the function of such Court to regulate an industry, to police it, and to force the defendants and others in the industry to adopt a given system of regulation and restrictions, particularly where the industry rests basically upon copyrights.

[fol. 3807] Since this Court has condemned block booking, we believe (without conceding the correctness of its position) that it should limit its Decree to an injunction against block booking. For this Court under the proposed Decree to define the methods by which pictures shall be sold—putting them on the auction block with an upset price, the giving of trade shows, limiting the defendants to their choice of customers and either directly or indirectly forcing them into an arbitration—is, we believe, beyond the jurisdiction of this Court.

The proposed provisions that have been coming down this Summer, both from the five producer-defendants and from the Government with respect to the method of sale of pictures, have clearly been beyond this Court's jurisdiction. In addition to the fact that they call for a species of regulation and policing, those provisions in the five major companies Decree resolves themselves into an attempt to force the three minor defendants into an arbitration system, although the Court itself has said in its opinion that it has no power to compel arbitration. This defendant unequivocally opposes any attempt to submit to arbitration.

The Decree proposed by the Government provides not only for injunctive relief, but the Court is asked by definition and exception to define the things which defendants may actually do, so that in effect and for all practical purposes the Court is asked to make a mandatory decree of regulation and policing. This defect is inherent throughout the entire Government Decree. It applies particularly to Section II, Clause 8.

The same defect in our opinion applies to Clause II, Subdivisions 7, 8 and 9 of the Decree proposed by the five producer-exhibitor defendants. We believe that each distributor should be permitted to sell its pictures in any way it sees fit, providing it does not violate the injunction against block booking. To provide for a system, as proposed by the Government and the five producer-exhibitor [fol. 3808] defendants, of a uniform method of selling, of publicity with respect to prices, of compelling a sale by auction, etc., is an attempt to regulate an industry which is not on an equal footing with respect to the theatre market, each of the five producer-exhibitor defendants controlling a partial market of its own.

Moreover, the proposed method of putting pictures on the auction block, trade—showing them, and compelling sale to the highest bidder, is an unwarranted interference with the monopoly inherent in Columbia's copyrights.

Judge Stephens of the District Court, District of Columbia, held in no uncertain terms that the Sherman Act could not impinge upon the monopoly granted to the owner of a patent (U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 70 U. S. Pat. Q. 49). After discussing various cases, particularly the General Electric case and the Bement case, the Court said, p. 75:

> "The patent law and the Sherman Act exist side by side, each being entitled to full recognition and application by the courts."

And in discussing the rights of the patent owner, Judge Stephens cited Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386. He pointed out particularly (p. 76) that Judge Dickinson in the Motion Picture Patents case had stated that the monopoly recognized by the patent law was not the monopoly condemned by the Sherman Act.

The monopoly of copyright stands on the same footing with the monopoly of patent; both monopolies are granted pursuant to Article I, Section 8 of the United States Constitution.

If we turn to the Copyright Act we find that the copyright proprietor's exclusive right to vend the work is unrestricted. We are not now talking of combinations, we [fol. 3809] are talking of the individual copyright proprietor. This record was without a scintilla of proof that Columbia in granting a license to an exhibitor for a group of its pictures acted in concert with any other distributor. Moreover the proposed Decree has broken down whatever conspiracy was claimed to exist, and it assumes that Columbia will license its pictures to exhibitors alone and not in conspiracy with others. Consequently, Columbia is licensing a copyright alone and not in conspiracy with others, and under the proposed Decree the restrictions placed upon the licensing of that work are inconsistent with and destroy the exclusive rights granted under the Copyright Act.

The Decree creates a compulsory license. In the Copyright Act the only compulsory license provided for is that with respect to mechanical reproduction of musical compositions, for which the manufacturer is required to pay a royalty of two cents per record to the proprietor. There is no other compulsory provision in the Copyright Act. So far as we have been able to ascertain, that was the first compulsory licensing provision in any Act in the United States.

The proposed Decree, however, imposes new compulsory provisions. Although under the Copyright Act the proprietor (Columbia) may license whomever he pleases, he is required under the Decree to license only the highest responsible bidder. Although under the Copyright Act the proprietor (Columbia) may license his work for any kind of a showing or run, he is limited under the proposed Decree in licensing upon a first run to a theatre deemed adequate for that purpose.

Whereas under the Copyright Act the proprietor (Columbia) may license his work to an old customer, just because he is an old customer, he is prevented by this Decree from doing so. Although under the Copyright Act there is no restriction upon the proprietor (Columbia) in the [fol. 3810] number of copyrighted works which it may license at one time, the Decree restricts the licensing of pictures to theatre by theatre and picture by picture. It is clear that the proposed Decree impinges upon Columbia's copyrights and its monopoly in those copyrights.

The Supreme Court has quite recently (1944) held that a decree under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act cannot do this. (See Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386). In that case the decree contained provisions in paragraphs 21, 22, 23 and 24(a) which forbade any disposition or transfer of patented machinery other than by an outright sale; and it required Hartford to offer in writing to sell each of the present licensees of the machinery then under lease at a reasonable price to be fixed, any dispute to be settled by the Court. When the defendants attacked those provisions the Government replied that they were intended only to prevent defendants from setting up patent pools and monopolizing the patented inventions. The Court held that the District Court should have limited itself to enjoining the defendants from setting up such pools, but that it went far beyond that. It said (p. 413):

> "But the decree as entered requires that each of the defendants must hereafter forever abstain from leasing a patented machine, no matter what the date of the invention, and compels each of them if he desires to distribute patented machinery to sell the machine which embodies the patent to everyone who applies, at a price to be fixed by the court. The injunction as drawn is not directed at any combination, agreement or conspiracy. It binds every defendant forever irrespective of his connection with any other or of the independence of his action." (Emphasis ours.)

It held that these provisions were confiscatory (p. 415). "If," it said, "as we must assume on this record, a de- [fol. 3811] fendant owns valid patents, it is difficult to say that, however much in the past such defendant has abused the rights thereby conferred, it must now dedicate them to the public." It held that a patent was property protected against appropriation both by individuals and by the Government, and that this was well settled law. At (p. 415):

> "In recognition of this quality of a patent the courts in enjoining violations of the Sherman Act arising from the use of patent licenses, agreements and leases, have abstained from action which amounted to a forfeiture of the patents."

In another paragraph of the decree, 24(b), the Court pointed out that a defendant hereafter acquiring a patent was not permitted to set the price for its use by others, or elect to use it himself, or refuse to license it or to retain it and neither use nor license it: "These," it said, "are options patent owners have always enjoyed" (p. 417). And it pointed out that since 1877 Congress had been asked frequently to adopt a system of compulsory licensing of patents, but that it had consistently failed to enact these proposals into law. It said (p. 417):

> "It (Congress) has also rejected the proposal that a patentee found guilty of violation of the anti-trust laws should be compelled as a penalty to license all his future inventions at reasonable royalties."

The result of the decision was that paragraphs 21, 22 and 23 were eliminated from the decree, and paragraphs 24(a) and 24(b) modified. It is quite clear that the Court respected the patent monopoly enough to strike from the decree those portions of it which it felt impinged upon that monopoly, and that it regarded those provisions inserted by the Government as purely a scheme for compulsory licensing.

[fol. 3812] Since such is the holding of the Supreme Court, we believe that in this Sherman Anti-trust suit the relief should be limited to injunction. It cannot extend so far as to constitute a system of regulation for the future. The recent opinion of Judge Goodrich in U. S. v. Pullman Company, 50 Fed. Supp. 123, p. 136, is appropriate:

> "The Court's conclusion being that there has been a violation of the Sherman Act the final question is the equitable relief to be had in this suit. Counsel for the plaintiff have repeatedly suggested that in case of a finding of violation, the questions concerning relief might be referred to a master or one of the regulatory commissions to hold hearings at which exports, governmental or private, could state their views regarding proper organization of the business of passenger transportation in the United States. The Court is not inclined to view favorably so ambitious a program. It does not regard itself as a legislative committee nor a regulatory commission. A law suit has been brought, factual and legal conclusions reached and the relief to be afforded should be that which the Court can both understand and apply."

Block Booking

Columbia believes that the proposed findings submitted by the Government with respect to block booking are totally inadequate and do not even begin to summarize the facts which were developed on the trial. We respectfully ask the Court to make some additional Findings of Fact which we believe were based upon the uncontraverted evidence. In addition to Findings on Block Booking, Columbia presents various other Findings which it believes are borne out by the Record. In these proposed Findings we refer the Court in many instances to the printed pages of the stenographic minutes, where the uncontradicted and unimpeached evidence supports such findings.

[fol. 3813] Additional Findings

1. In the early stages of the industry producers sold their pictures by the State Right method, both in the United States and throughout the world (1732-3). This was an uncertain operation and failed to give satisfactory revenue to the producers, and in the early 1920s the producers of pictures began to sell their pictures in blocks of a season's product in advance (1733-4). Columbia embarked on that system of distribution in 1929 and was compelled thereby to finance itself to the extent of a million dollars (1734-5). It has sold its pictures continuously since then in blocks of all or part of the season's product in advance (1735). All of the other distributing companies have sold their pictures in the same manner, except that the defendants, RKO, MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner and Paramount began to sell their pictures in blocks of five on the entry of the consent decree herein.

2. The exhibitors know fairly accurately what they purchase from Columbia when they buy its pictures in block at the beginning of each season. They know it from the history of the company, the type of releases it has, and because Columbia describes as adequately as possible its prospective pictures by title, by story and by stars (1736-7).

3. There is no such thing as blind selling (1812), and there is no proof in this record that any exhibitor in entering into a block booking contract with Columbia was misled with respect to the product or that he did not know what kind of pictures he was getting or that he was at any disadvantage by reason of such block booking contract (1736, 1759, 1812-3), and pictures are sold today as they always have been, on the star, the story, the director and similar elements (1630-3).

[fol. 3814] 4. During the period in question every agreement or contract by Columbia granting an exhibition right was in the nature of a limited exclusive right granted to a theatre owner—first the physical possession of a positive print, a tangible piece of property and second, the intangible right of license to publicly perform in his theatre the copyrighted subject contained in the positive print with no right to assign that performing right to anybody else; that the right was limited to exhibit or publicly perform said copyrighted work only in the particular theatre or theatres listed in the contract for the specific number of days included in the contract, with no right to lease or sell or in any way dispose of any part of the tangible property or print to anybody else, and with a further condition that when the public performance was completed under the contract, the print was to be returned to Columbia's exchange.

5. During the period in question Columbia did not sell or part with the title to any of the positive prints of any of the motion pictures distributed by it to any of the exhibitors exhibiting its motion pictures in the United States of America.

6. During the period in question Columbia, through its selling or licensing organization, solicited the various exhibitors of motion picture photoplays, in the United States of America, and tried to secure from said exhibitors exhibition license agreements under the terms of which said exhibitors would agree to exhibit all of the Columbia photoplays or a part of the Columbia photoplays, or any part of the Columbia photoplays that were available for exhibition for some run in said exhibitors' theatres.

7. During the period in question Columbia did not condition the licensing of any photoplay in any exhibitors' theatre upon that exhibitor's agreement to license other Columbia photoplays for exhibition in said theatre.

[fol. 3815] 8. During the period in question Columbia licensed the exhibition of its pictures both to the so-called affiliated theatres and independent theatres on flat rental terms, percentage terms and guarantee against percentage terms.

9. During the period in question Columbia licensed its pictures for exhibition to both affiliated and independent theatres on so-called "selective" contracts and did not discriminate in favor of affiliated against independent theatres, and granted not only the same rights of selection to both affiliated and independent theatres but granted greater selectivity to the independents.

10. During each of the years in question in excess of 600 feature photoplays were generally released in the United States of America, exclusive of so-called foreign made films. That Columbia releases during the same period equalled a comparatively small number of feature photoplays generally released in the United States each year including top features, features of lesser merit, Westerns and shorts; that at no time during said period did Columbia monopolize or attempt to monopolize or had it the power to monopolize the distribution market in the United States of America, or any section thereof.

11. In order to secure as much revenue as possible from each picture Columbia licensed its pictures on these runs with variant time intervals between each run which time intervals are generally referred to in the business as "clearance periods."

12. In many of the contracts in evidence the clearance provisions are set out in the contract; in many others there are no provisions for clearance.

13. The nature, extent and area of clearance in every Columbia contract was a matter of separate negotiation [fol. 3816] between Columbia and the other contracting party, or may have been arrived at as the result of a decision of the Board of Arbitration, or the Appeal Board operating under the Consent Decree to which Columbia was not a party, or may have been a clearance period that had been recognized in the trade as reasonable and had been in existence a long period of time, or may have been the result of a Board of Arbitration operating under the N.R.A., or may have been a clearance that had been originally negotiated between Columbia and the operator of the theatre some years back and was not expressed in the contract in writing but was generally understood between the contracting parties as the clearance that was to be given under the particular negotiation.

14. Columbia granted clearance not only to protect the revenue of the exhibitor but also to protect the revenue of the distributor and the producer of each and every motion picture released by Columbia during the period in question and whenever and wherever it granted clearance.

15. That by licensing separate runs and making separate runs available to all types and classes of theatres, charging all types of admissions, Columbia made it possible, during the period in question, for the largest number of theatres to exhibit its pictures on all types and variants of film rental so that the largest portion of the public was able to see the pictures distributed by Columbia during said period.

16. That by so doing Columbia secured the widest flow in Interstate Commerce of the positive prints distributed by it during the period in question.

17. There is no proof in this record that Columbia granted to any large theatre circuit any unreasonable [fol. 3817] clearance or unjustified prior runs for any of their theatres.

18. In some of the contracts in evidence Columbia included a provision which fixed the admission price that the exhibitor would charge any member of the public paying an admission fee to view the exhibition of Columbia's pictures in some of the theatres to which Columbia licensed its pictures. The admission prices inserted in said agreement were the prices then charged by the exhibitor at the time the exhibition license agreements were negotiated between the respective exhibitor and Columbia for the showing of Columbia pictures in the theatre in question.

19. The insertion of this admission price provision was for a two-fold purpose, one, to guarantee to Columbia that if it sold on a percentage basis that its percentage would be based upon a fixed admission price, or if it sold on a flat rental that the intake from the engagement would be sufficient to guarantee payment of the flat rental stipulated; two, to protect each and every exhibitor playing these Columbia pictures subsequently to the first exhibitor against the practise of the first exhibitor reducing ad-

20. That whenever any admission price provision was inserted, as aforesaid, in any contract, the insertion was the result of independent and separate negotiation between each exhibitor and Columbia without consultation of any kind or character with any other distributor or exhibitor.

21. That if any similarity in admission prices in any of the Columbia exhibition license agreements to any of the admission prices in any other distributor's exhibition [fol. 3818] license agreement occurred, it was due wholly and solely to the fact that the admission prices stipulated by the exhibitor in the contract were the admission prices which prevailed at the time, and which the exhibitor charged regularly at his theatre to any person desiring to see pictures in that particular theatre. At no time during the period in question did Columbia make any license agreements with any exhibitor fixing the resale price of any of the tangible property licensed to any of the exhibitors.

22. The course of conduct of the defendant, Columbia, during the period in question, was to license its product for first run or any run open to independent exhibitors either operating in competition with the defendant exhibitors or not in competition, including the key cities in the United States having a population of 100,000 or over, wherever independent exhibitors operated theatres.

23. In conducting its business of distributing motion pictures and making exhibition license agreements during the period in question, Columbia conducted all its negotiations and made all its contracts, whether with independents or affiliated exhibitors, or unaffiliated circuits, without any intent, purpose or effect to bring about a monopoly in the distribution or exhibition business, or to unduly restrain Interstate Commerce, but merely licensed its product in the market the way it found it, and with the sole purpose and intent of receiving the maximum amount of revenue legitimately possible for all pictures distributed by it.

24. The trade shows which have been introduced by the defendants, RKO, MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner and Paramount under the Consent Decree have been very poorly attended by exhibitors (1632-3), who apparently do not require them for the purpose of familiarizing themselves with the product of the respective distributors.

[fol. 3819] 25. Columbia owns no theatres and may not look to such sources for its market. Other companies which sell their pictures by block booking and which own no theatres are Universal, Republic, Monogram and Producer's Releasing Corporation.

26. The method of selling pictures by block booking eliminates to some extent the hazard and gamble involved in producing pictures. In 1928-9 Columbia spent $1,632,300 in production; in 1944-5 it spent (estimated), $16,689,700 (Exhibit C-2). It could not have increased its budget and spent these moneys unless it had the assurance of a ready market which only block booking has given it, and block booking is vital and necessary to Columbia for its continued existence as a producer (1737). To sell pictures singly Columbia would have to change its whole financial base, it would have to obtain moneys by way of refinancing or stock issue to sink into an inventory and keep the same on the shelf for a period of time; whereas block booking enables Columbia to turn over its pictures rapidly and to put its money back into the production of pictures quickly (1737). To sell pictures singly means to freeze Columbia's capital so that it would require more capital with which to operate, and that Columbia could not very well do (1754).

27. If Columbia has to sell pictures singly it will have to go through many more sales campaigns each year and increase its personnel, all at a substantial increase in overhead (1749-50). The exhibitors throughout the country generally have accepted block booking as an advantageous form of purchasing pictures and they desire to continue to purchase their pictures by block booking, as it gives them an assurance of product (1737, 1760, 2018); and exhibitors ever since the Consent Decree have demanded the restoration of block booking with respect to the defendants, MGM, RKO, Twentieth Century-Fox, [fol. 3820] Warner and Paramount and have voiced great dissatisfaction in their conventions and meetings with the sale of pictures in small blocks of five or less (1761-3, 1789-91). There is no proof in this record that block booking violates the Sherman Act or that it is in restraint of trade or commerce.

28. Columbia and Universal under their respective contracts (2019) give a substantial degree of selectivity to their exhibitors when they sell their pictures in block (2017-8) and they give a greater degree of selectivity to the independents than to the affiliated exhibitors (1750). In this manner the exhibitor is protected against having bad pictures foisted upon him.

29. Columbia gives film rental adjustments to all of its exhibitor customers, and in fact, gives greater adjustments to independents than it does to affiliates (1757).

30. A great deal of Columbia's product is sold to the great mass of theatres in small towns on double features (1758).

31. Block booking has been a common method of selling pictures; it reduces selling expenses, but does not freeze pictures and inventories, and keeps them moving off the shelves as rapidly as they are produced; it creates a ready market for the producers and enables them to invest their capital with some reasonable hope of recoupment; and is a form of selling which the exhibitors desire to continue, as it assures them a ready market (2018) and relieves them of the burden, time and expense of making individual deals for each picture which they exhibit. There is no proof in this record that any exhibitor was ever hurt or injured in his business or property by reason of block booking.

33. The abolition of block booking in this industry places Columbia at an economic disadvantage as against all other producers of motion pictures who own theatres, because the defendants who own theatres have a ready market for their pictures and may to some extent reduce the gamble and hazard of production, whereas defendant, Columbia, and other producers similarly situated have no ready market, so that in effect the abolition of block booking sought by the Government is a plain case of discrimination in favor of the defendants herein who own their own theatres, and far from freeing the market for competition, the net result will be just the opposite.

34. Block booking has been found to be a perfectly legal practice by the courts in Westway Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Company, Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount, and United States v. Crescent and there is no decision by the Supreme Court which has ever condemned it.

Conclusions of Law

35. The combination or conspiracy alleged in the Complaint as to Columbia has not been established. The Columbia did not at any time during the period involved in this case, combine with the other defendants or any of their affiliates unreasonably to restrain Interstate trade or commerce in motion picture films or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the distribution of motion picture films in the United States of America.

36. A Decree should be entered herein dismissing the complaint against Columbia.

Defendant, Columbia, cannot enter into any arbitration plan or scheme as suggested by the opinion and by the Decree proposed by the five major defendants.

Readjustment Period

With respect to master agreements or franchise agreements, Columbia respectfully asks that this Court grant it until at least January 1st, 1947 in order to abrogate these agreements. It will need that time as a minimum.

With respect to readjusting itself to selling pictures singly, Columbia will require at least a year from July 1st, that is to say, until July 1st, 1947, in order to give itself an adequate supply of pictures and create an inventory, and particularly in order to finance itself for that purpose. While the Government has consented to January 1st, 1947, we feel that that is insufficient, and the Government is somewhat arbitrary in seeking to compel Columbia to go into this new method on such short notice. The few months additional that Columbia seeks can in no wise impose any hardship upon the industry, because block booking, after all, has been a uniform business practice in the industry for over twenty years, and no reason exists why Columbia should be penalized under these circumstances. We ask that somewhere in this Decree there should be an automatic provision for this extension period for readjustment with respect to the matters outlined hereinabove.

Blind Selling

Cancellation privileges or selectivity in such cases should be limited to not more than twenty per cent., instead of twenty-five per cent., as proposed in the opinion of the Court. We think that the percentage should be reduced so as to give defendant, Columbia, and other producers similarly situated some protection against having a great deal of their pictures thrown back at them.

[fol. 3823] Booking Combines

We should like to have the Court insert somewhere in its Decree a provision enjoining all the defendants:

> "From offering films for license in the future to any agent who is acting for any group of exhibitors, independent or affiliated, in which he has no proprietary interest."

While the Decree as presently proposed by the Government may be open to the construction that booking combines throughout the country cannot impose their restraints upon these defendants under the proposed method of selling picture by picture and theatre by theatre, we think that there is too much ambiguity in the Decree at present with respect to the above situation. The evidence clearly shows that in addition to the affiliates there are unaffiliated circuits and even booking combinations throughout the country. No reason exists why they should have any special immunity. It is therefore requested that the above provision in the Decree be inserted so that it will catch them.

Respectfully submitted, Schwartz & Frohlich, Solicitors for Defendant Columbia. Louis D. Frohlich, Arthur Schwartz, Irving Moross, Max H. Rose, of Counsel.

SUPPLEMENTAL MEMORANDUM OF COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION ON FINDINGS AND DECREE—October 16, 1946

The Government served its proposed decree on October 7, 1946, in which it has further sought to restrict the selling of motion pictures by the defendant distributors. Columbia takes exception particularly to paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 of Section II. These paragraphs read as follows:

"8. From performing or entering into any license in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. Licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the licenses for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given, by [fol. 3825] the licensor, the right to reject 25% of such pictures not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within 10 days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it.

"9. From licensing any film more than six months in advance of its release.

"10. From offering films for license in the future for exhibition in any theatre not its own in any manner except the following:

(a) A license to exhibit each film released for public exhibition shall be offered upon reasonable terms for some run to the operator of each theatre which desires to exhibit it;

(b) Where a run is desired upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, it shall be offered to the competing exhibitors involved having a theatre adequate to show the picture upon such a run and granted to the highest responsible bidder, provided that such exclusive run does not unreasonably restrict competition in the area covered.

(c) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatsoever;

(d) Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture; and

(e) Each license shall specify a date of availability of a print for the run licensed and provide that such run shall commence within 30 days after such availability.

Attention is called to paragraph 8, where the exhibitor is given the right to reject 25% of pictures not previously [fol. 3826] trade shown. In our earlier memorandum we called the Court's attention to the fact that this percentage was too high, and should in no event exceed 20%. We believe that the distributor is entitled to as much protection as the exhibitor, and giving the exhibitor that substantial rejection right practically places the distributor at his mercy and can result in nothing less than reduced production, which neither Columbia nor the Government wants. Apparently the Government seeks to encourage production so as to make the greatest number of pictures available to exhibitors, particularly independent exhibitors. In the interests of increased production and availability of pictures to the greatest number of exhibitors, we believe that this percentage should be reduced to at least 20% at most, and if possible, to a smaller percentage.

In any event, it is the smaller companies like Columbia which will be adversely affected by so substantial a percentage as 25%. It is these companies which produce a great proportion of the second feature pictures; this percentage penalizes them in favor of the five major defendants, who, since the Consent Decree, have been selling upon the basis of trade showing, and will in all probability continue to do so.

Paragraph 9, which seeks to prohibit the licensing of a film more than six months in advance of its release, is an unfair and burdensome provision injected at the last moment by the Government, (it did not appear in the former draft of the decree) and is thoroughly inconsistent with the provisions of the proposed decree and of the opinion, which permits distributors like Columbia to sell their pictures in blocks, providing each picture is sold on a separate basis. Clearly, under the opinion and the proposed decree, Columbia is permitted to sell its season's product providing each picture is sold separately, bargained for separately, priced separately and competitive bidding has been had separately. [fol. 3827] Of what earthly use is that provision to Columbia if it must come within the restraint of this six months' provision? Pictures take a considerable time in the making, there are delays in production; it is impossible sometimes to secure the proper artists; stories have to be rewritten; all sorts of elements arise that delay production, and as a result it is impossible to foretell with any degree of accuracy when a given picture will be released. That is the experience of the entire industry, and the Government is well aware of it. It pretends that it needs the six months' provision in order to prevent pictures being kept off the market, and potential competitors given an opportunity to bid for the product. That is a complete sham, because each competitor has already had an opportunity to compete for each of these pictures. Consequently, this is nothing but an indirect attempt on the part of the Government to take away from Columbia its right to sell all of its product at the beginning of the season, and to make it impossible to carry out what the Court is willing to grant and what the Government itself has not complained of.

Moreover, this clause places Columbia in a very disadvantageous economic position as against the Big Five. Those companies have large inventories of pictures; they have had many artists and directors under contract, and they made a great many pictures which are on the shelves ready to be released. As previously pointed out, Columbia is not in that favorable position. It has not had the capital to build up a large inventory, so that it cannot compete with the Big Five regardless of the additional advantage which the Big Five have with their own theatres.

In addition to these elements, this clause would require Columbia to embark upon a system of exploitation which is burdensome and expensive; it would have to double its selling campaign and its costs of exploitation; and the same holds true of every little producing company. Consequently, it becomes apparent that the Government by the insertion [fol. 3828] of this provision, is either knowingly or unknowingly placing a terrific burden upon the smaller companies, and advantaging the Big Five with their huge inventories and capital investment.

Paragraph 10, Subdivision (b), is bad for the reason that it is unclear, vague and indefinite and is susceptible of many conflicting constructions. Particularly bad is the provision that an exclusive run must not unreasonably restrict competition in the area covered. In other words, Columbia on the one hand is given the right to grant an exclusive run to the highest bidder in a given territory. On the other hand, Columbia is required now to ascertain whether by giving the exhibitor such exclusive run it is unreasonably restraining competition in that area. How may Columbia determine that, particularly in a large city where there are four or five hundred theatres, like New York City? What is the area which is covered, and how is Columbia to determine whether the giving of that run for that picture in that area will restrain competition? This clause simply places a distributor like Columbia at the complete mercy of the Government, which may come in every day in the week and claim that Columbia has violated the decree. We think that that is an extremely loose clause and would result in making it impossible to license anyone for an exclusive run in an area except at the extreme hazard of being charged with violating the decree. In other words, the Government is indirectly seeking to prevent the granting of licenses for an exclusive run, which has been one of its avowed aims. It hopes to accomplish this by placing Columbia, for one, at the Government's mercy in every area where there are substantial competing theatres for an exclusive run.

Furthermore, as a practical matter, all exclusive contracts restrain competition to some extent and the line between reasonable and unreasonable restraint is so nebulous that it is unfair to make a distributor judge, at his peril, [fol. 3829] where the line is drawn, particularly in cases like this where Columbia has many thousands of contracts in competitive areas each year.

Moreover, the practical result of operating under this section might be that Columbia would be compelled to accept less money for its pictures, because it might have to turn down the highest bidder.

The Government pretends that it wants auction block selling, but it ties a long string to it which practically prevents Columbia from selling to the highest bidder, except at its own peril. That situation is one that should not be tolerated. If there is to be auction block selling, let's have auction block selling and not a pretended selling; at least let us have such selling without any unfair restrictions placed upon it.

Moreover, every exhibitor in the territory is at least entitled to some run, as provided in paragraph 10, Subdivision (a). If Columbia gives one exhibitor the first run, the competing exhibitor, who has not bid high enough, is still entitled to get a subsequent run and can bid for that. Therefore, it is unnecessary to put in the restriction which is contained in the provisio at the end of Subdivision (b).

Paragraph 10, Subdivision (c)—Under this paragraph apparently all that Columbia could consider would be the price as bid between the competing theatres. We believe that price should not be the only criterion upon which to base a license. There are other criteria of even greater importance. Some theatres by their prestige, location, clientele and showmanship enhance the value of a picture, and give it prestige and standing which result ultimately in greater income throughout the particular territory, as well as in the country. Some theatres would hurt the prestige of the picture. Why shall not Columbia, at least, have the privilege of protecting its revenue on an overall basis by giving consideration as well to those elements in addition to the actual price bid?

[fol. 3830] Paragraph 10, Subdivision (e) is an impracticable provi on. It is utterly impossible to make a contract with an exhibitor for a second run or a subsequent run under this clause because there is no way of telling in advance when the first run will be sold, or having been sold, when it will be over. The actual opening date of a first run can never be fixed with any certainty, because the theatre may be holding over a prior picture on an extended run, and cannot be in a position to take the first run until that prior picture has exhausted its run. That may take weeks and weeks, and frequently does take such period of time. Consequently, this clause would limit Columbia to making only first run contracts for obviously it may not make contracts for second or subsequent runs until the first run picture has been played and the run completed. That seriously cripples Columbia's operations, and would cause endless confusion. It would make it impossible to have an orderly exploitation of the picture with first and subsequent runs in any given territory, because no one can ascertain what the date of availability would be for subsequent runs.

Moreover, this clause would as a practical matter destroy all clearances, because regardless of the amount of clearance given, whether reasonable or unreasonable, any subsequent run theatre would be entitled to play the picture within thirty days after the date of availability for the run licensed. Inasmuch as the Court in its opinion has declared that reasonable clearance is legal and may still be given by distributors, and the Government has also concurred and acquiesced in that position, we believe that this subdivision (e) is of no purpose and can help nobody, except to completely confuse all proper clearance arrangements which will be entered into.

Section VI—Paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 of Section II are under this clause made operative January 1st, 1947. We again urge that Columbia should be given at least until [fol. 3831] July 1st, 1947 within which to bring itself within the new and radical change in its selling operations.

It had been contemplated, as we understood it, that there would be some agreement between the Government and the defendants with respect to the form of decree. That apparently is a forlorn hope. We are now down towards the end of October. The decree may not be signed for a few weeks. That would give Columbia only four or five weeks within which to change its method of operation, and to attempt to obtain some backlog or inventory with which to operate. It is impossible to do that within this short period of time. The period down to July 1st is an absolute necessity to prevent this company from being hurt by this change of condition, and we think the Government has been rather arbitrary and unfair in insisting on an immediate change of so radical a nature on such short notice.

We believe that the above clauses are bad, and that they are a further restriction upon the plaintiff's copyrights, and are a complete destruction of the exclusive rights which are granted to plaintiff under the Copyright Act.

We believe that this Court, sitting as a Court of Equity to enjoin violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, may not as part of its relief destroy the exclusive monopoly inherent in the ownership of these copyrights.

The Copyright Act does not restrict the time within which a proprietor may license his work, nor the manner in which it may be licensed, nor the person to whom it may be licensed, nor the terms upon which it may be licensed. Nor is the copyright proprietor required to license the work at all. Licensing the work is not a condition for registration. Publication with notice is all that is required. That unrestricted right may only be regulated where there is a combination with respect to a group of copyright owners; but where that combination has been enjoined, as is done by this [fol. 3832] decree, and each distributor licenses his work alone and separately and not in combination or conspiracy, he should be permitted to enjoy to the fullest extent the monopoly conferred upon him by the Copyright Act.

The Government by its first decree of August 15th, 1946, inserted provisions which were deemed objectionable because they conflicted with the monopoly of the Copyright Act. We so pointed out to this Court, and the Government received a copy of our brief. Thereafter the Government by this Proposed Decree (October 7, 1946) has attempted to go even further in imposing more rigorous and restrictive provisions.

Indeed, the Government frankly admits that it seeks a compulsory license provision which this Court by judicial fiat is to engraft upon the Copyright Law. On page 9 of its memorandum in support of its findings, the Government says:

> "We have also modified the auction selling method proposed by the Court to provide for the compulsory licensing of some run upon reasonable terms * * *. The 'some run' provision may, we think, be analogized to compulsory patent licensing on reasonable royalties—relief which has in the past been granted against defendants which had used illegal restrictive licensing practices similar to those involved here."

The Government cites no case in support of its startling statement although it speaks of such relief having been granted in the past. In a footnote, however, it refers to Section VI of the Consent Decree in this case.

But consent of the parties is not a precedent nor a substitute for judicial mandate. The Government can cite no case, because, there is no case which supports this fantastic claim.

The whole theory of reasonable royalties in patents was recently expounded in Widenski v. Shapiro, Bernstein Com- pany, 147 Fed. (2nd) 909. In that case a copyright pro-[fol. 3833] prietor of a musical composition had obtained a decree for injunction and $250 minimum damage against a tavern keeper who had unlawfully performed the composition (54 Fed. Supp. 780). He raised the point that inasmuch as the defendant had been previously offered a license for $90.00 per year, such license fee was analogous to the "established license" or to the "reasonable royalty" which is given to patent owners in infringement suits when they are unable to prove actual damage or to find any profits. The plaintiff there claimed that the rule of established or reasonable royalty which prevailed in patent cases was a substitute or a makeshift device, because the patent statutes contain no provision for statutory damage; and that inasmuch as the Copyright Law provides for statutory damages (17 U. S. C. A. Sec. 25), there was no occasion for applying such rule in copyright cases, since in the absence of actual damage or profits, the prevailing copyright proprietor could nevertheless secure statutory damage. The Circuit Court of Appeals sustained that claim. Judge Woodbury, in his opinion, said:

> "It is indicated in the case last cited and established in Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Shakespeare Co., 141 F. (2d) 916, 919, and the cases cited therein, that proof of either established or reasonable royalties may be resorted to in patent cases only when the patentee is unable to make satisfactory proof of his actual damage and the actual profits of the infringer. That is to say, a plaintiff in a patent case, if he prevails on the issue of infringement, may recover upon the basis of an established or reasonable royalty only after he has failed to prove satisfactorily his own loss and the infringer's profits. Thus the royalty rule provides successful plaintiffs in patent suits who have been harmed but cannot prove either their actual damages or the defendant's actual profits with a means to es-[fol. 3834]. cape the hollow victory of an award of purely nominal damages. But the Copyright Act itself makes provision for similarly situated plaintiffs in copyright cases in the 'inlieu' clause of §25(b), a provision not found in the corresponding section of the Patent Law, (35 U. S. C. §70), and from this we conclude that it is a substitute for the established or reasonable royalty rule applied in patent cases."

It is manifest, therefore, that so far as copyrights are concerned, the Courts may not impose any established or reasonable license fee as a measure of damage, but are compelled to award either actual damage or statutory damage, or profits.

Consequently, the Government's argument falls flat.

Moreover, the Empire-Hartford case pointed out that even so far as patents are concerned, there is no such thing as a compulsory license. The rule of established or reasonable royalty is purely a rule of damage in an infringement suit. Congress alone would have the right to legislate a compulsory license provision; and, as pointed out in the Empire-Hartford case, Congress since 1879 has repeatedly refused to do so.

On what theory, therefore, does the Government justify these provisions in paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 of Section II of its decree with respect to copyrighted works.

It is apparently the Government's aim to destroy the monopoly of copyright by the ingenious device of these restrictive paragraphs above quoted. We believe that the Supreme Court would never sustain a decree which contained such provisions, and we believe that these restrictions fall within the condemnation of the Hartford-Empire case and should be deleted from any decree signed by this Court.

The Government's Findings are not Findings in any sense of the word, but are nothing more than a paraphrase of the opinion in part. We believe that a Finding of Fact should not be a legal argument but should be a plain description of facts which were proven on the trial, particularly as in this case a great deal of the proof came in without contradiction or impeachment.

The Government's Findings on block booking and blind selling (Findings Nos. 32, 33 and 34) illustrate the defect in its Findings. The Government completely overlooks the proof on the trial, closes its eyes to the testimony of witnesses who took the stand, and then calmly proceeds to speak about non-existent facts. It says, "Because of complaints of block booking and blind selling, etc., etc." Where is there any proof in this record of such complaints? Indeed, the proof is to the contrary, and to the effect that exhibitors have demanded and still demand block booking.

What kind of a Finding of Fact is it which reverses the testimony?

The Government paraphrases the opinion in Finding 34 to the extent that trade shows which are designed to prevent blind selling are poorly attended by exhibitors. The only inference to be drawn from that fact (which is proven in the record without contradiction) is that exhibitors do not want and do not require trade showings. They evidently prefer to buy their pictures without seeing them in advance. Who, then, has been hurt by the practice of Block Booking, and why should it be stricken down and why should not Columbia's Findings be adopted?

We have not been furnished with a copy of the proposed Decree and Findings by the five major defendants, which we understand have been filed and served on October 7th, 1946, so we are unable to comment thereon.

[fol. 3836] We respectfully submit that paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 of Section II of the Proposed Decree should be eliminated and Columbia's Findings of Fact should be adopted by this Court.

Respectfully submitted, Schwartz & Frohlich, Solicitors for Defendant Columbia.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law—December 31, 1946

This action having been duly tried and the proofs and arguments of the respective parties having been duly heard and considered, this court, having filed its opinion herein dated June 11, 1946, does hereby find and decide as follows:

Findings of Fact

1. The following are definitions of terms used in these findings and in the judgment to be entered hereon:

Block-booking—The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition [fol. 3838] that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period.

Clearance—The period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

Exchange District—An area in which an office is maintained by a distributor for the purpose of soliciting license agreements for the exhibition of its pictures in theatres situated throughout the territory served by the exchange and for the physical distribution of such films throughout this territory.

Feature—Any motion picture, regardless of topic, the length of the film of which is in excess of 4,000 feet.

Formula Deal—A licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross.

Franchise—A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of features released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

Independent—A producer, distributor, or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendant in this action or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant.

Master Agreement—A licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal", covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit.

Motion Picture Season—A one-year period beginning about September 1 of each year.

[fol. 3839] Road-show—A public exhibition of a feature in a limited number of theatres, in advance of its general release, at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in the areas where they are located.

Runs—The successive exhibitions of a feature in a given area, first-run being the first exhibition in that area, second run being the next subsequent, and so on, and shall include also successive exhibitions in different theatres, even though such theatres may be under a common ownership or management.

Trade-Showing—A private exhibition of a feature prior to its release for public exhibition.

Paramount Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at 1501 Broadway, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

3. Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Paramount Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1501 Broadway, New York, New York, and is engaged in the distribution branch of the industry.

4. In 1916 or 1917, a group of exhibitors which controlled many of the then best theatres throughout the country organized First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc. Although this corporation was initially organized to function as a film buying combine, it evolved into a film producing company first by financing the production of pictures by others for exhibition in the theatres of its members and finally by producing its own motion pictures.

[fol. 3840] 5. The members of this First National group, consisting of many of the most important exhibitors in the United States controlling many of the best theatres, became franchise holders of the distributing company which they formed. They acquired not only the right to exhibit in their own theatres the pictures produced and distributed by First National, but also they each obtained the right to sub-franchise other exhibitors in their respective territories. In a short time there were some 3500 franchise holders, representing as many or more theatres.

6. First National soon began to negotiate for the services of well-known stars and directors in the employ of other producers, including Paramount, and the members of First National began to refuse to exhibit Paramount Films.

Such well known stars as Mary Pickford and Norma Talmadge went over to the First National Group.

7. Many of the theatres owned by members of First National had, for a long time prior to 1918, exhibited Paramount pictures. The formation and growth of First National gradually cut down the number of Paramount pictures exhibited in the theatres of the First National group. By 1919 Paramount faced a situation where a group of owners of many of the best theatres in the large cities, many of whom had been its customers in the past, had combined together for co-operative buying and had expanded into a strong organization which distributed its own pictures and threatened to supply its members with enough pictures to permit them to operate without using any pictures of other producers, including Paramount.

8. In these circumstances Paramount determined to acquire interests in theatres of its own so that it might assure itself of outlets for Paramount productions. Prior to the fall of 1917 Paramount had no theatre interests. Between 1917 and 1919 it acquired an interest in two theatres in New York City as show windows, to replace the [fol. 3841] Strand Theatre which had gone over to the First National Group. During that year in conjunction with its representative in the South, it formed Southern Enterprises, Inc., which acquired various theatres in the South. At about the same time Paramount acquired a 50% interest in the Black chain of theatres in New England.

9. In January, 1932, Paramount went into equity receivership in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. It stayed in equity receivership until March, 1933, when it went into voluntary bankruptcy. It remained in bankruptcy until June, 1934, when upon passage of Section 77B of the Bankruptcy Law, it petitioned for reorganization. It was finally reorganized under its present name in June, 1935. During these years various companies operating theatres in which Paramount was interested were themselves the subject of bankruptcy or receivership proceedings.

10. Some of the theatre interests which Paramount held at the time of the trial of this action had been acquired and were wholly owned by it either directly or indirectly through subsidiary companies prior to its bankruptcy and reorganization. In the course of its reorganization, some of its partly owned theatre interests were created, i. e., in some instances the plan of reorganization approved by this court provided for the sale or other disposition by Paramount of a partial interest (sometimes amounting to 50%, sometimes more and sometimes less) in theretofore wholly owned theatre operating companies, or companies holding legal or equitable interests in theatres or theatre operating companies. The result was the creation of many of Paramount's present partly owned theatre interests.

11. In the course of the reorganization proceedings Paramount lost its interests in some theatres and also changed its relationship with respect to interests in some of its [fol. 3842] theatre operating companies. The effect of these proceedings and the policy of decentralization inaugurated in the course thereof, was that in some instances Paramount disposed of a partial interest in companies theretofore wholly owned.

12. Loew's Incorporated is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 1540 Broadway, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

13. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

14. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the production and distribution branch of the industry.

15. Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation was a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and was engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures prior to its dissolution on September 29, 1944. Approximately 99% of its common stock and 33% of its preferred stock were held by by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation.

[fol. 3843] 16. RKO Proctor Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

17. RKO Midwest Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

18. RKO was organized in 1928 by Radio Corporation of America largely for the purpose of obtaining an effective means of developing the use of its motion picture sound recording and reproduction devices in the motion picture production and exhibition fields.

19. At the time of its organization, RKO secured production and distribution facilities by merger with a small company, FBO Productions, Inc., which had limited production facilities and a national distributing organization. RKO invested substantial sums to modernize these facilities.

20. The formation of RKO introduced a new and substantial competitive factor in the production and distribution of motion pictures.

21. During its initial organizational period, RKO acquired interests in a number of companies operating circuits of vaudeville theatres.

22. RKO went into receivership in 1933 and continued in receivership and reorganization until 1940. At the time of its receivership RKO operated considerably more theatres [fol. 3844] than its present total of 106. During the receivership it lost 57 theatres.

23. The organization of RKO did increase competition in each of the three branches of the industry.

24. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, having its principal place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

25. On April 4, 1923, the four Warner brothers, Harry M., Jack L., Albert, and Sam, transferred their business of production and distribution of motion pictures to a corporation known as Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as Warner).

26. Beginning in 1925, Warner began the work of developing sound pictures under license and agreements from Western Electric, culminating in the production of such sound pictures as "The Jazz Singer", starring Al Jolson, in October, 1927, and the first 100% talking picture "The Lights of New York" in the summer of 1928.

27. The Stanley Company of America had in 1928 and for a year prior thereto about 250 theatres situated principally in and around Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

28. Negotiations were begun with the view of exchanging stock of Warner for the stock of Stanley Company of America. This transaction was consummated late in 1928.

29. With the acquisition of the stock of Stanley Company of America, Warner acquired 250 theatres which could be immediately equipped with sound installation.

[fol. 3845] 30. In the year and nine months immediately following the acquisition of the stock of Stanley Company of America Warner secured in a similar fashion several other circuits of theatres owning theatres in the same general locality and a smaller number of theatres scattered in various other parts of the country.

31. In 1931 Warner had an interest in 591 theatres, the largest number of theatres in which Warner has ever had an interest.

32. Today, the Warner companies have an interest in 547 theatres—a net reduction of 44 from its peak holdings of 591 in 1931.

33. First National Pictures, Inc., a corporation engaged in the production and distribution of silent motion pictures had been organized as far back as 1917 by approximately 24 exhibitors on a cooperative basis for the basis of acquiring film of first quality for exhibition in their own theatres, as well as for distribution by them for other theatres in the respective territories in which they operated.

34. In 1928 Stanley Company of America owned ⅓ of the stock of First National Pictures, Inc., all the stock of First National Pictures, Inc. being subject to a voting trust.

35. Warner acquired as part of the Stanley Company of America transaction in 1928, ⅓ of the stock of First National Pictures, Inc.

36. At or about the time of the acquisition of the Stanley Company of America stock, or shortly thereafter, Warner purchased another ⅓ of the stock of First National Pictures, Inc. from other First National Pictures, Inc. stockholders.

[fol. 3846] 37. Subsequently, in 1929, Warner acquired the remaining ⅓ of the stock of First National Pictures, Inc. from defendant, Twentieth Century-Fox.

38. Vitagraph, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures. On July 20, 1944, its name was changed to Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation.

39. Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and, among other things, acts as booking agent for the exhibition interests of the said Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

40. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, having its principal place of business at 444 West 56th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or Associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

41. Twentieth Century-Fox produces its features in its own studio in Los Angeles, California, distributes them in this country through thirty-one branches or exchanges which it operates in the principal centers of population, and licenses its features for exhibition in its own and other theatres.

42. Twentieth Century-Fox, acquired its initial interest in theatres through the purchase of stock in corporations then engaged in operating theatres. Since such original [fol. 3847] acquisition, it has acquired additional interests in theatres, some of which were acquired in competition with other defendants and with independent circuits and some of which are new theatres constructed by it.

43. National Theatres Corporation is owned and controlled by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 2854 Hudson Boulevard, Jersey City, New Jersey, and is a holding company for the theatre interests of the said Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

44. Columbia Pictures Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

45. Screen Gems, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Columbia Pictures Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, with a place of business at 700 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, California, and is engaged in the business of producing motion pictures.

46. Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Columbia Pictures Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Louisiana, with a place of business at 150 South Liberty Street, New Orleans, Louisiana, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

47. Universal Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New [fol. 3848] York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries On May 25, 1943, its name was changed to Universal Pictures Company, Inc., when a subsidiary of the same name was merged into it, but Universal Corporation was the surviving corporation.

48. The corporation named in the complaint as Universal Pictures Company, Inc., was a subsidiary corporation controlled by Universal Corporation, which was engaged in the business of producing motion pictures, prior to its merger into Universal Corporation on May 25, 1943.

49. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

50. The Universal group of defendants at the time of the trial consisted of the following corporations: (1) Universal Pictures Company, Inc. (hereinafter sometimes called Universal Pictures), a Delaware Corporation with its principal office in New York, N. Y., engaged in the business of producing motion pictures and distributing the same through wholly-owned subsidiaries; (2) Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. (hereinafter sometimes called Universal Film Exchanges), a Delaware corporation, with its principal office in New York, N. Y., engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures throughout the United States (except for the Metropolitan District of New York City), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Universal Pictures; (3) Big U Film Exchange, Inc. (hereinafter sometimes called Big U), a New York corporation, with its principal office in New York, N. Y., engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures throughout the Metropolitan District of New York [fol. 3849] City, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Universal Pictures. The term "Universal" as used herein means any or all of the Universal defendants.

51. Prior to May 25, 1943, the name of Universal Pictures Company, Inc. was Universal Corporation, incorporated in Delaware in 1936. It owned approximately 92% of the outstanding common stock of a Delaware corporation which was incorporated in the year 1925 and was also known as Universal Pictures Company, Inc. Said corporation last-named had its principal office in New York, N. Y., and was engaged in the business of producing motion pictures and distributing the same through its subsidiaries. It owned all of the outstanding stock of Universal Film Exchange Inc. and 20% of the outstanding common stock of Big U Film Exchange Inc. The other 80% of said stock was owned by Universay Corporation. On May 25, 1943, Universal Pictures Company, Inc. (Delaware, 1925) was merged into Universal Corporation (the surviving corporation), and the name of the surviving corporation was changed to Universal Pictures Company, Inc.

52. Big U Film Exchange, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

53. United Artists Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in distribution of motion pictures in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

54. During the entire period in question United Artists Corporation distributed photoplays in the United States of [fol. 3850] America that were produced by David O. Selznick, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Hunt Stromberg, William Cagney, Bing Crosby, Edward Small, Sol Lesser, Lester Cowan, Jack Skirball, Benedict Bogeaus, Seymour Nebenzal, Jules Levey, David Loew, Arnold Pressburger, Charles R. Rogers, Andrew Stone, Constance Bennet, Howard Hughes, Preston Sturgis, J. Arthur Rank, Edward Golden, or corporations with which the aforesaid individuals were associated and other independent producers.

55. United Artists Corporation maintains 26 branches or exchanges located throughout the United States, and through these facilities it distributes and has distributed all of the product handled by it during the period in question.

56. Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and their respective distribution and exhibition subsidiaries are the five major defendants.

57. As between the eight defendants, Paramount, Loew's, Fox, RKO, Warner, Columbia, United Artists and Universal, there are no officers or directors in common, and none of said defendants owns any controlling stock or other securities in any other of said defendants.

58. Neither of the defendants Columbia, Universal and United Artists owns any theatres.

59. There exists active competition among the defendants and others in the production of motion pictures.

60. None of the defendants has monopolized or attempted to monopolize or contracted or combined or conspired to monopolize or to restrain trade or commerce in any part of the business of producing motion pictures.

[fol. 3851] 61. In the distribution of feature motion pictures no film is sold to the exhibitor; the right to exhibit under copyright is licensed.

62. In licensing features, each of the distributor defendants has agreed with each of its respective licensees that the licensee should charge no less than a stated admission price during the exhibition of the feature licensed.

63. The minimum admission prices included in licenses of each of the eight distributor-defendants for any given theatre are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitor.

64. The defendants' licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all of the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors. Thus there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both the distributors and exhibitors were involved. The licenses required existing admission price schedules to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction. In the case of such exceptional features as "Gone With The Wind", "For Whom The Bell Tolls", "Wilson", and "Song of Bernadette", licensed for exhibition prior to general release and as to which the distributors were not satisfied with current prices, they would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised.

65. The defendants granting film licenses have agreed with their licensees to a system which determines minimum admission prices in all theatres where feature motion pictures licensed by them are exhibited. In this way are controlled the prices to be charged for most of the feature motion pictures exhibited either by the defendants or by independents within the United States.

66. All of the five major defendants have a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which [fol. 3852] they own theatres and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing films to exhibitors in those areas. Even if the licenses were at flat rate, a failure to require their licensees to maintain fixed prices would leave them free for lowering the current charge to decrease through competition the income to the licensor on theatres in the neighborhood. The whole system presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas. There exists great similarity, and in many cases identity, in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatres in the licenses of all of the defendants.

67. The major defendants made operating agreements as exhibitors with each other and with independent exhibitors in which joint operation of certain theatres covered by the agreements is provided and minimum admission prices to be charged are either stated therein or are to be jointly determined by other means. These agreements show the express intent of the major defendants to maintain prices at artificial levels.

68. Certain master agreements and franchises between various of the defendants in their capacities as distributors and various of the defendants in their capacities as exhibitors stipulate minimum admission prices often for dozens of theatres owned by an exhibitor-defendant in a particular area in the United States.

69. Licenses granted by one defendant to another disclose the same inter-relationship among the defendants. Each of the five major defendants as an exhibitor has been licensed by the other seven defendants as distributors to exhibit the pictures of the latter at specified minimum admission prices. RKO; Loew's, Warner, Paramount, and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum admission prices specified, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and Columbia, Universal, [fol. 3853] and United Artists, in requiring the maintenance of minimum admission prices in their licenses granted to these exhibitor-defendants, have participated in that system.

70. The distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices.

71. In agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's feature in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum admission prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby erected.

prices than in the subsequent runs. The reason for this is that if 10,000 people of a city's population are ultimately to see the feature—no matter on what run—the gross revenue to be realized from their patronage is increased rela-[fol. 3854] tively to the increase in numbers seeing it in the higher-priced prior-run theatres. In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum admission prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible.

73. Among the provisions common to the licensing contracts of all the distributor-defendants are those by which the licensor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit a certain feature motion picture before a specified number of days after the last date of the exhibition therein licensed. This so-called period of "clearance" or "protection" is stated in the various licenses in differing ways; in terms of a given period between designated runs-in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified areas or towns; in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors; or in terms of combinations of these formulae.

74. The cost of each black and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800. Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs with a reasonable protection for the earlier runs is adopted in the way of clearance.

75. Without regard to period of clearance, licensing features for exhibition on different successive dates is essential in the distribution of feature motion pictures.

76. Either a license for successive dates, or one providing for clearance, permits the public to see the picture in a later exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates.

77. A grant of clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum admission prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration affords a fair protection of the interest [fol. 3855] of the licensor in the rental to be derived from the exhibition of the feature licensed, without unreasonably interfering with the interest of the public.

78. Clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. The practice is of proved utility in the motion picture industry and necessary for the reasonable conduct of the business.

79. The major defendants have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents.

80. Some licenses granted clearance to sell to all theatres which the exhibitor party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the exhibitor's theatre thereafter erected or opened. The purpose of this type of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive features normally entering into such determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor party to the agreement.

81. The distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearance for the theatres to which they license their films and the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system.

82. The defendants have acted in concert in their grant of run and clearance.

83. Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent run and the practice of clearance is so [fol. 3856] closely allied with that of run as to make findings on the one applicable to the other.

84. Both independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with the defendants, have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatre or theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures.

85. Competition can be introduced into the present system of fixed admission prices, clearances, and runs, by requiring a defendant-distributor when licensing its features to grant the license for each run at a reasonable clearance (if clearance is involved) to the highest bidder, if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable, the one offering the best terms shall receive the license. Thus, price fixing among the licensors or between a licensor and its licensees as well as the non-competitive clearance system may be terminated.

86. Formula deals have been entered into by Paramount and by RKO with independent and affilicated circuits. The circuit may allocate playing time and film rentals among the various theatres as it sees fit. Arrangements whereby all the theatres of a circuit are included in a single agreement, and no opportunity is afforded for other theatre owners to bid for the feature in their several areas, seriously and unreasonably restrain competition.

87. Loew's is not, and never has been, a party either as a distributor or as an exhibitor, to any "formula deal" license agreements.

[fol. 3857] 88. Master agreements which cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion, have been entered into by the distributor defendants and unreasonably restrain trade.

89. Franchises have been entered into by the distributor defendants, and unreasonably restrain trade, because they cover too long a period (more than one season), and also because they embrace all the features released by a given distributor.

90. Loew's today has outstanding no franchise agreements for any theatre in which it does not have an interest, and Loew's is not currently granting franchises. During its entire history Loew's, as a distributor, granted a total of 213 franchises, of which 154 were to independent theatres and only 59 to those in which any other producer-exhibitor had an interest.

91. Twentieth Century-Fox has not granted any franchises since June 6, 1940. In 1938-39, the motion picture season in which Twentieth Century-Fox had the greatest number of franchises outstanding, there were 400. Of these, 361 were with independent exhibitors.

92. During the period in question Universal entered into franchise agreements with 727 independent exhibitors and 43 affiliated exhibitors.

93. Block-booking, when the license of any feature is conditioned upon taking of other features, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single features on their individual merits.

94. For many years the distributor defendants, except United Artists Corporation, licensed their films in "blocks", [fol. 3858] or indivisible groups, before they had been actually produced. In such cases the only knowledge prospective exhibitors had of the films which they had contracted for was from a description of each picture by title, plot and players. In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any, though sometimes the exhibitor was given a right of subsequent cancellation for a certain number of pictures. Because of complaints of block booking and blind-selling based upon the supposed unfairness of contracts which often includes pictures the inferior quality of which could not be known, Sections III and IV of the consent decree required the five consenting distributors to trade-show their films before offering them for license and limited the number which might be included in any contract to five. More than one block of five, however, could be licensed where the contents of any had been trade-shown. While this restriction in the consent decree has now ceased by time limitation, the consenting distributors have continued to observed the restriction. The non-assenting distributors have retained up to the present time their previous methods of licensing in blocks, but have allowed their customers considerable freedom to cancel the license as to a percentage of the pictures contracted for.

95. United Artists did not at any time license the exhibition of its pictures in blocks but on the contrary licensed the exhibition of its pictures separately and individually.

96. During the period in question United Artists did not condition the licensing of any photoplay in any exhibitor's theatre upon that exhibitor's agreement to license other United photoplays for exhibition in said theatre.

97. Blind-selling is a practice whereby a distributor licenses a feature before the exhibitor is afforded an opportunity to view it.

98. Since the consent decree of November 20, 1940, the five major defendants have given each exhibitor, whether a defendant or independent, an opportunity at trade shows [fol. 3859] to view each feature before licensing it. In general, trade shows, which are designed to prevent blind-selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors.

99. During the 1943-44 season, the number of features distributed by eight distributor-defendants and the three other national distributors were as follows:

Distributor-defendants	No. of Films	Percentages of Total With "Westerns" Included	Percentages of Total With "Westerns" Excluded
Fox	33	8.31%	9.85%
Loew's	33	8.31%	9.85%
Paramount	31	7.81%	9.25%
RKO	38	9.57%	11.34%
Warner	19	4.79%	5.67%
Columbia	41	10.32%	12.24%
United Artists	16	4.04%	4.78%
Universal	49	12.34%	14.63%
Sub-total	260
Other National Distributors
Republic (29 features (30 "Westerns"		14.86%	8.66%
Monogram (26 features (16 "Westerns"		10.58%	7.76%
PRC (20 features (16 "Westerns"		9.07%	5.97%
		100%	100%
Total without Westerns	335

100. The percentage of features on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatre would be relatively small and in no-wise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition.

[fol. 3860] 101. Continuously since its organization RKO has distributed features for independent producers. The particular independent producers whose features have been distributed by RKO have varied from time to time. In the nine seasons ending 1943-44, 19.8% of the features distributed by RKO were independently produced, and 28.4% of RKO's gross receipts from domestic licenses of features was derived from such independently produced features.

102. It would be financially impossible for RKO to operate its theatres on features distributed by RKO alone.

103. Twentieth Century Fox produced less than 9 per cent of the total number of features nationally distributed in the United States during each year between 1936-37 and 1944-45.

104. Universal has customarily produced at its studios at Universal City, California, during each theatrical year (commencing on or about September 1st) between 45 and 50 feature-length motion picture photoplays, seven so-called Westerns, four Serials, 15 two-reel subjects, 30 single-reel subjects and 104 newsreels.

105. Said motion pictures were distributed by Universal and licensed for exhibition by motion picture theatres throughout the United States by means of a system of 31 exchanges located in various States in the United States, from the East Coast to the West Coast and from Canada to the Southern boundary. Universal also maintained a Home Office in the City of New York.

106. In marketing its motion pictures, Universal's usual and customary practice was to offer to license to exhibitors, by title and description as aforesaid, its entire line of pictures, consisting of feature-length motion picture photoplays, Westerns, short-subjects (consisting of serials and two-reel and one-reel pictures) and newsreels. In this way approximately 50 feature-length motion picture photoplays, a group of Westerns, short-subjects, two so-called "Special" [fol. 3861] photoplays, three features produced by independent producers, and newsreels, were offered to exhibitors by Universal each year.

106A. During recent years, in excess of 600 feature-length motion-picture photoplays were released each year in the United States, exclusive of foreign-made films. Universal releases of feature-length photoplays, including Westerns and so-called Marquee pictures, during said period, equalled approximately 8% of the total number of feature-length photoplays released in the United States each year.

107. During the period in question, United Artists Corporation distributed between 20 to 26 pictures a year when the corporation had a good year and has handled as low as 4 in distribution in a releasing season.

108. At no time during the period in question did United Artists distribute more than 5% of the feature photoplays American made and distributed in the United States of America and generally distributed less than 5% of such releases.

109. That in each distribution agreement with each producer using the facilities of United Artists for distribution among other things there appears substantially the following language:

"United agrees to devote its best efforts to the proper marketing and disposition of the motion pictures delivered hereunder in all the territories licensed hereunder wherein it customarily markets motion pictures, and to make such marketing as complete and efficient as practicable, so that the gross returns from the marketing of the product hereunder shall be as large as possible and at the same time consistent with the sound business policy of United.

"United will use its best efforts to procure prices, license fees and rentals in a fair and open market reasonably satisfactory to the Producer.

[fol. 3862] "Exhibition Contracts: The exhibition contracts for each of such motion pictures delivered hereunder shall be made separate and apart from the exhibition contract of any other motion picture marketed by United, with the exception that in territories other than the United States where it is customary to include more than one motion picture on a contract, the Producer authorizes United to market its product in accordance with that custom. In no event, however, shall any motion picture of the Producer be used to enforce the licensing, leasing or other disposition of any other motion picture marketed by United, and in such territory where it is the custom to include on one contract more than one motion picture United shall set out the respective license fees for each motion picture after the name of such motion picture.

"United agrees upon the written direction of Producer that United shall market wherever permissible the motion pictures designed by the Producer or its agent as a unit, and in such case such unit shall be licensed separate and apart from any other motion picture marketed by United, with the exception that in those countries where it is the custom to market all of the motion pictures on one contract, United shall adhere to the prevailing custom.

"The Producer shall have the right to designate a representative for the territories hereinafter specified. The Producer shall bear all the expenses of such representative. Such representative must have an office in the central location of such territory, and if so United shall submit to such representative for his approval or rejection all proposed written contracts with exhibitors for that territory. The territories and their central location are as follows:

Territory	Central Location
United States and Canada	New York
British Isles	London
Australia	Sydney

"Producer agrees that such submission shall not be necessary if made impractical by conditions beyond the control of United, such as conditions arising out of war.

[fol. 3863] "If the Producer has designated such a representative for any such territory, United shall submit for his approval or rejection each proposed written contract for the distributing, exhibiting or marketing of such Producer's motion pictures or any of them in the territory in which such representative is acting. No such contract shall be accepted by United if within three (3) succeeding business days following the date on which said proposed written contract has been received by the Producer or its representative the Producer or its representative shall return such proposed contract to United with its rejection noted thereon or appended thereto.

"Should the Producer or its representative reject any such proposed contract the Producer or its representative shall have fourteen (14) days from the date of rejection in which to obtain a more favorable contract. Should the Producer or its representative fail so to do the original contract shall ipso facto be deemed approved unless the Producer or its representative shall have designated its original rejection as final. No proposed contract on which the rejection has been designated as final shall be entered into by United.

"Should the Producer or its representative at any time agree in advance with United upon the rental terms or license fees for the distribution, exhibition or marketing of any motion picture in any specified theatre or situation, United shall not be obligated to submit the contract containing the terms so agreed upon to the Producer or its representative for approval."

110. Various contract provisions by which discriminations against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits were accomplished are: suspending the terms of a given contract, if a circuit theatre remains closed for more than eight weeks, and reinstating it without liability upon reopening; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films; allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played; granting moveovers and extended runs; granting road-[fol. 3864] show privileges; allowing overage and underage; granting unlimited playing time; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent producers; granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes. These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors.

111. The discriminations referred to in Finding 110 would appear to be impossible under a system where the exhibitors competing for a license to exhibit a given feature on a given run do so on a parity since the same offer must be made to all pro-pective exhibitors in each competitive area.

112. Agreements were made by the exhibitor-defendants with each other and their affiliates by which given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition with each other, were operated as a unit, or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors, and by which profits of the 'pooled'' theatres were divided among the exhibitors in or owners of such theatres according to pre-agreed percentages or otherwise. Some of the agreements provide that the parties thereto may not acquire other theatres in the competitive vicinity without first offering them for inclusion in the "pool". The result is to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of features which flow almost automatically to the theatres in the earnings of which they have a joint interest.

113. Other forms of operating agreements are between major defendants and independent exhibitors rather than between major defendants. The effect is to ally two or more theatres of different ownership into a coalition for the nulli-[fol. 3865] fication of competition between them and for their more effective competition against theatres not members of the "pool".

114. In certain other cases the operating agreements are accomplished by leases of theatres, the rentals being determined by a stipulated percentage of profits earned by the "pooled" theatres. This is but another means of carrying out the restraints found above.

115. Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, together with another exhibitor-defendant, in some cases in conjunction with independents. These joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively. When a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, such an interest is de minimis and only to be treated as inconsequential investment in exhibition.

116. When theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. The major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently.

117. Such joint interest as those described above in findings 112 through 116 exist in a great number of theatres, a summary of which is set forth in the following tabulation taken from RKO's Exhibit 11:

Theatres jointly owned with independents:

Paramount	993
Warner	20
Fox	66
RKO	187
Loew's	21

[fol. 3866] Theatres jointly owned by two defendants:

Paramount-Fox	6
Paramount-Loew's	14
Paramount-Warner	25
Paramount-RKO	150
Loew's RKO	3
Loew's Warner	5
Fox-RKO	1
Warner-RKO	10
Total	1,501 Theatres

Of the above theatres jointly owned with independents, the following number will not be affected by the decree, since the defendant or co-owning independent owns less than a 5% interest.

RKO	32
Total affected by the decree according to RKO's Exhibit 11	1,292 Theatres

118. In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion pictures theatres in the United States, of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137, or 17.35 percent. Of the latter, Paramount or its subsidiaries owned independently of the other defendants 1,395—a little less than half, or about 7.72 percent; Warner 501, or about 2.77 percent; Loew's 135, or about .74 percent; Fox 636, or about 3.52 percent; and RKO 109, or about .60 percent. There were 361 theatres, or about 2.00 percent, in which two or more of these defendants had joint interests, whether held [fol. 3867] directly or indirectly through stock ownership in the same corporation or through a lease or operating agreement. This tabulation excludes theatres connected with one or more of the defendants through film-buying or management contracts or through corporations in which a defendant owned an indirect minority stock interest. It includes all theatres in which each defendant otherwise owned a direct or indirect interest of any amount.

119. The present theatre holdings of the five defendant-exhibitors Paramount, Loew's, Fox, RKO and Warner, aggregate little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States, and by such theatre holdings alone the defendants do not and cannot collectively or individually, have a monopoly of exhibition.

120. On January 1, 1935, Loew's operated in the United States, 126 theatres. The first-run theatres, which are engaged to a large extent in exhibiting Loew's own product, Metro pictures, serve as "show-cases" for those pictures in the areas where the theatres are located.

121. The formation of RKO resulted in the conversion of vaudeville theatres acquired by it into motion picture theatres and thereby introduced new and substantial competition into the exhibition field in the cities in which each of these theatres was located.

122. Ownership and operation by RKO of theatres in certain principal cities of the United States enables RKO through the utilization of the facilities of such theatres to plan and direct the first exploitation of the features which it distributes in such areas in a more effective manner than is possible in areas where RKO does not operate theatres.

123. The successful exhibition of a feature in its initial runs in any area is widely publicized and closely observed by subsequent run exhibitors in that area and success in ex- [fol. 3868] ploiting a picture in such exhibitions produces increased revenue both for the distributor and for subsequent run exhibitors.

124. Each of the five major defendants is able to coordinate the initial exhibition of its features in its theatres with an extensive and accurately timed national advertising campaign.

125. Twentieth Century-Fox is interested in theatres in only 16 of the 92 cities having a population of over 100,000. In 12 of these 16 cities features of one or more defendants is licensed to independent first run exhibitors competing with Twentieth Century-Fox (New York, Seattle, Denver, Portland, Oakland, San Diego, Long Beach, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Spokane, Sacramento, and Kansas City, Kansas) as well as to other defendants having theatres in some of these cities. In three of the remaining four cities there is also first run competition from others of the defendants.

126. The 17.35% of theatres which comprise the five circuits of the major defendants pay from 35 to 54% of the total domestic film rental respectively received by the eight distributor defendants and 45% of the total domestic film rental received by all of said distributor-defendants. The five largest unaffiliated circuits together pay less than 5% of such rental.

127. The major defendants, as distributors, during the 1943-44 season, received from 71 to 81% of the film rental that was paid to all distributors by exhibitors affiliated with the five major defendants. The minor defendants received from 26 to 15% of such rental and the independent distributors from 2½ to 4½% of such rental.

128. During the 1943-44 season the eight distributor defendants received 45.2% of the total feature film rental, re-[fol. 3869] ceived by them, from theatres affiliated with the five major defendants; and 54.8% of such rental from other exhibitors.

129. In some situations where Paramount had theatre interests, other defendant distributors licensed their features to competing theatres and not to the Paramount theatres, and in some cases the operating companies in which Paramount was interested were not able to obtain the right to exhibit the features of some of the other defendant distributors.

130. Paramount features are licensed for exhibition in from 8,000 to 14,500 theatres in the United States annually. The number of licenses each year varies from feature to feature and from year to year.

131. In 21 of the 36 out of the 92 cities where Loew's operates theatres none of the other four producer-exhibitors licensed its features in the 1943-44 season for first-run exhibition in a Loew's theatre, to the extent of more than three features, the Loew's theatres' first-run exhibition being otherwise limited to its own features and those of non theatre-owning producers.

132. Over the 10 years from 1935 to 1945, the total number of features licensed by the other four theatre-owning distributors to Loew's first-run houses, decreased from 1382 to 998 and the features of non theatre-owning distributors, increased from 1201 to 1879.

133. In 1935, the other four theatre-owning distributors earned $2,611,986 from Loew's theatres and the non theatre-owning distributors earned $2,205,330 ($406,656 less). In 1944, the non theatre-owning distributors earned $5,261,116 in Loew's theatres, which was $419,477 more than the $4,841,639, earned in Loew's theatres in that year by the four other theatre-owning distributors.

[fol. 3870] 134. In 1944, the percentage of the total film rental paid by Loew's theatres to each of the non theatre-owning distributors, Columbia (8.8%), United Artists

(8.3%) and Universal (7.4%), was higher than that paid to each of three producer-exhibitors, RKO (2.1%), Warner Bros. (2.1%) and Twentieth Century-Fox (6.1%).

135. In the year 1944, of the total film rental paid by Loew's theatres, 47.9% was to Loew's itself for the exhibition of Loew's pictures, and 27.1% was to non theatre-owning distributors. Thus a total of 75% of all film rentals paid by Loew's theatres went to persons other than the four other defendant-producer-exhibitors.

136. During the 1943-44 season RKO received 56.9% of its total license fees from independent theatres, 14.1% from its own theatres, and (in the aggregate) 29% from theatres affiliated with other defendants.

137. In the 1943-44 season, of the total number of exhibitions of features in first-run and metropolitan circuit run-theatres operated by RKO, 23.1% were exhibitions of features distributed by RKO, 29.6% were exhibitions of features distributed by other theatre-owning distributors, and 47.3% were exhibitions of features distributed by non-theatre-owning distributors.

138. In the 4 pre-war seasons of 1937-1940, Warner derived about 61 6/10% of its domestic gross rentals from theatres not affiliated with any of the defendants, about 14% from theatres in which it had an interest, about 4% from theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox had an interest, about 6% from theatres in which RKO had an interest, and less than 1% from theatres in which Loew had an interest.

139. Of its total domestic and foreign rentals Warner received about 30% from abroad, about 43% from theatres in which none of the defendants had an interest, about [fol. 3871] 10% from Warner's own American theatres, and the balance, about 16% from American theatres in which one or more of the defendants had an interest.

140. Not a single one of the Loew first run theatres in the 39 of the 92 largest cities where Loew operates or has an interest in first run theatres licensed a Warner feature for exhibition in the 1943-44 season. In the same season the Warner theatres regularly exhibited the Loew features in many of the 28 of the 92 largest cities where Warner operated or had an interest in first run theatres.

141. The dollars paid by Warner to each of the other defendants and by each of the other defendants to Warner show no uniformity of pattern from company to company from year to year.

142. There were marked variances from year to year in the sums paid as rental by the theatres in which Warner had an interest to United Artists, Universal, and Columbia, the non-theatre owning defendants.

143. Between 1937 and 1944 the theatres in which Warner had an interest substantially decreased the amount of film rental paid to the 5 theatre owning defendants, and substantially increased film rental paid to the non-theatre owning defendants.

144. Of the total film revenue received by Twentieth Century-Fox in 1944 from all theatres in the United States, 60.8 per cent was paid by exhibitors not defendants in this action; 14.1 per cent was paid by its own theatres; 1.26 per cent by Loew theatres; 5.52 per cent by RKO theatres; 13.46 per cent by theatres in which Paramount had an interest; and 4.82 per cent by Warner theatres.

145. On January 1, 1935, there were 13,386 theatres operating in the United States. In 1945, there were 18,076 theatres operating in the United States.

[fol. 3872] 146. In about 60 per cent of the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000, there are independent first-run theatres in competition with those of the major defendants except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices found to have unreasonably restrained competition.

147. In about 91 per cent of the 92 cities with over 100,000 population, there is competition on first runs between independent theatres and theatres of one or more of the defendants, or among the defendants themselves, except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices found to have unreasonably restrained competition. In the remainder of the 92 cities there is always competition in some run.

148. In the aforementioned 92 cities, at least 70% of all of the first run theatres are affiliated with one or more of the major defendants. In 4 of said cities there are no affiliated theatres. In 38 of said cities there are no independent first run theatres. In the remaining 50 cities the degree of first run competition varies from the most predominantly affiliated first run situations, such as Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, St. Paul, and Washington, D. C., in each of which the independent first run theatres played less than eleven of the defendants' features on first run during the 1943-1944 season, to the most predominantly independent first run situations, such as Nashville, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis, where the affiliated first run theatres played at least 31 of the defendants' pictures on first run during that season. In none of the said 50 cities did less than three of the distributor-defendants license their product on first run to the affiliated theatres. In 19 of said 50 cities less than three defendant-distributors licensed their product on first run to independent theatres. In a majority of said 50 cities the major share of all of the defendants' features were licensed for first run exhibition in theatres affiliated with the major defendants.

[fol. 3873] 149. Loew's operates first-run theatres in 36 of the 92 cities in the United States with more than 100,000 population; in every one of these 36 cities, there are other "first-run" theatres exhibiting the features of one or more of the other defendant distributors; in 21 of these 36, one or more of the other first-run theatres are operated by independents.

150. Of the 92 cities in the United States having a population in excess of 100,000, Twentieth Century-Fox is interested in first run theatres in 16 and licenses its features to them. In 4 of the remaining cities, none of the defendants has theatre interests. This leaves 72 cities in which there are first run theatres operated by defendants other than Twentieth Century-Fox. In 23 of the 72 cities, Twentieth Century-Fox licenses its features to independent exhibitors.

151. Except for a very limited number of theatres in the very largest cities, the 18,000 and more theatres in the United States exhibit the product of more than one distributor. Such theatres could not be operated on the product of only one distributor.

152. There is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in production, distribution, or exhibition of motion pictures, except as found in findings 153 and 154 below:

153. In localities where there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of the competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from "inherent vice" on the part of these defendants.

154. The illegalities and restrain-s herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best-theatres by [fol. 3874] the producer-distributors, but in admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited.

155. Total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned and would be damaging to the public.

156. Total divestiture would not remedy the price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and the other practices which have been found unreasonably to restrict competition.

157. During the 9 pre-war years of 1933-1941, the average cost of American made Warner features rose from $241,000 in 1933 to $448,000 in 1940. By 1945 the average cost had risen to $1,371,000.

158. In the past the foreign business of Warner has been exceedingly profitable.

159. With the cessation of the war the foreign markets for Warner pictures are being severely restricted.

160. The arbitration system created by the Consent Decree of November 20, 1940, has demonstrated its usefulness in dealing with exhibitors' complaints of unreasonable clearance and if extended to cover differences which may occur under the system to be established by the Decree herein, will be effective and result in quick and expeditious decisions and a saving of time and money.

[fol. 3875] CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The court has jurisdiction of this cause under the provisions of the Act of July 2, 1890 entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," hereinafter referred to as the Sherman Act.

2. Universal Pictures Company, Inc. and Screen Gems, Inc. have not violated the Sherman Act and should be dismissed as defendants herein.

3. None of the defendants herein has violated the Sherman Act by monopolizing or attempting to monopolize or conspiring to monopolize the production of motion picture films.

4. The consent decree entered herein on November 20, 1940, does not foreclose enforcement in this suit at this time of any rights or remedies, which the plaintiff may have against any of the defendants by virtue of violations of the Sherman Act by them, except such acts as were in accord with such decree during the period it was in force.

5. None of the defendants herein has violated the Sherman Act by combining, conspiring or contracting to restrain trade in any part of the business of producing motion pictures or by monopolizing, attempting to monopolize, or conspiring to monopolize such business.

6. The defendants, and each of them are entitled to judgment dismissing all claims of the plaintiff based upon their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

7. The defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Proctor [fol. 3876] Corporation; RKO Midwest Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; National Theatres Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and attempted to monopolize such trade and commerce, both before and after the entry of said consent decree, in violation of the Sherman Act by:

(a) Acquiescing in the establishment of a price fixing system by conspiring with one another to maintain theatre admission prices;

(b) Conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform in each local competitive area.

8. The distributor defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation, have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and attempted to monopolize such trade and commerce, both before and after the entry of said consent decree, in violation of the Sherman Act by:

(a) Conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of fixed minimum motion picture theatre admission prices;

[fol. 3877] (b) Agreeing individually with their respective licensees to fix minimum motion picture theatre admission prices;

(c) Conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform as to each local competitive area;

(d) Agreeing individually with their respective licensees to grant discriminatory license privileges to theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits as found in finding No. 110 above;

(e) Agreeing individually with such licensees to grant unreasonable clearance against theatres operated by their competitors;

(f) Making master agreements and franchises with such licensees;

(g) Individually conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films, except in the case of the United Artists Corporation;

(h) The defendants Paramount and RKO making formula deals.

9. The exhibitor-defendants, Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Loew's, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Proctor Corporation; RKO Midwest Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; and National Theatres Corporation have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures both before and after the entry of said consent decree, in violation of the Sherman Act by:

(a) Jointly operating motion picture theatres with each other and with independents through operating agreements or profit-sharing leases;

[fol. 3878] (b) Jointly owning motion picture theatres with each other and with independents through stock interests in theatre buildings;

(c) Conspiring with each other and with the distributor-defendants to fix substantially uniform minimum motion pictures theatre admission prices, runs, and clearances;

(d) Conspiring with the distributor-defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission price, run, clearance and other license terms.

10. The Formula deals, master agreements and franchises referred to in Findings 86, 88 and 89 have tended to restrain trade and violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

11. Block-booking as hereinabove defined, violates the Sherman Act.

12. Further conclusions of law are made and embodied in the decree filed herewith.

Dated: December 31, 1946.

Equity No. 87-273

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff

against

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, Loew's Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation, Warner Bros. P tures, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, National Theatres Corporation, Columbia Pictures Corporation, Screen Gems, Inc., Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc., Universal Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Big U Film Exchange, Inc., and United Artists Corporation, Defendants.

DECREE—December 31, 1946

The court having rendered its opinion herein on June 11, 1946, having duly considered the proposals of the parties and of amici curiae as to its findings and judgment, and having filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein certain of the defendants herein were found to have violated the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, commonly known as the Sherman Act,

[fol. 3880] IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, AS follows:

I.

1. The complaint is dismissed as to the defendants Screen Gems, Inc. and the corporation named as Universal Pictures Company, Inc., merged during the pendency of this case into the defendant Universal Corporation. The complaint is also dismissed as to all claims made against the remaining defendants herein based upon their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

II.

Each of the defendant distributors, Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation [formerly known as Vitagraph, Inc.]; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation; and the successors of each of them, and any and all individuals who act in behalf of any thereof with respect to the matters enjoined, and each corporation in which said defendants or any of them own a direct or indirect stock interest of more than fifty per cent, is hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means.

2. From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances; the term "clearances" as used herein meaning the period of time [fol. 3881] stipulated in license contracts which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

3. From granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof.

5. From further performing any existing franchise to which it is a party and from making any franchises in the future. The term "franchise" as used herein means a licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements, entered into as a part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of agreement.

6. From making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party. The term "formula deal" as used herein means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The term "master agreement" means a licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal" covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres usually comprising a circuit.

7. From performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. To the extent [fol. 3882] that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature.

8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:

(a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run [other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor] selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;

(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;

(c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competitive area may bid for such license, and in his bid [fol. 3883] shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words "exclude simultaneous exhibition" shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words "competitive area" shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

(e) A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of ninety-five per cent or more, either directly or through affiliates or subsidiaries.

9. From arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with another theatre not owned or operated by a defendant distributor, or its affiliate or subsidiary, made by registered mail, addressed to the home office of the distributor, to license a feature to him [fol. 3884] for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. Such demand shall be deemed to have been refused either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of a refusal in writing or upon the expiration of ten days after the receipt of the exhibitor's demand.

III.

Each of the defendant exhibitors, Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loews, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, and National Theatres, Inc. is hereby enjoined and restrained:

(1) From performing or enforcing agreements referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the foregoing section II hereof to which it may be a party.

(2) From making or continuing to perform pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to prearranged percentages.

(3) From making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in a competitive area where a pool operates without first offering them for inclusion in the pool.

(4) From making or continuing leases of theatres under which it leases any of its theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits.

(5) From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or [fol. 3885] otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant, and from continuing to own or acquire such an interest in conjunction with an independent [meaning any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question,] where such interest shall be greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years. The relationships between the defendants and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendants. In dissolving relationships among defendants and between defendants and independents which violate this provision, one defendant may acquire the interest of another defendant or independent if such defendant desiring to acquire such interest shall show to the satisfaction of the court, and the court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Each of the defendants shall submit to this court within six months a statement outlining the extent to which it has complied and the manner in which it proposes to comply with this provision, setting forth in detail the names, locations, and general descriptions of the theatres, corporate securities, and beneficial interests of any kind involved, the sales thereof that it has made, and such interests as it proposes to acquire, with a statement of facts regarding each competitive situation involved in such proposed acquisition sufficient to show the probable effect of such acquisition on that situation. Similar reports shall be made quarterly thereafter until this provision shall have been fully complied with. Reasonable notice of such acquisition plans shall be served upon the Attorney General and plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the court.

[fol. 3886] (6) From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in the preceding paragraph.

(7) From operating, booking, or buying features for any of its theatres through any agent who is known by it to be also acting in such manner for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliate.

IV.

Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of each distributor-defendant to license, or in any way to arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which such distributor defendant has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this Decree, a proprietary interest of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries.

V.

The provisions of the existing consent decree are hereby declared to be of no further force or effect, except insofar as may be necessary to conclude arbitration proceedings now pending and to liquidate in an orderly manner the financial obligations of the defendants and the American Arbitration Association, incurred in the establishment of the consent decree arbitration systems. Existing awards and those made pursuant to pending proceedings shall continue to be enforceable. But this shall in no way preclude the parties or any other persons from setting up a reasonable system of arbitration either through the use of the present boards or any others as among themselves.

VI.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VII.

Paragraphs 7 and 8 of section II of this judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947.

VIII.

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the judgment and no others, to apply to the court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification, or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

IX.

The operation of this judgment is stayed for sixty days from the date hereof, and, if an appeal is taken, for thirty days thereafter in order to enable any appellant to move before the Supreme Court for a stay in respect to any portion of the judgment from which an appeal has been taken.

Dated, December 31, 1946. Augustus N. Hand, United States Circuit Judge; Henry W. Goddard, United States District Judge; John Bright, United States District Judge.

MEMORANDUM IN RE FINDINGS AND DECREE—December 31, 1946

In order to meet some of the objections raised at the hearing to the system of bidding for features described in the opinion of the court, we have modified the system there proposed so that competitive bidding will only be necessary within a competitive area and in such an area where it is desired by the exhibitors. In other words, the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so.

The arrangement for arbitration and an appeal board has been terminated except as to unfinished litigations and other matters referred to in the decree, because of the unwillingness of some of the parties to consent to their continuance. Nevertheless, as we have indicated in the opinion, these tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded.

Indeed, the arbitration system set up under the consent decree of November 20, 1940, was created pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint by the [fol. 3890] United States filed November 14, 1940, in which, among other things, the plaintiff prayed that "a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein."

We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree.

MOTION

The Paramount, Loew, RKO, Warner and Twentieth Century-Fox defendants move the Court to amend and modify its Conclusions of Law and Judgment heretofore filed, in the following particulars:

To amend Paragraph (6) of Section III to read as follows:

"From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever, except as permitted in the preceding paragraph; or except for the purpose of acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field, if such defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Reasonable notice of the intention to make any such acquisition shall be served upon the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the Court."

The foregoing amendment is sought for the reason that the language of Paragraph (6) of Section III in the Judgment might be susceptible to interpretation at variance with the Court's opinion.

The moving defendants assume, in the light of the colloquy between the Court and counsel appearing at pages 3057 to 3063 of the record, and from the statements contained in the opinion and the Findings of Fact upon which this injunctive provision must be based, that it was not intended in this paragraph to enjoin the defendants from acquiring interests in theatres where necessary and proper to protect their investments or enter a competitive field, provided that they should first show to the Court that such acquisition would not unreasonably restrain competition.

It is thought that this was the clear intention of the Court because of the following language in the opinion:

> "But it (the divestiture provision applying to partial interests) shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field . . ."

The colloquy at the hearing on the decree (1057-63) indicated that the Court had rejected the Government's request [fol. 3893] for an absolute prohibition. Furthermore, the Court found unlawful only those holdings which it directed should be rearranged under Paragraph 5 of Section III,—the joint and partial interests.

Accordingly, the request for clarification is clearly justified. In U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 186, the Court said:

> "Where the proclivity for unlawful activity has been as manifest as here, the decree should operate as an effective deterrent to a repetition of the unlawful conduct and yet not stand as a barrier to healthy growth on a competitive basis."

(a) To add to Paragraph III (2) a sentence at the end thereof reading as follows:

> "The pooling agreements by one or more defendants with others not parties to this action, referred to herein, which violate this provision shall be dissolved within two years."

The ground upon which this amendment is sought is that no time was specified in this paragraph within which to comply with its provisions. While defendants will act diligently to comply, the task of dissolving pools with independents, involving, as they do, individuals and interests not parties to this action, is an involved and complicated one in some instances, and time must necessarily be consumed in dissolving them. Moreover, many of the pooled theatres have been operated for a long time by a defendant and the termination of the pools will require the owners to make other arrangements for the operation of their theatres which cannot be done in the time now allowed by the decree. So far as pools between defendants are concerned, no time is asked beyond that already given by the Judgment.

(b) To amend Paragraph III (4) by adding the following sentence thereto:

"The leases referred to herein between a defendant and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years."

The grounds for this amendment are the same as the grounds stated in the next preceding subparagraph hereof.

To amend Section VII to read as follows:

"Paragraph 7 of Sect. II of this Judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947.

Paragraphs 8 (a) and 8 (c) of Sect. II of this Judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947, and in the event of an Appeal to the Supreme Court by any party from these Paragraphs, such Paragraphs shall not become effective until ninety (90) days after the entry of final Judgment upon the mandate of the Supreme Court."

This Amendment to Section VII is necessary in order to postpone the effective date of Paragraphs 8(a) and 8(c) of [fol. 3894] Section II until the Supreme Court shall have decided any appeal which may be taken from the Judgment herein.

The method of licensing features required by paragraphs 8 (a) and 8 (c) of Section II is very different from that now in operation. That proposed new method of licensing is strongly opposed by organizations of independent exhibitors which sought to intervene in this action. To put this controversial new method of licensing into operation prior to a reasonable time after the final effective date of the Judgment herein is unnecessary and inappropriate because the Supreme Court may not approve the provisions in question, or may change or modify them. In that event, of course, further changes in the method of licensing features would be necessary with further disruption to the normal course of business.

This Court is most familiar with the complexities of the industry and the innovations that would be brought about by adoption of the method of licensing prescribed by this Court, and it should defer the effective date rather than pass this question to the Supreme Court for consideration before that Court can have an opportunity to understand the problems involved.

All parties concerned, including independent exhibitors, will be amply protected in the interim period pending a determination by the Supreme Court, because Paragraph 9 of Section II and Paragraphs 8 (b) and 8 (d) will become effective in accordance with the terms of the Judgment. The moving defendants will not apply to this Court or to the Supreme Court for a stay of the provisions of Paragraph 9 of Section II or Paragraphs 8 (b) and 8 (d) in the event that the requested postponement of the effective date of Paragraphs 8 (a) and 8 (c) is granted.

To amend Conclusion 9(d) to read as follows:

"Conspiring with the distributor defendants to receive discriminatory license privileges as found in Finding No. 110 above."

This amendment is requested in order to conform the conclusion to Finding of Fact 110, Conclusion of Law 8 (d), and the Opinion of this Court. The Opinion stated that nothing therein contained should be construed as indicating that the distributor defendants discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances or minimum admission prices, and the Court said:

"In the absence of such facts we are unable to infer that the distributor defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard. • • •"

There is no Finding of Fact that the exhibitor defendants discriminated or received discrimination with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices.

Finding 110 is the only finding with regard to discriminations, and it refers solely to the distributor defendants and does not include film rentals, clearances or minimum admission prices. Conclusion 8(d) is to the effect that the distributor defendants granted discriminatory license privi-

[fols. 3895-3896] leges as found in Finding 110 and the amendment which is sought would conform to this conclusion.

Wherefore, the moving defendants pray that the Court make and enter an order clarifying and amending the judgment and conclusions of law in accordance with the foregoing or, in the alternative, that the Court grant a rehearing, reargument or new trial as to the subject matter of this motion.

MOTION

The defendant United Artists Corporation moves the Court to amend and modify its Conclusions of Law and Judgment heretofore filed, in the following particulars:

To strike out the last sentence of Paragraph 4 of Section II, and that said paragraph shall read as follows:

"Paragraph 7 of Sect. II of this Judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947.

Paragraphs 8(a) and 8(c) of Sect. II of this Judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947, but in the event of an Appeal to the Supreme Court by any party from these Paragraphs, such Paragraphs shall not become effective until ninety (90) days after the entry of final Judgment upon the mandate of the Supreme Court."

Wherefore, the moving defendant prays that the Court [fols. 3900-3902] make and enter an order clarifying the Judgment in accordance with the foregoing, or such other and further relief as the Court may deem fit and proper in the premises.

MOTION

Come now the defendants Universal Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges Inc., and Big U Film Exchange, Inc., and each of them, and by their attorney below named move this Court under Rule 52-B of the Federal Court Rules to amend the findings of fact and decree as follows:

(1) To amend the definition of franchise, set forth in Finding of Fact No. 1 and item 5 of Article II of the decree, to accord with the evidence, to read as follows:

A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, granting preferential exhibition rights, in effect for more than one motion picture season, and covering the exhibition of features released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

(2) To amend Finding of Fact No. 89 to accord with the evidence, to read as follows:

Franchises have been entered into by the distributor-defendants with affiliated and independent circuits, and such franchises unreasonably restrain the trade of competing independent theatres, because they cover too long a period (more than one season), and also because they grant perferential rights to powerful theatre circuits for all of the features released by a given distributor.

[fol. 3906] (3) To amend Conclusion of Law No. 8, subdivision (f) to accord with the evidence, to read as follows:

Making master agreements, and making franchises with circuits of theatres which unreasonably restrained the trade of competing independent theatres.

(4) To amend the first sentence of Article II, item 5 of the decree, to accord with the evidence, to read as follows:

From further performing any existing franchise with any circuit of theatres to which it is a party and from making any such franchises in the future, except such as do not unreasonably restrain the trade of competing theatres.

(5) To amend sub-division (d) of item 8 of Article II of the decree to read as follows:

Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture, except as otherwise authorized hereby.

(6) To amend Finding of Fact No. 64 to accord with the evidence, by adding the following sentence:

None of such exceptional features were distributed by Universal.

(7) To amend item 2 of Article II of the decree, to accord with the law and to render this provision of the decree consistent with other provisions, to read as follows:

From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances; the term "clearances" as used herein meaning the period of time stipulated in license contracts which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres. The making by a distributor, acting independently of other distributors, of a series of license contracts with one exhibitor, or of a series of license contracts with more than one exhibitor, which contain clearance provisions, shall not be considered to be the maintenance of a "system of clearances."

[fol. 3907] (8) To amend Article VII of the decree to postpone the effectiveness of items 8(a) and 8(c) of Article II, in the event of an appeal, until ninety (90) days after entry of judgment on the mandate of the Supreme Court.

The amendments suggested in Items (1), (2), (3), (4) and (5) are requested for the following reasons:

The findings of fact, conclusions of law and decree in their present form condemn all long-term contracts made by Universal with any exhibitor, whether a member of a circuit affiliated with a major defendant, or a member of an independent circuit or a single independent theatre. Universal believes that the findings, conclusions and decree ought to be corrected in the respects heretofore stated for two reasons:

1. In the first place a mere long-term commitment assuring an exhibitor that he may have Universal pictures is not properly to be considered a franchise, because it lacks a very essential element of a franchise, to wit, the element of exclusiveness, for a limited time at least. All of the franchises in evidence, it believed, involve this element. Yet franchise has been defined in the findings, conclusions and decree in such a way as to not require the presence of this element, and to condemn mere long-term commitments always considered perfectly legal.

2. In the second place Universal defendants have been permanently restrained from making such long-term commitments, much less true franchises, even with single independent theatres. Universal submits that it ought to be permitted to make true franchises (involving the element of exclusiveness) with all single independent theatres. The issue in this case certainly had to do with the relationships between the defendant-distributors and the major exhibition chains. Conceding for the purpose of argument only that this issue might be expanded to include the relationships between the defendant-distributors and the large independent circuits or even beyond this to include all independent circuits, it certainly cannot be expanded to include the rela- [fol. 3908] tionships between non-integrated distributors such as Universal and single independent theatres. Indeed, it is plain that the object of the proceedings must have been to foster and protect these very relationships.

What the Sherman Act condemns is undue or unreasonable restraints of interstate commerce, Standard Oil v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1; U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106. The meaning of this was dealt with in Appalachian Coals v. U. S., 288 U. S. 344, pp. 359-361, where it was said:

> "The decisions established, said this Court in Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, 376, 'that only such contracts and combinations are within the act as, by reason of intent or the inherent nature of the contemplated acts, prejudice the public interests by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade' ".

The considerations necessary to be dealt with in this connection were also outlined in the Appalachian Coals case, wherein it was said:

> "In applying this test, a close and objective scrutiny of particular conditions and purposes is necessary in each case. Realities must dominate the judgment. The mere fact that the parties to an agreement eliminate competition between themselves is not enough to condemn it. 'The legality of an agreement or regulation cannot be determined by so simple a test, as whether it restrains competition. Every agreement concerning trade every regulation of trade, restrains.' Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, supra. The familiar illustrations of partnerships, and enterprises fairly integrated in the interest of the promotion of commerce, at once occur. The question of the application of the statute is one of intent and effect, and is not to be determined by arbitrary assumptions."

Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, at p. 238; Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421, at p. 438 are to the same effect.

[fol. 3909] Thus in considering the legality under the Sherman Act of a long-term arrangement for the sale of pictures, it is essential to consider, inter alia, the following:

(1) the size and economic power of the distributor, in this case Universal, which is a moderately sized distributor, i.e. to what degree it approaches monopolistic power.

(2) The size and economic power of the exhibitor.

(3) The duration in years of the arrangement.

(4) Whether or not the arrangement contains the element of exclusiveness, and the period of time during which this exclusiveness operates.

(5) The effect upon competition.

Exclusive dealing contracts for a term of years are inherently legal even under Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act (Title 15 USC, Sec. 14, 38 Stat. 731, Act of October 15, 1914, c.

323, Sec. 3) where there is no undertaking by the purchaser to abstain from using or dealing in the goods of others. This is thoroughly settled law. Restatement Law of Contracts, c. 18, Sec. 516; Williston on Contracts, Sec. 1645; Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568; U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb, 45 Fed. Sup. 387, at p. 398, where Judge Rifkind said that the "restraining covenant is for the protection of the purchaser who is spending large sums to develop his good will and to enlarge the public patronage of a relatively new article of commerce", and held the exclusive dealing arrangement before him to be legal. The Supreme Court affirmed in 321 U. S. 707.

If exclusive-dealing contracts for a term of years are inherently lawful, it is obvious that mere long-term commitments without the exclusive feature, such as the present definition of franchise condemn, are a fortiori legal.

Finding of Fact No. 22 proposed by Universal read in part as follows:

> [fol. 3910] "In order to create competition in the areas where the exhibitors had failed and refused to license Universal product or exhibit same, Universal induced persons, firms and corporations to invest substantial sums of money in opening new theatres or improving existing theatres and granted to these accounts deals varying from one year to five years wherein and whereby these theatres were granted the exclusive right to exhibit Universal pictures for the period of said deals, in the specific theatres mentioned in the agreements and for the runs listed therein, whether the deal was for one year or longer.

This properly represents the usual situation which led Universal to enter into a franchise arrangement with a single independent theatre or small independent chain. It was the reverse of unduly restraining interstate commerce.

The decree unconditionally preserved to the major defendants the right to maintain "show-windows" for their own pictures. Universal should not have to buy theatres in order to acquire "show-windows", but ought to be permitted to acquire them through contractual arrangements, i.e. through franchises not unreasonably restraining the trade of competing theatres. In situations in which there are presently no theatres it is obvious that potential exhibitors will not put money into theatre projects unless long-term prior-run commitments can be obtained for the pictures of one or more distributors. In such situations, therefore, the granting of franchises is plainly a public benefit.

The proposed amendments to the findings, conclusions and decree to take care of this situation seem obviously called for, are simple, and do not interfere in any way with the objectives of the decree.

The amendments suggested in Items (6) and (7) speak for themselves. If the suggested amendment (7) is not made, it is feared that the same thing which the Court now regards as an illegal system of fixing minimum admission prices will be regarded as an illegal system of fixing clearances (despite the admitted legality of a single clearance [fol. 3911] which is reasonable) by reason of the expression "or exhibitors" being used, and entirely aside from any conspiracy or agreement among distributors.

Wherefore, said defendants pray that the findings of this Court be amended and added to in the foregoing respects, and that the judgment of the Court be amended as above indicated, or, in the alternative, that the Court grant a rehearing, re-argument or new trial as to the subject-matter of this motion.

Dated: January 10, 1947.

Petition for Appeal

The United States of America, plaintiff in the above-entitled cause, considering itself aggrieved by the final order and decree of this Court entered on the 31st day of December, 1946, does hereby pray an appeal from said final order and decree to the Supreme Court of the United States. Pursuant to Rule 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court the plaintiff presents to this Court herewith a statement showing the basis of jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to entertain an appeal in this cause.

The particulars wherein the plaintiff considers the order erroneous are set forth in the assignment of errors and prayer for reversal accompanying this petition and to which reference is hereby made.

Plaintiff prays that its appeal may be allowed and that citation be issued as provided by law, and that a transcript of the record, proceedings, and documents upon which said final order and decree was based, duly authenticated, be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States under the rules of said Court in such cases made and provided.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS AND PRAYER FOR REVERSAL

The United States of America, plaintiff in the above-entitled cause, in connection with its petition for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, hereby assigns error to the final order and decree of said District Court entered on December 31, 1946, as amended, in the above-entitled cause, and says that in the entry of the final order and decree the District Court committed error to the prejudice of the said plaintiff in the following particulars:

1. The Court erred in concluding that the relief granted was adequate to prevent the guilty defendants from unreasonably restraining competition in the motion picture business in the future.

2. The Court erred in concluding that the major defendants had not actually achieved a monopoly in exhibition, either singly or collectively.

3. The Court erred in not concluding that the defendants had actually achieved a collective monopoly of distribution.

4. The Court erred in failing to prohibit the guilty defendants from making clearance agreements in the future.

[fol. 3919] 5. The Court erred in failing to prohibit the continued use by the major defendants of each other's theatres as exhibition outlets for each other's films.

6. The Court erred in failing to order ultimate divorcement of the distribution and production businesses of the major defendants from their theatre operations.

7. The Court erred in failing to require the major defendants to divest themselves of all their theatre holdings.

8. The Court erred in failing to prohibit absolutely any further acquisition of theatre interests by the major defendants.

9. The Court erred in failing to prohibit the major defendants from continuing to exhibit their own films in their own theatres upon terms which discriminate against their competitors.

10. The Court erred in decreeing competitive bidding as appropriate relief in situations where the defendants' theatres were in competition with independent theatres.

11. The Court erred in failing to require that all competitive bids be stated in terms of flat rental.

12. The Court erred in concluding that none of the defendants had attempted to monopolize or conspired to monopolize or restrain trade in the business of producing motion pictures.

13. The Court erred in concluding that the factor of print cost would confine exhibition to high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs protected by clearance is employed.

[fol. 3920] 14. The Court erred in concluding that a grant of clearance when not accompanied by a fixing of admission prices or by an undue extension as to area or duration affords a fair protection to the licensee without unreasonably interfering with the public interest.

15. The Court erred in concluding that the fixing of clearance in license contracts or by other agreements is essential to the reasonable conduct of the motion picture business.

16. The Court erred in concluding that competition can be introduced into the present system of fixing admission prices, clearances, and runs by requiring a defendant-distributor, when licensing its features, to grant the license for each run at a reasonable clearance (if clearance is involved) to the highest bidder.

17. The Court erred in concluding that the percentage of features on the market which any of the five major defendants might play in its own theatres would be so small as in no wise to approximate a monopoly of film exhibition.

18. The Court erred in concluding that the competitive bidding decreed by it would make it impossible for the defendants to discriminate unreasonably in favor of circuit theatres and against independents.

19. The Court erred in concluding that a defendants' interest of five per cent or less of a theatre investment in which others were also interested was de minimis and only to be [fol. 3921] treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition.

20. The Court erred in concluding that the defendants' theatre holdings are not large enough to permit them, individually or collectively, to have a monopoly of exhibition.

21. The Court erred in concluding that there was or would be under its decree adequate competition between theatres operated by the major defendants in any city.

22. The Court erred in concluding that certain theatres which had used the product of more than one distributor in the past could not operate on the product of one distributor in the future.

23. The Court erred in concluding that the illegalities and restraints found to exist in the industry did not lie in or result from the ownership of theatres by the major defendants.

24. The Court erred in concluding that total theatre divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned and would be damaging to the public.

25. The Court erred in concluding that such divestiture would not remedy the illegal practices found by it which had unreasonably restricted competition in the industry.

Wherefore, plaintiff prays that the final decree of the District Court be appropriately amended and corrected to include the relief referred to above as having been erroneously denied.

(S.) Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General;
(S.) Robert L. Wright, Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

Dated this 18 day of February, 1947.

ASSIGNMENTS OF ERRORS AND PRAYERS FOR REVERSAL—Filed February 26, 1947

Loew's Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corpora[fol. 3931] tion, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, National Theatres Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation (sued herein as Vitagraph, Inc.), and Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, defendants in the above entitled cause, in connection with their several petitions for appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, hereby severally assign error to the Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, Judgment, Final Order and Decree of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York entered on December 31, 1946, and to the Order of said District Court entered on February 11, 1947, and say that there is manifest error in the entry of such Judgment, Final Order and Decree, and in the proceedings in this cause prior to, concurrent with, and subsequent to the entry thereof, committed by the said District Court to the prejudice of each of the said defendants severally, in the following several particulars, to wit:

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 1 of the Decree, in enjoining the distributor-defendants, and each of them, as follows:

> "1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means."

2

The Court erred in failing to conclude that a distributor-defendant has a lawful right under the Copyright Law and [fol. 3932] under the common law to agree with its licensee that the latter shall charge a price not less than that specified in the license agreement during the exhibition of the feature licensed, and erred in failing to permit a distributor-defendant to make such provisions in its license agreements with each licensee with whom it does business.

The Court erred in making its Finding No. 64 reading as follows:

> "64. The defendants' licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all of the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors. Thus there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both the distributors and exhibitors were involved. The licenses required existing admission price schedules to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction. In the case of such exceptional features as "Gone With The Wind", "For Whom The Bell Tolls", "Wilson", and "Song of Bernadette", licensed for exhibition prior to general release and as to which the distributors were not satisfied with current prices, they would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised."

The Court erred in making its Finding of Fact No. 65 reading as follows:

"65. The defendants granting film licenses have agreed with their licensees to a system which determines minimum admission prices in all theatres where feature motion pictures licensed by them are exhibited. In this way are controlled the prices to be charged [fol. 3933] for most of the feature motion pictures exhibited either by the defendants or by independents within the United States."

5

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 66 in finding that these defendants or any of them have a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which they own theatres, and in finding that they or any of them safeguarded this interest by fixing minimum admission prices in their respective licenses when distributing films to exhibitors in those areas.

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 66 in finding that there was a system which presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas.

7

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 67 in finding that the agreements therein mentioned showed the intent of the defendants, who were parties thereto, to maintain admission prices at artificial levels.

8

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 69 in finding that RKO, Loew's, Warner, Paramount and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum admission prices specified therein, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and in finding that Columbia, Universal, and United Artists have participated in that system.

[fol. 3934] 9.

The Court erred in making its Finding of Fact No. 70 reading as follows:

"70. The distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices."

10.

The Court erred in making its Finding of Fact No. 71 reading as follows:

"71. In agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's feature in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum admission prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby erected."

11

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 72 in finding that the differentials in admission prices appearing in [fol. 3935] licenses of a particular feature in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area were calculated or intended by the distributor-defendants, or any of them, to give prior run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible.

12

The Court erred in its Conclusion of Law No. 7(a) in concluding that the defendants therein named, or any of them, have violated the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C.), as amended, herein referred to as the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by:

"Acquiescing in the establishment of a price fixing system by conspiring with one another to maintain theatre admission prices."

The Court erred in its Conclusions of Law No. 8(a) and No. 8(b) in concluding that the defendants therein named, or any of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusions of law, by:

"(a) Conspiring with each other to maintain a nationwide system of fixed minimum motion picture theatre admission prices;

The Court erred in failing to conclude that a distributor-defendant had a lawful right under the Copyright Law [fol. 3936] and under the common law to agree with its licensee that the latter shall charge an admission price not less than that specified in the license agreement during the exhibition of the feature as a roadshow.

15

The Court erred in making its Finding of Fact No. 79 reading as follows:

"79. The major defendants have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents."

16

The Court erred in making its Finding of Fact No. 81 reading as follows:

> "81. The distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearance for the theatres to which they license their films and the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system."

17

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 82 in finding defendants or any of them "acted in concert in their grant of run and clearance."

18

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 2 of the Decree in enjoining each of the distributor-defendants "from agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances."

[fol. 3937] 19.

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 4 of the Decree in decreeing that > "Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof."

The Court erred in making its Finding of Fact No. 84 reading as follows:

> "84. Both independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with the defendants, have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendant's theatre or theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures."

21.

The Court erred in its Conclusions of Law No. 7 (b) and No. 8(c) in concluding that the defendants, or any of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusions of law, by conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform in or as to each local competitive area.

The Court erred in its Conclusions of Law No. 9(c) and No. 9(d) in concluding that the exhibitor-defendants, or [fol. 3938] any of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusions of law, by:

"(c) Conspiring with each other and with the distributor-defendants to fix substantially uniform minimum motion picture theatre admission prices, runs and clearances;

(d) Conspiring with the distributor-defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixng minimum admission prices, run, clearance and other license terms".

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 110 to the extent that it found that these defendants or any of them have discriminated against small independent exhibitors in favor of large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits.

24.

The Court erred in its Conclusion of Law No. 8(d) in concluding that the distributor-defendants, or any of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by:

"Agreeing individually with their respective licensees to grant discriminatory license privileges to theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits as found in finding No. 110."

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 115 in finding that the joint interests therein referred to between an exhibitor-defendant in conjunction with independent, ex- [fol. 3939] hibitors enabled the parties to operate theatres collectively rather than competitively.

26.

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 116 in finding that when theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and an independent exhibitor it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures and that the defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently.

The Court erred in its Conclusions of Law No. 9(a) and No. 9(b) in concluding that the exhibitor-defendants therein named, or any of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusions of law, by:

"(a) Jointly operating motion picture theatres with each other and with independents through operating agreements or profit-sharing leases;

(b) Jointly owning motion picture theatres with each other and with independents through stock interests in theatre buildings."

The Court erred in Section III, Paragraph (2) of the Decree in enjoining the exhibitor-defendants, or any of them, from continuing to perform existing agreements, therein referred to, with exhibitors not defendants herein.

The Court erred in Section III, Paragraph (5) of the Decree in enjoining the defendants or any of them

"From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, * * * in conjunction with an independent [meaning any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question,] where such interest shall be greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more."

The Court erred in Section III, Paragraph (6) of the Decree in enjoining the defendants therein named, or any of them, from expanding their present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in Section III, Paragraph 5 of the decree.

31.

The Court erred in denying Paragraph I of these defendants' motions to amend and modify the decree so as to make Paragraph (6) of Section III thereof read as follows:

> "'From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever, except as permitted in the preceding paragraph; or except for the purpose of acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field, if such defendants shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the [fol. 3941] exhibition of feature motion pictures. Reasonable notice of the intention to make any such acquisition shall be served upon the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the Court.'"

The Court erred in denying Paragraph 4 of the motion of these defendants to amend and modify Conclusion of Law 9(d) to read as follows:

> "Conspiring with the distributor defendants to receive discriminatory license privileges as found in Finding No. 110 above."

33.

The Court erred in not decreeing that any defendant might apply to the Court for permission to retain a given partial interest in a theatre or group of theatres upon a showing to and finding by the Court that the particular relationship did not or would not unreasonably restrain competition.

34.

The Court erred in decreeing in Section V of the Decree that the Consent Decree entered November 20, 1940, should be of no further force or effect, except insofar as it might be necessary to conclude arbitration proceedings now pending, and to liquidate in an orderly manner the financial obligations of the defendants and the American Arbitration Association, and in failing to permit the said Consent Decree to remain in effect as a final determination between the [fol. 3942] plaintiff and the defendants as to the matters therein set forth.

The Court erred in failing to decree that disputes between one or more of these defendants and exhibitors arising under the Decree should be determined by arbitration under the Rules of Arbitration provided for in the Consent Decree, as the same might be modified by the order of the Court from time to time.

36.

The Court erred in denying and in failing to grant the motions made by the defendants and each of them to dismiss the petition and amended and supplemental complaint and to strike exhibits and evidence upon the grounds set forth in their respective motions appearing at pages 383-4, 503-526 and 2501 of the Record.

37.

The Court erred in so much of Finding of Fact No. 154 as states that there were illegalities and restraints.

38.

The Court erred in finding and concluding that these defendants or any of them violated the Sherman Act in the respects herein assigned as error.

39.

The Court erred in making and entering so much of the Decree as is herein appealed from.

[fol. 3943] Wherefore, each of these defendants severally prays that said Decree, Judgment and Orders be reversed, modified or corrected and that an appropriate judgment be rendered herein.

SEPARATE ASSIGNMENTS OF ERRORS AND PRAYERS FOR REVERSAL ON BEHALF OF THE "PARAMOUNT DEFENDANTS" (PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC. AND PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION)—Filed February 26, 1947

Paramount Pictures, Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, defendants in the above entitled case in [fol. 3953] connection with their petitions for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, hereby assign error to the Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, Judgment, final order and decree of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York entered on December 31, 1946, and to the order entered on February 11, 1947, and say that there is manifest error in the entry of such judgment, final order and decree, and in the proceedings in this cause prior to, concurrent with, and subsequent to the entry thereof, committed by the District Court to the prejudice of each of the said defendants in the following several particulars:

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 1 of the decree in enjoining these defendants, and each of them, as follows:

"1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means".

The Court erred in failing to find and conclude that these defendants have a lawful right under the Copyright Law and under the common law to agree with their licensees that the latter shall charge an admission price not less than that specified in the license agreement during the exhibition of the feature licensed, and erred in failing to permit them to make such provisions in their license agreements with each licensee.

The Court erred as to these defendants in making its Finding of Fact No. 64 reading in part as follows:

"64. The defendants' licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all of the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors. Thus there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both the distributors and exhibitors were involved. The licenses required existing admission price schedules to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction. In the case of such exceptional features as "Gone With The Wind", "For Whom The Bell Tolls", "Wilson", and "Song of Bernadette", licensed for exhibition prior to general release and as to which the distributors were not satisfied with current prices, they would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised".

The Court erred as to these defendants in making its Finding of Fact No. 65 reading as follows:

"65. The defendants granting film licenses have agreed with their licensees to a system which determines minimum admission prices in all theatres where feature motion pictures licensed by them are exhibited. In this way are controlled the prices to be charged for most of the feature motion pictures exhibited either by the defendants or by independents within the United States."

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 66 in finding that these defendants or either of them have a definite [fol. 3955] interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which Paramount Pictures, Inc. own theatres, which interest was safeguarded by fixing minimum admission prices in its respective licenses when distributing films to exhibitors in those areas.

6.

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 66 in finding that either of these defendants was a party to any system which presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas.

7.

The Court erred in finding that there was any admission price fixing system.

8.

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 67 in finding that operating agreements made by Paramount Pictures, Inc. as exhibitor with one or more other defendants as exhibitors, or with independent exhibitors, for the joint operation of certain theatres, which agreements provided for minimum admission prices to be charged at such theatres, showed the intent of these defendants or either of them to maintain admission prices at artificial levels.

9.

The Court erred in finding that the Paramount defendants, or either of them, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum admission prices specified therein, have engaged in a system to fix prices.

10.

The Court erred, as to these defendants, in finding, in its Finding of Fact No. 70 that they, or either of them have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with any other defendant to maintain prices.

The Court erred, as to these defendants, in making its Finding of Fact No. 71 reading as follows:

> "71. In agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's feature in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum admission prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby erected."

The Court erred, as to these defendants, in its Finding of Fact No. 72 in finding that the differentials in admission [fol. 3957] prices appearing in licenses of a particular feature in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area were calculated or intended by these defendants or either of them as distributor, to give prior run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible.

The Court erred in its Conclusion of Law 7(a) in concluding that these defendants or either of them have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by:

> Acquiescing in the establishment of a price fixing system by conspiring with any other defendant to maintain theatre admission prices.

The Court erred in its Conclusions of Law 8(a) and 8(b) in concluding that these defendants, or either of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by:

(a) Conspiring with any other defendant to maintain a nationwide system of fixed minimum motion picture theatre admission prices;

The Court erred in failing to conclude that each of these defendants had a lawful right under the Copyright Law and under the common law to agree with each of its licensees [fol. 3958] that the latter shall charge an admission price not less than that specified in the license agreement during the exhibition of a feature as a roadshow.

16

The Court erred as to these defendants in making its Finding of Fact No. 79 reading as follows:

"79. The major defendants have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents."

The Court erred as to these defendants in making its Finding of Fact No. 81 reading as follows:

"81. The distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearance for the theatres to which they license their films and the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system."

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 82 in finding that these defendants or either of them acted in concert with any other defendant in their respective grants of run and clearance.

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 2 of the Decree in enjoining these defendants, or either of them, from agreeing with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances.

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 4 of the decree in enjoining these defendants, or either of them, as follows:

> "4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof."

The Court erred as to these defendants in making its Finding of Fact No. 84 reading as follows:

> "84. Both independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with the defendants, have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatres or with theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures."

The Court erred in its Conclusion of Law No. 7(b) in concluding that these defendants, or either of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by;

> [fol. 3960] Conspiring with any other defendant to maintain a nationwide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform in each local competitive area.

The Court erred in its Conclusion of Law No. 8(c) in concluding that these defendants, or either of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by:

> Conspiring with any other defendant to maintain a nationwide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform as to each local competitive area.

The Court erred in its Conclusions of Law No. 9(c) and 9(d) in concluding that Paramount Pictures, Inc., violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by

> Conspiring with any other defendant to fix substantially uniform minimum motion picture theatre admission prices, runs and clearances;
> Conspiring with the distributor-defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission prices, run, clearance and other license terms.

25

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 7 of the decree in enjoining these defendants, or either of them, from performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features.

26

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 7 of the decree, in decreeing that these defendants, or either of them, to the extent that any of their features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, should give the licensee the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license.

27

The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph 8 of the decree in enjoining these defendants from licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre not its own, in any manner except by the method and in the manner therein prescribed.

The Court erred in its Conclusion of Law 8(g) in concluding that these defendants, or either of them, had violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by individually conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films.

29

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 110 to the extent that it found that these defendants, or either of them, have discriminated against small independent exhibitors in favor of large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits.

[fol. 3962] 30

The Court erred in its Conclusion of Law 8(d) in concluding that these defendants, or either of them, have violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by:

> "Agreeing individually with their respective licensees to grant discriminatory license privileges to theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits, as found in Finding of Fact No. 110."

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 115 in finding that the theatre interests therein referred to between defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc. and an independent exhibitor enabled the parties to operate theatres collectively rather than competitively.

32

The Court erred in its Finding of Fact No. 116 in finding that when theatres are jointly owned by defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc. and an independent exhibitor it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures and that defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc. thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently.

The Court erred in so much of its Conclusions of Law No. 9(a) and 9(b) as conclude that defendant Paramount [fol. 3963] Pictures, Inc. violated the Sherman Act, as stated in said conclusion of law, by:

> Jointly operating motion picture theatres with any other defendant and with independents through operating agreements or profit-sharing leases;
>
> Jointly owning motion picture theatres with any other defendant and independents through stock interests in theatre buildings.

34

The Court erred in Section III, Paragraph (5) of the decree in enjoining defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc. "From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, * * * in conjunction with an independent [meaning any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question,] where such interest shall be greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years. The relationships between the defendants and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendants. In dissolving relationships * * * between defendants and independents which violate this provision, one defendant may acquire the interest of * * * [an] independent if such defendant desiring to acquire such interest shall show to the satisfaction of the court, and the court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures."

The Court erred in Section III, Paragraph (6) of the decree in enjoining defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc.

from expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in Section III, Paragraph 5 of the decree.

36

The Court erred in failing to decree that defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc. might expand its present theatre holdings for the purpose of acquiring interests in theatres in order to protect its investments or in order to enter a competitive field, upon a showing as to each new theatre that such acquisition would not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures in the competitive area where such theatre was to be acquired.

The Court erred in denying Paragraph I of these defendants' motion to amend and modify the decree so as to make Paragraph (6) of Section III thereof read as follows:

> "'From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever, except as permitted in the preceding paragraph; or for the purpose of acquiring theatres of interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field, if such defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Reasonable notice of the intention to make any such acquisition shall be [fol. 3965] served upon the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the Court.'"

The Court erred in denying Paragraph 4 of the motion of these defendants to amend and modify Conclusion of Law 9(d) to read as follows:

> "'Conspiring with the distributor defendants to receive discriminatory license privileges as found in Finding No. 110 above.'"

39

The Court erred in not specifically decreeing that defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc. might apply to the Court for permission to retain any presently owned partial interest in a theatre or group of theatres upon a showing to and finding by the Court that the retention of such partial interest did not or would not unreasonably restrain competition.

The Court erred in failing and refusing to decree as follows:

> "In any case where it is shown that a joint relationship between an exhibitor-defendant or a subsidiary thereof and an independent exhibitor resulted from the sale, transfer or other disposition by the exhibitor-defendant or a subsidiary thereof (or by a Trustee in Bankruptcy or other legal representative of either of them) of the partial interest to such independent exhibitor, the exhibitor-defendant may [fol. 3966] apply to this Court for permission to continue such relationship to the extent to which and in the places in which the parties to the joint relationship were not in competition at the time of such sale, transfer or other disposition of such partial interest."

The Court erred in decreeing in Section V of the decree that the consent decree entered November 20, 1940, should be of no further force or effect, except insofar as it might be necessary to conclude arbitration proceedings now pending, and to liquidate in an orderly manner the financial obligations of the defendants and the American Arbitration Association, and in failing to permit the said consent decree to remain in effect as a final determination between the plaintiff and the defendants as to the matters therein set forth.

The Court erred in failing to decree that disputes between one or more of the defendants and exhibitors arising under the decree should be determined by arbitration under the Rules of Arbitration provided for in the consent decree, as the same might be modified by the order of the Court from time to time.

The Court erred in denying the motions made by these defendants and each of them to dismiss the petition and amended and supplemental complaint and to strike exhibits and evidence upon the grounds set forth in their respective motions appearing at pages 383-4, 503-526 and 2501 of the Record.

44

The Court erred in so much of Finding of Fact No. 154 as states that there were illegalities and restraints in [fol. 3967] admission price fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents.

45

The Court erred in finding that these defendants or any of them violated the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C.), as amended, commonly known as the Sherman Act.

46

The Court erred in making and entering the decree appealed from.

47

The Court erred in Section III paragraph (2) of the decree in enjoining Paramount Pictures Inc. from continuing to perform existing agreements therein referred to with exhibitors not parties to this action.

Wherefore each of these defendants, severally prays that said decree, judgment and final order be reversed and a judgment rendered in favor of each of them.

Respectfully submitted, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, Attorneys for Defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, by Albert C. Bickford, a member of the firm, 120 Broadway, New York 5, N. Y.

Assignment of Errors and Prayer for Reversal—Filed February 6, 1947

Columbia Pictures Corporation and Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc., defendants in the above entitled cause, in connection with their petition for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, hereby assign error to the final Order and Decree of said District Court entered on Decem[fol. 3979] ber 31, 1946, in the above entitled cause, and to the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law filed on December 31, 1946, and say that in the entry of the final order and decree and in the filing of said findings and conclusions the District Court committed error to the prejudice of the said defendants in the following particulars:

I

As to the Findings and Conclusions

1. The Court erred in including in Finding No. 1 the following paragraph:

"Block-booking—The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period."

2. The Court erred in making Finding No. 93, which reads as follows:

"93. Block-booking, when the license of any feature is conditional upon taking of other features, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single features on their individual merits."

3. The Court erred in including in Finding No. 94 the following portion:

"94. * * * In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any, though sometimes the exhibitor was given a right of subsequent cancellation for a certain number of pictures. Because of complaints of block booking and blind-selling based upon the supposed unfairness of contracts which often includes pictures the inferior qual-[fol. 3980] ity of which could not be known, Section III and IV of the consent decree required the five consenting distributors to trade-show their films before offering them for license and limited the number which might be included in any contract to five."

4. The Court erred in making Finding No. 97, which reads as follows:

"97. Blind-selling is a practice whereby a distributor licenses a feature before the exhibitor is afforded an opportunity to view it."

And in failing to add as requested by defendants the following:

"1. In the early stages of the industry producers sold their pictures by the State Right method, both in the United States and throughout the world (1732-3). This was an uncertain operation and failed to give satisfactory revenue to the producers, and in the early 1920s the producers of pictures began to sell their pictures in blocks of a season's product in advance (1733-4). Columbia embarked on that system of distribution in 1929 and was compelled thereby to finance itself to the extent of a million dollars (1734-5). It has sold its pictures continuously since then in blocks of all or part of the season's product in advance (1735). All of the other distributing companies have sold their pictures in the same manner, except that the defendants, RKO, MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner and Paramount began to sell their pictures in blocks of five on the entry of the consent decree herein.

2. The exhibitors know fairly accurately what they purchase from Columbia when they buy its pictures in block at the beginning of each season. They know it [fol. 3981] from the history of the company, the type of releases it has, and because Columbia describes as adequately as possible its prospective pictures by title, by story and by stars (1736-7).

3. There is no such thing as blind selling (1812), and there is no proof in this record that any exhibitor in entering into a block booking contract with Columbia was misled with respect to the product or that he did not know what kind of pictures he was getting or that he was at any disadvantage by reason of such blockbooking contract (1736, 1759, 1812-3), and pictures are sold today as they always have been, on the star, the story, the director and similar elements (1630-3).

4. During the period in question every agreement or contract by Columbia granting an exhibition right was in the nature of a limited exclusive right granted to a theatre owner—first the physical possession of a positive print, a tangible piece of property and second, the intangible right of license to publicly perform in his theatre the copyrighted subject contained in the positive print with no right to assign that performing right to anybody else; that the right was limited to exhibit or publicly perform said copyrighted work only in the particular theatre or theatres listed in the contract for the specific number of days included in the contract, with no right to lease or sell or in any way dispose of any part of the tangible property or print to anybody else, and with a further condition that when the public performance was completed under the contract, the print was to be returned to Columbia's exchange.

5. During the period in question Columbia did not sell or part with the title to any of the positive prints of any of the motion pictures distributed by it to any [fol. 3982] of the exhibitors exhibiting its motion pictures in the United States of America.

6. During the period in question Columbia, through its selling or licensing organization, solicited the various exhibitors of motion picture photoplays, in the United States of America, and tried to secure from said exhibitors exhibition license agreements under the terms of which said exhibitors would agree to exhibit all of the Columbia photoplays or a part of the Columbia photoplays, or any part of the Columbia photoplays that were available for exhibition for some run in said exhibitors' theatres.

7. During the period in question Columbia did not condition the licensing of any photoplay in any exhibitors' theatre upon that exhibitor's agreement to license other Columbia photoplays for exhibition in said theatre.

8. During the period in question Columbia licensed the exhibition of its pictures both to the so-called affiliated theatres and independent theatres on flat rental terms, percentage terms and guarantee against percentage terms.

9. During the period in question Columbia licensed its pictures for exhibition to both affiliated and independent theatres on so-called 'selective' contracts and did not discriminate in favor of affiliated against independent theatres, and granted not only the same rights of selection to both affiliated and independent theatres but granted greater selectivity to the independents.

10. During each of the years in question in excess of 600 feature photoplays were generally released in the United States of America, exclusive of so-called foreign made films. That Columbia releases during [fol. 3983] the same period equalled a comparatively small number of feature photoplays generally released in the United States each year including top features, features of lesser merit, Westerns and shorts; that at no time during said period did Columbia monopolize or attempt to monopolize or had it the power to monopolize the distribution market in the United States of America, or any section thereof."

5. The Court erred in including in Finding No. 154 that portion thereof which reads as follows:

"The illegalities and restraints herein found are * * * in block-booking."

6. The Court erred in including in Finding No. 156 the words "block-booking" as one of the practices which have been found unreasonable to restrict competition, and in failing to add as requested by defendants the following:

"22. The course of conduct of the defendant, Columbia, during the period in question, was to license its product for first run or any run open to independent exhibitors either operating in competition with the defendant exhibitors or not in competition, including the key cities in the United States having a population of 100,000 or over, wherever independent exhibitors operated theatres.

23. In conducting its business of distributing motion pictures and making exhibition license agreements during the period in question, Columbia conducted all its negotiations and made all its contracts, whether with independents or affiliated exhibitors, or unaffiliated circuits, without any intent, purpose or effect to bring about a monopoly in the distribution or exhibition business, or to unduly restrain Inter- [fol. 3984] state Commerce, but merely licensed its product in the market the way it found it, and with the sole purpose and intent of receiving the maximum amount of revenue legitimately possible for all pictures distributed by it. • • •

25. Columbia owns no theatres and may not look to such sources for its market. Other companies which sell their pictures by block booking and which own no theatres are Universal, Republic, Monogram and Producer's Releasing Corporation.

26. The method of selling pictures by block booking eliminates to some extent the hazard and gamble involved in producing pictures. In 1928-9 Columbia spent $1,632,300 in production; in 1944-5 it spent (estimated), $16,689,700 (Exhibit C-2). It could not have increased its budget and spent these moneys unless it had the assurance of a ready market which only block booking has given it, and block booking is vital and necessary to Columbia for its continued existence as a producer (1737). To sell pictures singly Columbia would have to change its whole financial base, it would have to obtain moneys by way of refinancing or stock issue to sink into an inventory and keep the same on the shelf for a period of time; whereas block booking enables Columbia to turn over its pictures rapidly and to put its money back into the production of pictures quickly (1737). To sell pictures singly means to freeze Columbia's capital so that it would require more capital with which to operate, and that Columbia could not very well do (1754).

27. If Columbia has to sell pictures singly it will have to go through many more sales campaigns each year and increase its personnel, all at a substantial increase in overhead (1749-50). The exhibitors [fol. 3985] throughout the country generally have accepted block booking as an advantageous form of purchasing pictures and they desire to continue to purchase their pictures by block booking, as it gives them an assurance of product (1737, 1760, 2018); and exhibitors ever since the Consent Decree have demanded the restoration of block booking with respect to the defendants, MGM, RKO, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner and Paramount and have voiced great dissatisfaction in their conventions and meetings with the sale of pictures in small blocks or five or less (1761-3, 1789-91). There is no proof in this record that block booking violates the Sherman Act or that it is in restraints of trade or commerce.

28. Columbia and Universal under their respective contracts (2019) give a substantial degree of selectivity to their exhibitors when they sell their pictures in block (2017-8) and they give a greater degree of selectivity to the independents than to the affiliated exhibitors (1750). In this manner the exhibitor is protected against having bad pictures foisted upon him.

29. Columbia gives film rental adjustments to all of its exhibitor customers, and in fact, gives greater adjustments to independents than it does to affiliates (1757).

30. A great deal of Columbia's product is sold to the great mass of theatres in small towns on double features (1758).

31. Block booking has been a common method of selling pictures; it reduces selling expenses, but does not freeze pictures and inventories, and keeps them moving off the shelves as rapidly as they are produced; [fol. 3986] it creates a ready market for the producers and enables them to invest their capital with some reasonable hope of recoupment; and is a form of selling which the exhibitors desire to continue, as it assures them a ready market (2018) and relieves them of the burden, time and expense of making individual deals for each picture which they exhibit. There is no proof in this record that any exhibitor was ever hurt or injured in his business or property by reason of block booking.

32. No exhibitor took the stand and testified with respect to block booking.

33. The abolition of block booking in this industry places Columbia at an economic disadvantage as against all other producers of motion pictures who own theatres, because the defendants who own theatres have a ready market for their pictures and may to some extent reduce the gamble and hazard of production, whereas defendant, Columbia, and other producers similarly situated have no ready market, so that in effect the abolition of block booking sought by the Government is a plain case of discrimination in favor of the defendants herein who own their own theatres, and far from freeing the market for competition, the net result will be just the opposite.

34. Block booking has been found to be a perfectly legal practice by the courts in Westway Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Company, Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount, and United States v. Crescent and there is no decision by the Supreme Court which has ever condemned it."

7. The Court erred in including in its Conclusion of Law No. 8 the following portion:

[fol. 3987] "(g) Individually conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films, except in the case of the United Artists Corporation;"

8. The Court erred in making its Conclusion of Law No. 11, which reads as follows:

"11. Block-booking as hereinabove defined, violates the Sherman Act."

II

As to Final Order and Decree

9. The Court erred in including in the final order and decree entered December 31, 1948, and more particularly in Section II thereof, paragraphs 7, 8 and 9, reading as follows:

"7. From performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature.

8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:

[fol. 3988] (a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run [other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor] selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;

(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;

(c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competitive area may bid for such license, and in his bid shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for [fol. 3989] to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words 'exclude simultaneous exhibition' shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words 'competitive area' shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

(e) A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of ninety-five per cent or more, either directly or through affiliates or subsidiaries.

9. From arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with another theatre not owned or operated by a defendant distributor, or its affiliate or subsidiary, made by registered mail, addressed to the home office of the distributor, to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. Such demand shall be deemed to have been refused either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of a refusal in writing or upon the expiration of ten days after the receipt of the exhibitor's demand."

[fol. 3990] Wherefore, defendants pray that the action of the District Court in making the findings and conclusions heretofore set forth and in failing to add the matter heretofore set forth submitted by defendant, and the action of the District Court in including in the final order and decree of December 31, 1946, the paragraphs hereinbefore set forth, may be held erroneous and said decree accordingly reversed and the cause remanded for the elimination of the aforesaid findings and conclusions and the elimination of said paragraphs in the decree, and for such other and fit relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

PETITION FOR APPEAL—Filed February 20, 1947

United Artists Corporation, one of the defendants in the above entitled cause, considering itself aggrieved by (1) the findings and conclusions filed by the Court on December 31, 1946, and (2) the final order and decree of this Court entered on December 31, 1946, does hereby pray an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Pursuant to Rule 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, the defendant presents to this Court herewith a statement [fol. 4006] showing the basis of jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to entertain an appeal in this cause.

The particulars wherein the defendant considers the action of the Court erroneous are set forth in the assignment of errors and prayer for reversal accompanying this petition and to which reference is hereby made.

Defendant prays that its appeal may be allowed and that citation be issued as provided by law, and that a transcript of the record, proceedings and documents upon which said final order and decree was based, duly authenticated, be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States under the rules of said Court in such cases made and provided.

Dated: New York, this 20th day of February, 1947.

Assignment of Errors and Prayer for Reversal—Filed February 20, 1947

United Artists Corporation, one of the defendants in the above entitled cause, in connection with its petition for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, hereby assigns error to the final Order and Decree of said District Court entered on December 31, 1946, in the above entitled cause, and to the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law filed on December 31, 1946, and says that in the entry of the final order and decree and in the filing of said findings [fol. 4011] and conclusions the District Court committed error to the prejudice of the said defendant in the following particulars:

The Court erred in not including in its Findings the following:

1. That during the entire period in question each Producer of each picture released by United Artists has had and has exercised the full right of exhibition contract approval on all pictures distributed by United Artists in the United States of America.

2. As a general rule each engagement for each exhibition in each theatre is licensed under a separate written contract on the usual printed form used by United Artists Corporation.

3. That the general and usual practice in the licensing of United Artists pictures to exhibitors is as follows: A salesman negotiates a contract or an application for the exhibition of each of the pictures released by United Artists Corporation separately and apart from any other pictures released by United Artists Corporation; that application is forwarded to the home office at New York City and if it bears the approval of the local branch manager or the district manager, it then, and only then, is forwarded to the New York home office; after it is passed upon by the home office of United Artists Corporation it is then submitted to the individual producer's representative in New York for approval or rejection by said producer's representative; if approved, it then is returned to the exhibitor, and if rejected, there is no deal.

4. In isolated cases negotiations are conducted separately for each picture and for convenience more than one picture may be included in a submission or proposed deal. If more than one is included the home office of United [fol. 4012] Artists breaks the deal down by each respective producer and submits the deal to each separate producer's representative for approval or rejection, just as in the case of a separate individual submission.

5. During the period in question every agreement or contract granting an exhibition right was in the nature of a limited exclusive right granted to a theatre owner—first, the physical possession of a positive print, a tangible piece of property, and, second, the intangible right of license to publicly perform in his theatre the copyrighted subject contained in the positive print with no right to assign that performing right to anybody else; that the limited right to exhibit or publicly perform said copyrighted work only in the particular theatre or theatres listed in the contract for the specific number of days included in the contract with no right to lease or sell or in any way dispose of any part of the tangible property or print to anybody else; with a further condition that when the public performance was completed under the contract, the print was to be returned to United's exchange.

6. During the period in question United did not sell or part with the title to any of the positive prints of any of the motion pictures distributed by it to any of the exhibitors exhibiting its motion pictures in the United States of America.

7. During the period in question United Artists through its selling or licensing organization solicited as many exhibitors as possible in the United States of America and tried to secure from said exhibitors separate exhibition license agreements for each of the photoplays distributed by United Artists that were available for exhibition for some run in said exhibitor's theatres.

8. During the period in question United licensed the exhibition of its pictures both to the so-called affiliated theatres [fol. 4013] and independent theatres on flat rental terms, percentage terms and guarantee against percentage terms.

9. During the period in question United Artists licensed the exhibition of each of its pictures generally for approximately 10,000 to 12,000 runs. In order to serve the 12,000 runs United bought from 150 to 350 positive prints for each of the pictures released by it depending upon the quality of the pictures and the number of runs. In each of the communities with theatres, depending upon the number of theatres and the population, United was required to service 12,000 runs with the aforesaid number of prints. The runs therefore varied in the smallest communities where the usual rule was one run for the community to the large key cities like New York where the picture might have in excess of 100 runs. United therefore licensed its pictures first run, second run, third run and in many other variants of runs in said cities which had more than one run of each picture, it being the desired purpose of United Artists to secure as many runs as possible on the best terms obtainable for each of its pictures in every community.

10. In order to secure as much revenue as possible from each picture United Artists licensed its pictures on these runs with variant time intervals between each run which time intervals are generally referred to in the business as "clearance periods".

In many of the contracts in evidence these clearance provisions are set out in the contract; in many others there are no provisions for clearance.

11. There is no evidence that the extent, duration or area of clearance stipulated in any United Artists contract was arrived at in any other manner other than independent negotiation between United Artists and the other contracting party.

12. In attempting to license the exhibition rights of its photoplays during the period in question United Artists [fol. 4014] licensed its photoplays in intensive competition with the other distributors of motion pictures, to-wit: Loew's, 20th Century-Fox, Paramount, Warners, Universal, RKO, Columbia, all of whom are defendants in this action, and with Republic, Monogram, PRC and other distributors of motion pictures.

13. That if United Artists wished to license its photoplays to exhibitors desiring to acquire said licenses, United Artists, if it was to license its pictures, had to meet the competition both in run and in clearance of United Artists' competitors.

14. As a result of said competition certain uniformities in clearance both in duration and area appear in the various competitive areas in which multiple runs are licensed in the United States of America.

15. In the orderly operation of a theatre in a competitive area where multiple runs are shown, each exhibitor endeavors to secure from each distributor the same clearance both as to duration and area from whom he licensed the same run in such competitive area.

16. United Artists, in an effort to sell as many runs as possible in every competitive area where multiple runs are shown because of the competitive conditions aforesaid, and notwithstanding the separate negotiations with each exhibitor for the licensing of its runs, licensed the exhibition rights of its pictures to the exhibitors involved in the competitive areas with stipulated clearances which did not differ from the clearances which the exhibitor licensed from other distributor competitors of United Artists.

17. By licensing successive runs and making them available to all types and classes of theatres, charging all kinds and types of admission prices, United Artists made it possible during the period in question for the maximum num-[fol. 4015] ber of theatres to obtain its pictures on all types of rental contracts and for varying amounts of film rental, so that the maximum number of people were able to see the pictures distributed by United Artists. By so doing United Artists obtained the maximum flow in Interstate Commerce of the positive prints distributed by it during the period in question.

18. A picture, when produced by any so-called "United Artists Producer", is in negative form. In order to be projected onto the screen, so that it may be viewed by the public, the picture must be in positive form. Therefore, from the negative of each picture, positive prints must be made. United Artists licenses some of its features for exhibition in more than twelve thousand theatres throughout the United States. In many cases, the aggregate of the admission prices paid by the public to see a United Artists feature in one of these theatres will not equal the cost to United Artists in making a positive print of the feature, and, in the great majority of cases, the license fee paid to United Artists by a theatre for the license to exhibit a United Artists feature is considerably less than the cost of making a positive print. The average number of prints of a feature which United Artists has found practical and economic to make is far less than the number of theatres in any one of the twenty-six exchange districts, and the cost of making a positive print varies from $100 to $1,000.00.

19. Because of the foregoing facts, it is a practical impossibility for prints of a feature to be made available by United Artists for simultaneous exhibition in all theatres desiring to show the feature. There are also reasons of showmanship which make simultaneous availability wholly impractical. Under such a setup, the public interest in any given area in a feature picture, which must be built up by repeated exhibitions in various theatres, accompanied by intensive advertising and promotion by each, would be lacking. Furthermore, any member of the public would have but [fol. 4016] one opportunity to see a feature, so that those who were not able to see it on the dates when all theatres in the area exhibited it would never be able to see it.

20. There is no evidence in the record that any exhibitor ever sought a run licensed by United Artists to a competing exhibitor or was ever refused a license by United Artists to exhibit any United Artists picture for that run or any other run that such exhibitor may have sought from United Artists.

21. There is no evidence that any of the clearances licensed by United Artists in any of the exhibition contracts in evidence in this case adversely affected the interest of any exhibitor of motion pictures operating in competition with any of the theatres to which said clearance was licensed.

22. There is no evidence that any exhibitor operating in competition with any of the theatres to which United Artists licensed clearance in any of the contracts in evidence sought from United Artists the same licenses or similar licenses with similar clearances or were refused licenses by United Artists of similar character.

23. None of the clearances shown to have been granted by United Artists was proved to have been unreasonable in duration, area or otherwise.

24. There is no evidence in the record that United Artists discriminated between affiliated and independent theatres in specifying their clearance over other theatres.

25. There is no evidence in the record that United Artists acted concertedly with any other defendant or with any exhibitor to unreasonably restrain the trade of subsequent run theatres through the fixing of clearance for prior run theatres.

[fol. 4017] 26. There is no evidence in the record that the theatres licensed by United Artists for first and prior runs were not those theatres which would be normally selected by an unaffiliated distributor for such purpose, without giving any consideration to the existence or non-existence of producer-distributor affiliation.

27. That since October 1941 the only provision in the printed form of the United Artists exhibition contracts regarding admission prices was as follows:

"EXHIBITOR warrants he Charges Minimum Admission

(After 5 P. M.—Adults ..... Children .....)
(Matinee —Adults ..... Children .....)"

28. There were no provisions in said contract which required any exhibitor to charge the particular admission which he warranted he charged for the exhibition of the picture licensed to him or that he continue to maintain the minimum admission price, nor did said contracts contain any other provision either of a penalty nature or otherwise concerning minimum admission prices.

29. If there was any similarity in admission prices in any of United Artists' license agreements to any of the admission prices in any other Distributor's exhibition license agreements, it was due to the following fact and circumstances:

Admission prices stipulated in the contracts where similarity existed were the admission prices that the exhibitor charged regularly at his theatre;

If United Artists wished to license a run of any picture to said exhibitor, it would have to meet the competition of the other Distributors of motion pictures in connection with admission price provisions and said similarity was the result of said competition rather than agreement between any of the Distributors. At no time [fol. 4018] during the period in question did United Artists make any license agreement with any exhibitor fixing the resale price of any of the tangible property licensed to any of the exhibitors.

30. The course of conduct of the defendant, United Artists, during the period in question, was to license its product for first run or any run open to independent exhibitors either operating in competition with the defendant exhibitors or not in competition, including the key cities in the United States having a population of 100,000 or over, wherever independent exhibitors operated theatres.

31. In conducting its business of distribution of motion pictures and making exhibition license agreements during the period in question, United Artists conducted all its negotiations and made all of its contracts, whether with independent or affiliated exhibitors, or unaffiliated circuits, without any intent, purpose or effect to bring about a monopoly in the distribution or exhibition business, or to unduly restrain Interstate Commerce, but merely to license its product in the market the way it found it and with the sole purpose and intent of receiving the maximum amount of revenue legitimately possible for all pictures distributed by it.

32. That at all times during the period in question the defendant United Artists licensed the exhibition of each of its pictures separately for each of its Producers and could not, because of its contractual commitments to its Producers, make any license agreements with any exhibitor without the written approval of each separate Producer and because of the aforesaid it could not bring about a monopoly in the distribution or exhibition business and did not or could not unduly restrain Interstate Commerce in the licensing of its motion pictures in the United States of America.

[fol. 4019] 33. That during the period in question and particularly since October, 1941, the defendant, United Artists, did not include in its exhibition license agreements any provisions requiring any exhibitor to charge a minimum admission price for the exhibition of any of its pictures in any of the theatres to which it licensed exhibition rights.

34. In distributing motion pictures and making exhibition license agreements, United Artists conducted all of its negotiations and made all of its contracts, whether with independent or affiliated exhibitors, or unaffiliated circuits, without any intent or purpose to bring about a monopoly in the distribution or exhibition business, or to unduly restrain Interstate Commerce, and merely licensed its product to the market as it found it, with the sole purpose and intent of receiving the maximum amount of revenue legitimately possible for all pictures distributed by it.

35. In licensing its motion pictures, which were articles of free commerce, to the various defendants which operated chains of theatres, United Artists had no knowledge or intent that the exhibition of its said motion pictures by said defendants would further or promote violations of the Sherman Act.

36. In licensing its motion pictures to theatres, United Artists did not cooperate with them or any of them in any violation of the Sherman Act.

The Court erred in not including the following proposed Conclusions of Law submitted by the defendant United Artists Corporation:

37. The combination of conspiracy alleged in the complaint as to the United Artists defendants has not been established. These defendants did not at any time during the period involved in this case combine with the defendant distributors, defendant exhibitors or any of their affiliates [fol. 4020] unreasonably to restrain interstate trade or commerce in motion picture films to monopolies or attempt to monopolize the distribution or exhibition of motion picture films in the United States of America.

38. A decree should be entered herein dismissing the complaint against United Artists Corporation, defendant.

The Court erred in including in its Findings of Fact, as to the defendant United Artists Corporation, the following:

39. In licensing features, each of the distributor defendants has agreed with each of its respective licensees that the licensee should charge no less than a stated admission price during the exhibition of the feature licensed.

40. The defendants' licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all of the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors. Thus there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both the distributors and exhibitors were involved. The licenses required existing admission price schedules to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction. In the case of such exceptional features as "Gone With The Wind", "For Whom The Bell Tolls", "Wilson", and "Song of Bernadette", licensed for exhibition prior to general release and as to which the distributors were not satisfied with current prices, they would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised.

[fol. 4021] 42. All of the five major defendants have a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which they own theatres and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing films to exhibitors in those areas. Even if the licenses were at flat rate, a failure to require their licensees to maintain fixed prices would leave them free for lowering the current charge to decrease through competition the income to the licensor on theatres in the neighborhood. The whole system presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas. There exists great similarity, and in many cases identity, in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatres in the licenses of all of the defendants.

43. Licenses granted by one defendant to another disclose the same inter-relationship among the defendants. Each of the five major defendants as an exhibitor has been licensed by the other seven defendants as distributors to exhibit the pictures of the latter at specified minimum admission prices. RKO, Loew's, Warner, Paramount, and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum admission prices specified, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and Columbia, Universal, and United Artists, in requiring the maintenance of minimum admission prices in their licenses granted to these exhibitor-defendants, have participated in that system.

44. The distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices.

45. In agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price [fol. 4022] structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's feature in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum admission prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby erected.

46. The differentials in admission price set by a distributor in licensing a particular feature in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area are calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see the picture in the prior-run theatres where they will pay higher prices than in the subsequent runs. The reason for this is that if 10,000 people of a city's population are ultimately to see the feature—no matter on what run—the gross revenue to be realized from their patronage is increased relatively.

47. Some licenses granted clearance to all theatres which the exhibitor party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the exhibitor's theatre thereafter erected or opened. The purpose of this type of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive features normally entering into such determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor party to the agreement.

48. The distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearance for the [fol. 4023] theatres to which they license their films and the exhibitors-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system.

49. The defendants have acted in concert in their grant of run and clearance.

50. Both independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with the defendants, have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatre or theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures.

51. Competition can be introduced into the present system of fixed admission prices, clearances, and runs, by requiring a defendant-distributor when licensing its features to grant the license for each run at a reasonable clearance (if clearance is involved) to the highest bidder, if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable, the one offering the best terms shall receive the license. Thus, price fixing among the licensors or between a licensor and its licensees as well a the non-competitive clearance system may be terminated.

52. Master agreements which cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion, have been entered into by the distributor defendants, and unreasonably restrain trade.

53. Franchises have been entered into by the distributor defendants, and unreasonably restrain trade, because they [fol. 4024] cover too long a period (more than one season), and also because they embrace all the features released by a given distributor.

54. Various contract provisions by which discriminations against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits were accomplished are: suspending the terms of a given contract, if a circuit theatre remains closed for more than eight weeks, and reinstating it without liability upon reopening; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films; allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played; granting moveovers and extended runs; granting road-show privileges; allowing overage and underage; granting unlimited playing time; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent producers; granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes. These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors.

55. The discriminations referred to in Finding 110 would appear to be impossible under a system where the exhibitors competing for a license to exhibit a given feature on a given run do so on a parity since the same offer must be made to all prospective exhibitors in each competitive area.

56. The illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unrea- [fol. 4025] sonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited.

The Court erred in including in its Conclusions of Law, as to the defendant United Artists Corporation, the following:

57. The defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's, Incorporated;

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Proctor Corporation; RKO Midwest Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; National Theatres Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchanges, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and attempted to monopolize such trade and commerce, both before and after the entry of said consent decree, in violation of the Sherman Act by:

(a) Acquiescing in the establishment of a price fixing system by conspiring with one another to maintain theatre admission prices;

(b) Conspiring with each other to maintain a nationwide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform in each local competitive area.

[fol. 4026] 58. The distributor defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation, have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and attempted to monopolize such trade and commerce, both before and after the entry of said consent decree, in violation of the Sherman Act by:

(a) Conspiring with each other to maintain a nationwide system of fixed minimum motion picture theatre admission prices;

(b) Agreeing individually with their respective licensees to fix minimum motion picture theatre admission prices;

(c) Conspiring with each other to maintain a nationwide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform as to each local competitive area;

(d) Agreeing individually with their respective licensees to grant discriminatory license privileges to theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits as found in Finding No. 110 above;

(e) Agreeing individually with such licensees to grant unreasonable clearance against theatres operated by their competitors;

(f) Making master agreements and franchises with such licensees;

(g) Individually conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films, except in the case of the United Artists Corporation;

[fol. 4027] (h) The defendants Paramount and RKO making formula deals.

59. The Formula deals, master agreements and franchises referred to in Findings 86, 88 and 89 have tended to restrain trade and violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

60. Block-booking as hereinabove defined, violates the Sherman Act.

The Court erred in including in its Decree, as to the defendant United Artists Corporation, the following provisions:

61. Each of the defendant distributors, Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation [formerly known as Vitagraph, Inc.]; Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation; and the successors of each of them, and any and all individuals who act in behalf of any thereof with respect to the matters enjoined, and each corporation in which said defendants or any of them own a direct or indirect stock interest of more than fifty per cent, is hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means.

2. From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances; the term "clearances" as used herein meaning [fol. 4028] the period of time stipulated in license contracts which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

3. From granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof.

5. From further performing any existing franchise to which it is a party and from making any franchises in the future. The term "franchise" as used herein means a licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements, entered into as a part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of agreement.

6. From making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party. The term "formula deal" as used herein means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The term "master agreement" means a licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal" covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres usually comprising a circuit.

7. From performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned [fol. 4029] upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature.

8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:

(a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run [other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor] selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;

(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;

(c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competi- [fol. 4030] tive area may bid for such license, and in his bid shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words "exclude simultaneous exhibition" shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words "competitive area" shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

(e) A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of ninety-five per cent or more, either directly or through affiliates or subsidiaries.

9. From arbitrarily refusing to demand of an exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with [fol. 4031] another theatre not owned or operated by a defendant distributor, or its affiliate or subsidiary, made by registered mail, addressed to the home office of the distributor, to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. Such demand shall be deemed to have been refused either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of a refusal in writing or upon the expiration of ten days after the receipt of the exhibitor's demand.

62. Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of each distributor-defendant to license, or in any way to arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which such distributor-defendant has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this Decree, a proprietary interest of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries.

63. For the purpose of securing compliance with this Decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint [fol. 4032] or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

64. Paragraphs 7 and 8 of Section II of this judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947.

Wherefore, defendant United Artists Corporation prays that the action of the District Court in making the Findings and Conclusions heretofore set forth and in failing to add the matter heretofore set forth submitted by said defendant, and the action of the District Court in including in the final order and decree of December 31, 1946, the paragraphs hereinbefore set forth, may be held erroneous and said Decree accordingly reversed and the cause remanded for the elimination of said paragraphs in the Decree, and for such other and fit relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

Petition for Appeal, Assignments of Error and Prayer for Reversal—Filed February 20, 1947

Petition for Appeal

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., (sued herein as Universal Corporation and Universal Pictures Company [fol. 4039] Inc.), Universal Film Exchanges Inc., and Big U Film Exchange, Inc., defendants herein, feeling themselves aggrieved by the decree rendered and entered in the above entitled cause on the 31st day of December, 1946, hereby appeal from the said decree to the Supreme Court of the United States, for the reasons set forth in the Assignments of Error filed herewith, and pray that their respective appeals be allowed, and that citations be issued as provided by law, and that a transcript of the record, proceedings and documents upon which said decree was based, duly authenticated, be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the rules of such Court in such cases made and provided. Pursuant to Rule 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, the above named defendants present to this Court herewith a statement showing the basis of jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to entertain an appeal in this cause.

ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR

And the said Universal Pictures Company, Inc., (sued herein as Universal Corporation and Universal Pictures Company Inc.), Universal Film Exchanges Inc., and Big U Film Exchange, Inc.,* file the following Assignments of Error upon which they shall rely in the prosecution of their respective appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, herewith petitioned for in said cause from the decree of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, entered on the 31st day of December, 1946.

[fol. 4040] The District Court erred:

1. In finding that Universal combined, or conspired and agreed with the other distributor defendants, or any of them, to fix and maintain minimum admission prices in motion-picture theatres.

2. In finding that Universal participated, in violation of the Sherman Act, in a national minimum admission price-fixing system in motion picture theatres, found to have resulted from the practices of the producer-distributor-exhibitor defendants in granting and accepting licenses for feature pictures to and from each other, with minimum admission prices specified.

3. In finding Universal guilty of the violations of the Sherman Act set forth in Assignments of Error Nos. 1 and 2 on the sole basis of the minimum admission prices.

* The term Universal as used herein refers to one or more of these corporations.

which it specified in its licenses for particular motion-picture theatres being similar to those specified by other defendant-distributors, when such similarity as existed was fully accounted for by the practice of exhibitors in maintaining the same admission price from day to day in a particular theatre irrespective of what distributor's pictures were being shown.

4. In finding that the minimum admission prices specified by Universal in its license agreements with particular theatres were in general uniform with the minimum admission prices specified by the seven other distributor-defendants in their license agreements with said theatres.

5. In finding that each of Universal's license contracts of copyrighted pictures constituted illegal price-fixing [fol. 4041] under the Sherman Act in that the maintenance as a minimum of the admission price currently being charged by the theatre licensed was required under specified penalties.

6. In finding that Universal's license contracts with its various licensees constituted an illegal price-fixing system by reason of the fact that they required the maintenance as a minimum of the admission price currently being charged by the theatre licensed.

7. In finding (if it was intended to so find) that Universal, in the case of exceptional features, refused to grant licenses unless the exhibitors licensed would raise their current admission prices.

8. In finding that Universal by requiring the maintenance as a minimum of currently charged admission prices, during the showing of its licensed pictures, and by fixing differentials in price between the various runs in a competitive area, attempted to give prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible, if thereby the Court intended to find that Universal participated in an illegal monopolizing.

9. In finding that Universal in its license agreements commonly specified clearances in terms of the clearances fixed by other distributors.

10. In finding that Universal illegally granted unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents.

11. In finding that Universal acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances, in violation of the [fol. 4042] Sherman Act, and acted in concert with the other defendant-distributors in the formation of such a system.

12. In finding, if it was intended to so find, that Universal's granting of clearances to all of the theatres in the immediate vicinity of a licensee's theatre, which might thereafter be erected or opened, was not upon a competitive basis, i.e. did not have a reasonable relation to the reward to which Universal was entitled under its copyrights, but that such clearances were illegal because granted upon the sole basis of whether the theatres to be thereafter erected or opened were operated by the exhibitor party to the agreement.

13. In finding that Universal acted in concert with the other defendants in its granting of runs.

14. In finding that Universal participated with the other defendant-distributors and exhibitors in a fixed system of clearances, runs and admission prices, to which independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with it, have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition, either with defendants' theatres or with those theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures.

15. In finding, if it was intended to so find, that Universal's purpose in granting clearances was to protect particular runs against subsequent runs, and not to augment its own revenue from its copyrights in a legal manner.

16. In finding and concluding that licenses of a feature to circuits of theatres in return for a film rental measured [fol. 4043] by a percentage of the national gross receipts (formula deals) unreasonably restrained interstate commerce in and of themselves, irrespective of the economic power of the distributor entering in them, irrespective of their misuse by the exhibitor, and irrespective of whether or not they were made with affiliated exhibitors, large independent circuits or small independent circuits.

17. In finding and concluding that licensing arrangements with theatre circuits wherein all the theatres of the circuit were included in a single agreement (master agreements), without affording other theatre owners an opportunity to bid for the picture in their several areas, seriously and unreasonably restrained interstate competition in and of themselves, irrespective of the factors set forth in the preceding Assignment of Error.

18. In finding that Universal cooperated in an unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce with exhibitors by entering into master agreements with theatre chains, because such agreements might be misused in that the licensed exhibitors could allocate the film rentals paid among their theatres as they saw fit and could exhibit the features upon such playing time as they deemed best, and could otherwise act within their discretion.

19. In finding and concluding that the practice of Universal in committing its pictures for more than a year to particular exhibitors for particular runs (franchises) unreasonably restrained interstate commerce in and of itself because said franchises covered too long periods and embraced all the pictures released by Universal, without respect to the effect upon competition under the particular circumstances.

[fol. 4044] 20. In finding and concluding that the franchises granted by Universal to small independent theatre chains were illegal in and of themselves for the foregoing reasons, and without respect to their competitive effect.

21. In finding and concluding that the franchises granted by Universal to individual independent exhibitors were illegal in and of themselves for the foregoing reasons, and without respect to their competitive effect.

22. In defining a franchise without specifying the necessity of its including the grant of preferential exhibition rights, i.e., as a mere long-term commitment.

23. In passing upon the legality of Universal's franchises with independent exhibitors, as defined in the amended and supplemental complaint, which was not an issue in the case.

24. In finding that Universal for many years licensed its films in "blocks" or indivisible groups before they had been actually produced, if by such finding it was intended to find that Universal ever conditioned the selling of one or more of its pictures upon the purchaser's taking some or all of the remainder thereof.

25. In finding, if it was intended to so find, that Universal required licensees to accept all of its films in order to obtain any.

26. In finding, if it was intended to so find, that Universal through selling its pictures before they were produced, promised pictures of good quality or of a certain type, which when produced proved to be of poor quality or of another [fol. 4045] type, and in further finding, if it was intended to so find, that Universal hindered competing distributors in this way from marketing their products and caused them to lose their outlets for future pictures.

27. In finding, if it was intended to to so find, that Universal, through any of the various license provisions recited in finding of fact No. 110, individually discriminated against small independent exhibitors and in favor of large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits, and in holding this, in and of itself, to be a violation of the Sherman Act.

28. In the making of findings Nos. 152, 153, 154, 155 and 156, insofar as such findings by exculpating the theatre-owning defendants in respect of their activities in acquiring licenses for motion pictures and in the exhibition thereof, find, infer or conclude that any of the restraints or illegalities found by the Court are attributable to the activities of the Universal defendants.

29. In concluding that the Universal defendants have combined and conspired with the other defendants to unreasonably restrain interstate commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, and have attempted to monopolize such trade and commerce in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, through participating in a nation-wide system of fixed motion-picture theatre minimum admission prices, and in a nation-wide system of runs and clearances which are substantially uniform in each local competitive area.

30. In concluding that the Universal defendants have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and have attempted [fol. 4046] to monopolize such trade and commerce in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by:

(a) Conspiring with the other defendant-distributors to maintain a nation-wide system of fixed minimum motion-picture theatre admission prices;

(b) Agreeing with their licensees to fix minimum motion picture theatre admission prices;

(c) Conspiring with the other defendant-distributors to maintain a nation-wide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform as to each local competitive area;

(d) Agreeing with their licensees to grant discriminatory license privileges to theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits as found in finding No. 110;

(e) Agreeing with their licensees to grant unreasonable clearance against theatres operated by their competitors;

(f) Making master agreements and franchises with such licensees;

(g) Conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted film upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films.

31. In concluding that Universal has combined and conspired to unreasonably restrain interstate trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, and has attempted to monopolize the same in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by conditioning the [fol. 4047] offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films.

32. In concluding that the master agreements made by Universal violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

33. In concluding that the franchises made by Universal, including the franchises with small independent exhibitors, violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

34. In decreeing that the Universal defendants shall be permanently enjoined from granting any license under copyright in which the minimum price for admission to an affiliated theatre is fixed by the parties.

35. In decreeing that the Universal defendants shall be permanently enjoined from granting any license under copyright to an independent chain of theatres or a single independent theatre, in which minimum prices for admission are fixed by the parties.

36. In enjoining the Universal defendants from agreeing with the other defendant-distributors to maintain a system of clearances, in view of the fact that the evidence does not justify the conclusion that Universal so acted.

37. In enjoining the Universal defendants from agreeing with exhibitors to maintain a system of clearances, in view of the fact that the evidence does not justify the conclusion that Universal so acted.

38. In failing to define a system of clearances as excluding the granting of licenses with clearance, whether reason-[fol. 4048] able or unreasonable, by a distributor to numerous exhibitors.

39. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not grant any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license.

40. In decreeing that the Universal defendants shall not grant or enforce any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition, in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted.

41. In decreeing that the burden of proof in sustaining the legality of any clearance attacked as illegal shall be on the distributor.

42. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not further perform existing franchises with affiliated theatres.

43. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not further perform existing franchises with independent theatre circuits.

44. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not further perform existing franchises with independent theatres.

45. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not make any franchises in the future with affiliated theatres, irrespective of whether or not the effects of the combination and conspiracy found by the Court have in the meantime been dissipated.

[fol. 4049] 46. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not make any franchises in the future with independent theatre chains, irrespective of their effect upon competition.

47. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not make any franchises in the future with independent theatres, irrespective of their effect upon competition.

48. In decreeing that the Unversal defendants may not further perform any existing formula deal or master agreement with affiliated theatres.

49. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not further perform any existing formula deal or master agreement with independent theatre chains, irrespective of the effect upon competition.

50. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not make any formula deals or master agreements with affiliated theatres in the future, whether or not the effects of the combination and conspiracy found by the Court have in the meantime been dissipated.

51. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not make any formula deal or master agreement in the future with an independent theatre chain, irrespctive of the effect upon competition.

52. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not perform any license agreement with any affiliated theatre, in which the license to exhibit one feature has been conditioned upon the licensee taking one or more other features.

[fol. 4050] 53. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not perform any license agreement with any independent theatre chain or independent theatre in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features.

54. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not in the future enter into a license agreement with any affiliated theatre in which the license of one feature is conditioned upon the taking of one or more other features, irrespective of whether or not the effects of the combination and conspiracy found by the Court have in the meantime been dissipated, and irrespective of the effect upon competition.

55. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not in the future enter into any license agreement with any independent theatre chain or independent theatre, in which a license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features, irrespective of the effect upon competition.

56. In decreeing that the Universal defendants, in offering to license their pictures in the future for exhibition in any theatre, may not do so, except in the manner and under the conditions prescribed by the Court in the provision of its decree numbered II (8).

57. In decreeing that each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture.

58. In decreeing that the method of competitive bidding set forth in II(8)(c) shall be followed where any exhibitor in a competitive area desires it.

[fol. 4051] 59. In decreeing that to the extent that any of Universal's pictures have not been trade shown, prior to the granting of a license for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given the right to reject 20% of such pictures not trade shown.

60. In decreeing that the Universal defendants may not arbitrarily refuse to license their feature pictures to a particular exhibitor.

61. In decreeing, that while the producer-exhibitor defendants may license, or in any way arrange or provide for the exhibition of their motion pictures in their own theatres, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to them, the Universal defendants may not acquire show-windows for their motion pictures through long-term contractual arrangements with independent theatres.

62. In failing to find that Universal, as a producer and distributor without theatres, would have no reliable market for the great majority of its pictures, if offered singly, and that under such a procedure its ability to compete with the integrated defendants would be greatly lessened, and its speculative risk greatly increased.

63. In failing to find that Universal has a reliable market in the otherwise under-supplied exhibitor for a large group of pictures of the less expensive type, and that such exhibitors, constituting most of the exhibitors in the country, desire to purchase their pictures in large groups, as it gives them assurance of the product.

[fol. 4052] 64. In failing to find that by offering its pictures in groups in the first instance, Universal's ability to compete with the integrated companies is greatly increased.

65. In failing to find that there is no evidence that Universal ever conditioned the licensing of one motion picture upon an exhibitor's agreement to license other motion pictures.

66. In failing to find that there is no evidence that Universal ever required exhibitors, who did not care to buy all of its feature pictures, to pay an excessive or disproportionate price for what they bought.

67. In failing to find that there is no evidence that Universal pictures were at all indispensable to the successful operation of any motion picture theatre.

68. In failing to find that the same privileges of selectivity and cancellation were granted by Universal to independent and affiliated theatres alike.

69. In failing to find that each Universal license of motion pictures to an exhibitor provided for: (a) an exclusive limited license under copyright to publicly perform or exhibit, in his theatre only and limited to a stated number of days, the copyrighted motion pictures licensed; and (b) the temporary physical possession by the exhibitor during the exhibition period of a positive print of the motion picture, making it possible for him to exercise the intangible exhibition right under the copyright.

70. In failing to find that the franchises granted by Universal to independent exhibitors promoted competition in [fol. 4053] interstate commerce instead of unreasonably restraining it.

71. In failing to find that in licensing its photoplays to exhibitors Universal had to meet the competition, both in run and in clearance, of its competitors, and that it could not, therefore, give less clearance, and was unwilling to give more clearance.

72. In failing to find that in the orderly operation of a theatre in a competitive area where multiple runs are shown, such exhibitor will insist on obtaining from Universal as much clearance, both as to duration and area, as he has obtained from the other distributors from whom he has licensed the same run in such competitive area.

73. In failing to find that there is no evidence that any exhibitor was ever refused a license by Universal to exhibit any Universal picture on any particular run.

74. In failing to find that there is no evidence that any of the clearances specified by Universal in any of the exhibition contracts in evidence in this case adversely affected the interest of any exhibitor of motion pictures operating in competition with any of the theatres so licensed.

75. In failing to find that there is no substantial evidence that any exhibitor, operating in competition with the theatres to which Universal licensed its pictures with clearance, sought from Universal the same licenses or similar licenses with similar clearances, or was refused licenses by Universal of similar character.

[fol. 4054] 76. In failing to find that there is no substantial evidence in the record that Universal acted concertedly with any other defendant, or with any exhibitor, to unreasonably restrain the trade of any subsequent-run theatre through the fixing of clearance for prior run theatres.

77. In failing to find that there is no substantial evidence in the record that the theatres licensed by Universal for first and prior runs were not those theatres which would be normally selected by an unaffiliated distributor for such purpose, without giving any consideration to the existence or non-existence of producer-distributor affiliation.

78. In failing to find that there is no evidence of any kind of an express agreement, written or oral, between Universal and any other defendant, or of any communication, written or oral, between any agent of Universal and any agent of any other defendant, for the purpose of, or having the effect of, fixing, affecting or in any way determining the persons to whom Universal should license its pictures, or the terms or conditions under which such pictures should be licensed, except that Universal engaged in negotiations with the theatre-owning defendants of the same character as engaged in by Universal with theatre operators who were not defendants, for the licensing of pictures released by Universal to be exhibited in such theatres.

79. In failing to find that there is no evidence in the record that Universal ever communicated, orally or in writing, with any other defendant-distributor on the subject of film rentals, admission prices, clearances, runs to be granted, [fol. 4055] or any other matters connected with the distribution or the licensing of motion pictures.

80. In failing to find that there is no evidence that the deals made by Universal with affiliated exhibitors were substantially more favorable to them than the deals made by Universal with independent exhibitors were to them, when such deals are looked at over-all.

81. In failing to find that Universal conducted its negotiations with exhibitors for licenses upon the basis of the admission price policy of such exhibitors, which varied in each competitive area, and provided in its license agreements against the reduction of such admission price for the sole purpose of protecting the aggregate amount of film rental to be received by it from all runs in each competitive area.

82. In failing to find that to the extent that there was similarity in the admission prices specified in Universal exhibition license agreements to the admission prices specified in other distributors' exhibition license agreements, it was entirely due to the fact that the admission prices so stipulated in the various contracts were the admission prices that the exhibitor had fixed and was currently charging at his theatre, and upon the basis of which the licenses were granted.

83. In failing to find that there is no evidence in the record that Universal ever exercised its reserved right under its license agreements to penalize an exhibitor for lowering his admission price for exhibitions of Universal pictures.

[fol. 4056] 84. In failing to find that aside from the license agreements themselves, there is no evidence in the record that Universal ever attempted to prevent any exhibitor from freely changing the admission price he desired to charge, either by lowering it or raising it, or ever attempted to specify the admission price to be charged by an exhibitor.

85. In failing to make the following finding proposed by Universal:

In 41 out of the 92 cities in the United States having a population of 100,000 or over, there were no independent first-run theatres operating during the 1943-44 motion picture season to which Universal could have licensed its pictures in preference to the affiliated first-run theatres operating in such cities. In approximately one-half of the remainder of said 92 cities, Universal licensed its product to the independent first-run theatres in competition with the affiliated theatres in such cities. There is no substantial evidence that in any of the cities, composing the other one-half of the remainder of said 92 cities, the independent first-run theatres were willing to buy Universal product on terms equivalent or substantially equivalent to those upon which it was purchased by the affiliated theatres to which it was sold. Prior to the 1943-44 motion picture season, and back to and including the 1936-37 motion picture season, the situation at no time was materially different from the foregoing.

86. In failing to make the following finding proposed by Universal:

In distributing motion pictures and making exhibition license agreements, Universal conducted all of its negotia- [fol. 4057] tions and made all of its contracts, whether with independent or affiliated exhibitors, or unaffiliated circuits, without any intent or purpose to bring about a monopoly in the distribution or exhibition business, or to unduly restrain interstate commerce, and merely licensed its product to the market as it found it, with the sole purpose and intent of receiving the maximum amout of revenue legitimately possible for all pictures distributed by it.

87. In failing to make the following finding proposed by Universal:

In licensing its motion pictures, which were articles of free commerce, to the various defendants which operated chains of theatres, Universal had no knowledge or intent that the exhibition of its said motion pictures by said defendants would further or promote violations of the Sherman Act, if in fact it did so.

88. In failing to make the following finding proposed by Universal:

In licensing its motion pictures to the various defendants which operated chains of theatres, Universal did not co-operate with them or any of them in any violation of the Sherman Act, even assuming that it had knowledge of the fact, if it be a fact, that said defendants or some of them were violating the Sherman Act.

89. In failing to find that there is no substantial evidence in the record that Universal discriminated between independent and affiliated licensees in respect of film rentals, clearances or minimum admission prices.

[fol. 4058] 90. In failing to confine the operation of the decree to the Continental United States.

91. In failing to exclude road-shows from the prohibition against specifying minimum admission prices.

92. In concluding that the similarity, and in many cases identity, in minimum admission prices contained in licenses for the same theatre, spelled uniformity of action among Universal and the other defendant distributors, and that such uniformity of action spelled an unlawful system in which Universal participated.

93. In decreeing that Universal must offer a license upon uniform terms to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run selected by such operator.

94. In decreeing that Universal may not take into consideration, in determining to which exhibitor to license its films, the past business dealings between it and an old customer.

95. In decreeing that Universal shall follow a method of competitive bidding which forbids it as a licensor of copyrighted motion-pictures to take in consideration, in awarding licenses which exclude simultaneous exhibition, any factors other than the responsibility of the bidder, the amount of film rental offered, and the adequacy of the theatre, in respect of size, location and equipment, to yield a reasonable return to the licensor.

96. In decreeing that Universal shall follow a method of competitive bidding which forbids it to offer a license in [fol. 4059] consideration of the payment of a percentage of the gross receipts of a theatre.

97. In decreeing that Universal shall follow a method of competitive bidding which compels the licensor to determine the highest bidder under penalty of contempt, and yet prescribes a method for offers and counter-offers which makes such determination impracticable.

98. In decreeing that each license granted by Universal shall be upon the merits without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others, while at the same time prescribing a method of bidding to be followed which excludes the consideration of many factors going to the merits.

99. In decreeing that Universal shall follow a method of competitive bidding which will greatly increase its expense of operation and is impracticable to comply with in many respects.

100. In failing to grant the motions made by the Universal defendants, and each of them, to dismiss the petition and amended and supplemental complaint, upon the grounds set forth in the motion appearing at pages 383-4, 503-526 and 2501 of the Record as printed for the District Court.

101. In failing to grant the motions made by the Universal defendants, and each of them, to strike exhibits and evidence upon the grounds set forth in the motion appearing at pages 383-4, 503-526 and 2501 of the Record as printed for the District Court.

102. In infringing upon Universal's right to grant exclusive licenses under copyright.

[fol. 4060.] 103. In finding that the Universal defendants or any of them violated the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C.), commonly known as the Sherman Act.

104. In failing to conclude that the Universal defendants did not at any time combine, conspire or contract with any of the defendant-distributors, with any of the defendant-exhibitors or with any of their affiliates or with any other person or corporation to unreasonably restrain trade or to monopolize the same, nor did they monopolize or attempt to monopolize the same.

105. In failing to conclude that a decree should be entered as to each and all of the Universal defendants dismissing the petition and amended and supplemental complaint.

PRAYER FOR REVERSAL

Wherefore, defendants pray that the said decree may be reversed, and that a judgment or decree be rendered in favor of said defendants dismissing the petition and amended and supplemental complaint as to them, and for such other and further relief as to the Court may seem just and proper.

PETITION OF AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION INC., ET AL., FOR ALLOWANCE OF APPEAL

American Theatres Association, Inc.; Southern California Theatre Owners Association; Joseph Moritz; Southern California Amusement Company, Inc.; Exhibitors' Service, Inc.; Lawrence Capitol, Inc.; Bijou Amusement Company and Paul Realty Company; Andy Anderson; Arch and Milas L. Hurley; Raymond and Willard Gervers; Gamble Enterprises, Inc.; and St. Louis Ambassador Theatre, Inc., Eden Theatre Company, St. Louis Missouri Theatre, Inc.,

and Fanchon & Marco Service Corporation filed in this court a Motion for Leave to Intervene and Intervening Petition which came on before this court for argument on October 21, 1946. The Motion requested leave to intervene to oppose [fol. 4086] the adoption of a decree requiring competitive bidding for the licensing of film to exhibitors. On December 31, 1946, the court adopted a decree containing modified provisions with respect to competitive bidding in paragraph 8(c) of Part II thereof. On January 21, 1947, this court denied the said Motion for Leave to Intervene, but granted permission to be heard and to file a brief as amicus curiae. On February 3, 1947, this court amended its decree of December 31, 1946, in respects not relevant to appellant's petition. The above named parties do hereby petition for leave to appeal from this court's orders of December 31, 1946, and January 21, 1947, to the Supreme Court of the United States because of errors prejudicial to them which are set forth in the assignment of errors presented and filed herewith, and pray that their appeal be allowed and that citation be issued as provided by law and that the record on appeal be made and certified and sent to the Supreme Court of the United States in accordance with the rules of that Court. And your petitioners further pray that an order be made fixing the amount of security which your petitioners shall give and furnish upon such appeal.

Thurman Arnold, Arnold & Fortas, 821 15th Street, N. W., Washington 5, D. C.; Paul Williams, General Counsel to Southern California Theatre Owners Association, Attorneys for Appellants.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS AND PRAYER FOR REVERSAL

American Theatres Association, Inc.; Southern California Theatre Owners Association; Joseph Moritz; Southern California Amusement Company, Inc.; Exhibitors' Service, Inc.; Lawrence Capitol, Inc.; Bijou Amusement Company and Paul Realty Company; Andy Anderson; Arch and

Milas L. Hurley; Raymond and Willard Gervers; Gamble Enterprises, Inc.; and St. Louis Ambassador Theatre, Inc., Eden Theatre Company, St. Louis Missouri Theatre, Inc., and Fanchon & Marco Service Corporation in connection with their Petition for an Appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, hereby assign error to the entry of the judgments entered on December 31, 1946, and January 21, 1947, in the above entitled cause. The December 31, 1946, [fols. 4087a-4089] order imposed a system of competitive bidding on exhibitors and the order of January 21, 1947, denied moving parties the right to intervene and permitted them only to be heard and to file a brief as amicus curiae. The above parties say that in the entry of the said judgments the said District Court committed error to their prejudice in the following particulars:

(1) The Court erred in denying their Motion for Leave to Intervene;

(2) The Court erred in denying their right to file their Intervening Petition;

(3) The Court erred in limiting your appellants to the right to be heard and to file briefs amicus curiae;

(4) The Court erred in failing to grant the relief requested by their Intervening Petition;

(5) The Court erred in adopting Paragraph 8(c) of Part II of its decree requiring the licensing of pictures by competitive bidding under certain circumstances.

Wherefore, appellants pray that the judgment of the District Court denying the Motion for Leave to Intervene may be reversed, and that the provisions of Paragraph 8(c) of the judgment of the District Court of December 31, 1946, may also be reversed.

PETITION FOR APPEAL—Filed February 28, 1947

W. C. Allred, et al., Petitioners herein, feeling themselves aggrieved (1) by the final order of the District Court for the Southern District of New York entered the 23rd day of January, 1947, denying said petitioners leave to intervene in the above-entitled action, and (2) by the final decree made and entered in the above-entitled action the 31st day of December, 1946, do hereby petition for an appeal from said order and said final decree to the Supreme Court of the United States for the reasons set forth in the assignment of errors filed herein.

Wherefore, petitioners pray that an appeal be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States, that citation be issued as provided by law and that a transcript of the record, proceedings and documents upon which the said order and decree were based, duly authenticated, be sent to the [fol. 4095] Supreme Court of the United States under the rules of said Court in such cases made and provided.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS—Filed February 28, 1947

W. C. Allred, et al., Petitioners in the above-entitled action, file the following Assignment of Errors on which they will rely in their appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States:

1. The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York erred in refusing to grant Petitioners' application to intervene as of right in the above-entitled action.

2. The said Court erred in making the order, entered January 23, 1947, denying Petitioners' application to intervene.

3. The said Court erred in holding (if so held) that its judgment of December 31, 1946 is not binding on these Petitioners.

4. Said Court erred in holding (if so held) that representation of Petitioners' interests was adequate.

5. Said Court erred in holding (if so held) that Petitioners' application was not timely.

[fol. 4097] 6. Said Court erred in refusing to exercise its discretion to permit the Petitioners to so intervene.

7. The said Court erred in including in its final decree entered December 31, 1946 and more particularly in Section II thereof, the portions of paragraph 8 reading as follows:

"8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:

"(a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run, (other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor) selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;

"(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;

"(c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competitive area may bid for such license, and in his bid shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross re- [fol. 4098] ceipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words 'exclude simultaneous exhibition' shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words 'competitive area' shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

"(d) Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture."

8. The said Court erred in holding that it was empowered and authorized under the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act to include in its decree the above quoted paragraphs.

Wherefore, Petitioners pray:

(1) That the action of the District Court in denying Petitioners' application to intervene may be held erroneous and that said order accordingly be reversed; and

[fol. 4099] (2) That the action of the District Court in including in the final decree of December 31, 1946 the paragraphs hereinbefore set forth may be held erroneous and said decree accordingly reversed and the cause remanded for the elimination of the aforesaid paragraphs in the decree; and

(3) For such other relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

Dated: February 27, 1947.

[fol. 4153] SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, OCTOBER TERM, 1947

No. 82

STATEMENT OF POINTS ON WHICH APPELLANTS INTEND TO RELY AND DESIGNATION OF PARTS OF RECORD WHICH APPELLANTS THINK ARE NECESSARY FOR THE CONSIDERATION THEREOF—Filed May 13, 1947

Appellants, Columbia Pictures Corporation and Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc., intend to rely upon each of their formal assignments of error, and adopt same as their statement of the points to be relied upon, but for convenience and brevity propose to group the discussion of said points as follows:

1. Plaintiff contended in the District Court that block [fol. 4154] booking was a violation of the Sherman Act. It based its contention upon the arbitrary and wholly unsupported argument that block booking involved the licensing of one or more pictures conditioned upon the sale of one or more other pictures—in other words, that appellants, as well as other distributors, made it a practice of compelling exhibitors to license pictures which the exhibitors did not want in order that the exhibitors could license pictures which they did want. The plaintiff apparently took the position, which the District Court adopted, that the mere licensing of pictures in groups or blocks was in and of itself a licensing upon condition. Appellants claim that they have an inherent right to license their pictures in groups at the beginning of the season, just as every manufacturer has a right to sell his entire output before he produces it, and that there is not a scintilla of evidence in this case that any exhibitor was forced to buy one picture in order to obtain another. In fact, not a single exhibitor was called to the stand by the plaintiff, and the definition of block booking in the findings (Finding No. 1) is wholly unsupported by any proof in this record. On the contrary, appellants' general sales manager, Abe Montague, testified that the exhibitors throughout the country have always wanted and presently clamor for block booking, particularly when it comes to smaller companies like appellants, because exhibitors use a great deal of appellants' product to fill out their double feature programs, and that block booking gives them an assurance of product; that it is an economical way of transacting business both for appellants and for exhibitors, and that there is nothing inherently wrong or [fol. 4155] improper in licensing pictures in groups any more than it is wrong and improper for a book shop to sell fifty books to one customer, or for a group of copyright owners to license a thousand musical compositions to a radio broadcaster. Moreover, how is competition suppressed, even if applicants did condition licenses in the manner charged? Appellants own all of these copyrights. They compete with no one with respect to their own copyrights; and since they have a complete monopoly on their own copyrights, the courts have no power to weaken that monopoly.

2. Block booking as an industry practice has existed for over a quarter of a century. It has been litigated and passed upon and approved by two Circuit Courts of Appeals in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount, 57 Fed. (2d) 152, and West Ways Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century Fox Film, 30 Fed. Supp. 830, aff'd. 113 Fed. (2) 932. Moreover, in U. S. v. Crescent, 323 U. S. 173, which affirmed a judgment in favor of the Government against a large independent circuit in Tennessee, block booking was shown to be the customary method of selling, but no findings were made attacking it or holding it to be a violation of the Sherman Act. The Courts thus having sanctioned block booking as a lawful practice, appellants were justified in believing that they had a right to continue to sell their pictures in that manner; and they should not be exposed at this time to the danger of facing treble damage suits for having acted in good faith for this long period of time with the sanction of the courts. It was no more unlawful for the appellants to sell their pictures in groups or blocks on December 31, 1946 (the date of the Decree herein) than it was in the years (1932, 1940 and 1944) when the above named cases were decided.

[fol. 4156] 3. The District Court has created a system of restrictions upon the licensing of pictures which amounts to a compulsory license upon these copyrighted works and in essence means that appellants have to put their pictures up on the auction block, sell to the highest bidder, forego the good will of their tried and true customers, and become for all purposes a public utility. Appellants contend that the Court below had no jurisdiction to make such provisions in its decree; that sitting as an anti-trust Court it was limited merely to the injunctive process, and that even if it wished to go beyond that and to embark upon a system of regulation of an entire industry (which is in effect what it does), the method of the regulation violates the constitutional property rights of appellants and completely destroys their monopolies in their respective copyrights. Appellants claim that they have the inherent right to license their pictures to their old customers and to preserve their good will in the industry, built up for over twenty years; that they have a right to bargain with each exhibitor with respect to the terms of his license, and that right cannot be taken away from them; that they are not affected with a public interest; that they are not a public utility and certainly not a public utility for 18,000 theatres; and that the monopoly granted to them under their copyrights is very wide and there is no compulsory provision in the Copyright Law with respect to motion pictures.

4. Appellants contend that since under this decree they are acting lawfully and singly, and not in conspiracy or combination with any of the other defendants, they have a perfect right to sell their pictures in any manner they [fol. 4157] see fit, to whomever they please, and upon such terms as they think proper and reasonable. While the District Court may enjoin a conspiracy, it cannot go beyond that, and it cannot regulate lawful conduct under the guise of preventing restraint of trade. The philosophy of the Sherman Act is to keep competition open, not to impose restrictions on trade and commerce. The District Court has no power of regulation such as a Court of Bankruptcy would have.

5. Appellants contend that this decree is in and of itself an instrument of restraint and actually stifles competition, and therefore it itself violates the Sherman Act. They urge that the District Court has discriminated against appellants as well as United Artists and Universal and other small distributors who do not own theatres, and that this decree operates to favor the five major defendants who do own and operate theatres. By the provisions for competitive bidding (which is a polite way of saying, "Put your pictures on the auction block"), the five major defendants have a right to take the pictures produced by them respectively and turn them over to their own theatres upon any terms they see fit. Then those theatres come into active competition with independent theatres. The practical result is that when one of these affiliated theatres bids against an independent theatre for the better pictures the affiliated theatre, paying very little for the pictures licensed from its affiliated producer, has unlimited funds with which to compete against the independent, and it is easy to see who will be the highest bidder. This system of bidding would result in giving the affiliated theatres a tremendous economic advantage over independent theatres [fol. 4158] and deprive the latter of the better pictures. That certainly was not the intention of the Sherman Act. The effect of such system is to compel appellants to deprive their old customers of product and to hand over their pictures to affiliated theatres and thus actively help to destroy their old and independent customers.

6. Appellants contend that as proprietors of the respective copyrights of their motion pictures, past and future, they possess a monopoly which is not abhorrent to the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and which that Act was not designed to interfere with; that the decree seriously interferes with the appellants' monopoly in these copyrights, and that the provisions of the decree expressly take from appellants the most important exclusive rights vested in them by the Copyright Act of 1909. (17 U. S. C. A.)

7. Appellants contend that they are being deprived of their property without due process of law in that their right to freely market their product is impinged upon and restricted, and they contend that this decree violates their rights under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

8. While this was a long trial and many exhibits were received in evidence, appellants believe that the portions of the record designated by them in their praecipe are sufficient for the consideration of this Court in determining the issues presented by appellants' appeal. Appellants have limited themselves to the pleadings and other necessary filed papers and to the testimony of only three witnesses, Abraham Montague, William A. Scully and Paul N. Lazarus, and a few pages of argument and concessions. Appellants' exhibits, to wit: C-1, C-2, C-4, C-5, C-6, C-7, C-9, [fols. 4159-4163] C-10, are mainly charts showing the method of appellants' selling over the years. No useful purpose will be served by designating specifically each portion of this tremendous record which is unnecessary for the Court's consideration on appellants' appeal. We prefer to state that aside from the documents and testimony set forth in appellants' praecipe, all other portions of this record are unnecessary in considering the question of block booking and competitive bidding which will be all that is being submitted by appellants for this Court's consideration and determination.

OCTOBER TERM, 1946

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, APPELLANT

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., ET AL.

APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION

In the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York

EQUITY No. 87–273

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., ET AL., DEFENDANTS

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION

In compliance with Rule 12 of the Supreme Court of the United States, as amended, the United States of America submits herewith its statement particularly disclosing the basis upon which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction on appeal to review the final judgment of the District Court entered in this cause on December 31, 1946. A petition for appeal was filed on February 21, 1947, and is presented to the District Court herewith.

JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review by direct appeal the judgment entered in this cause is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 15 U. S. C. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. 345).

The following decision sustains the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review the judgment on direct appeal in this case:

United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The Sherman Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended (15 U. S. C., secs. 1 and 2):

> SEC. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. * * * Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.
> SEC. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

THE ISSUES AND THE RULING BELOW

On July 20, 1938, the appellant filed its complaint, charging the defendants with violating sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing and unreasonably restraining competition in the exhibition, distribution, and production of motion picture films throughout the United States. The major defendants were five integrated groups of corporations, commonly known as Fox, Loew, Paramount, RKO, and Warner, respectively, each of which is engaged in producing, distributing, and exhibiting such films. The remaining defendants were Columbia Pictures Corporation and certain of its subsidiaries, collectively referred to as Columbia, Universal Corporation and certain of its subsidiaries, collectively referred to as Universal, engaged in both producing and distributing motion picture films, and United Artists Corporation, a company engaged exclusively in distribution.

All eight defendants were claimed to be members of a general conspiracy to monopolize and unreasonably restrain competition in the domestic motion picture business. The five major defendants were further charged with collectively and individually monopolizing, through their theatre operations, motion picture exhibition in about 80 percent of the cities of over 100,000 in the United States. Each of the major defendants was also charged with being, in itself, a combination in unreasonable restraint of trade. The relief prayed was that the conspiracy among all the defendants be terminated, that they be enjoined from continuing a wide variety of trade practices claimed to be illegal in themselves, and that the major defendants be compelled to divorce the exhibition business from their distribution and production activities.

Negotiations for a settlement which were undertaken before any evidence was heard resulted in the entry of a consent decree against the five major defendants on November 20, 1940. An amended and supplemental complaint brought up to date the allegations of the prior complaint, but made no substantial change in the character of the charges or the relief prayed, except to request specifically a nationwide system of enforcement through arbitration tribunals to implement such relief as might be had against unlawful trade practices of a nationwide character.

The decree adjudicated no law violations, but established a system of arbitration by which independent exhibitors could secure a hearing before an arbitrator supplied by the American Arbitration Association with respect to complaints that unreasonable licensing restrictions of a specific character had been placed upon them by the major defendants when acting as film distributors. The decree further provided for the entry of an award against such defendants, after such hearing, intended to limit appropriately the future conduct of these defendants in dealing with the complainant and his competitors. These awards were made subject to review on appeal by any party by a specially constituted appeals board of three members appointed by the District Court. Upon affirmance by the board or expiration of time in which to appeal, the awards become final and disobedience was punishable by contempt. Operations of the system were financed by the defendants, but supervised by the Appeal Board and the America Arbitration Association. The Department of Justice intervened in some of the proceedings and was kept fully advised as to all complaints, awards, and appeals.

The decree also provided that the major defendants' feature films could not be licensed before being trade-shown and could not be offered or licensed in groups of more than five at a time. It also prohibited the forcing of so-called short subjects and newsreels by conditioning sales of feature pictures upon sales of these less important films. The only provision of the decree restricting the activities of the major defendants as theatre operators was a prohibition against their engaging in a general program of theatre expansion. There were no prohibitions restricting their conduct as producers.

The decree expressly reserved the right of the United States to request the divorcement relief originally sought, and still prayed for in the amended and supplemental complaint, at the end of a three-year trial period. During the same period the Government was prohibited from seeking such relief either in the instant proceeding or in any other. The provisions with respect to trade showing and licensing features in blocks of five were binding upon the defendants after the 1941–42 motion picture season only if the Government had by that time subjected the minor defendants to the same relief, and while the Government did not procure such relief prior to the specified date, the major defendants continued to observe these provisions voluntarily. The decree also provided that any party might move for any modification whatsoever after the expiration of the three-year period.

The court, prior to entry of the decree, heard objections to it made by a number of independent exhibitors, through their counsel, as friends of the court. The court overruled these objections.

At the conclusion of the trial period the plaintiff found, upon a review of the consent decree's actual operation, that it was inadequate to correct the violations of law alleged in the complaint and that adequate relief could not be obtained without a judicial finding of such violations. It therefore moved to set the issues made by the complaint and answers for trial against all eight defendants. On June 13, 1945, an expediting certificate was filed. The taking of evidence commenced before an expediting court composed of Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand and District Judges Henry W. Goddard and John Bright on October 8, 1945, and was concluded on November 20, 1945.

At the trial the plaintiff assumed the burden of establishing its allegations and of showing that the relief granted by the consent decree was inadequate to correct the violations of law alleged in the complaint. The plaintiff's case consisted mainly of (1) an exposition of the corporate structure of each defendant; (2) the general manner in which the major defendants' theatre holdings had been acquired, with an accurate description of their individual theatre holdings by name, location, and size; (3) the precise manner in which the major defendants jointly controlled, with each other and with other exhibitors, specific theatre operations; (4) the general forms of agreement used by all the defendants in licensing films and representative executed agreements by which they had licensed each other and their affiliates upon terms which discriminated against others; (5) tabulations of film rentals paid by their theatres to all distributors and received by the defendants as distributors from all theatres, showing the manner in which film receipts had been arbitrarily concentrated in the hands of the major defendants as theatre operators in the areas where they operated theatres and in the hands of all eight defendants as film distributors throughout the country; (6) tabulations showing the pattern of distribution of feature films of all eight defendants among the principal theatres in the principal cities of the United States and the restrictive provisions by which a uniform run, clearance, and admission price structure in all areas was maintained; and (7) arbitration and appeal board decisions disclosing a wide variety of discriminatory effects of the defendants' licensing practice upon specific independent exhibitors.

The Government abandoned its allegations that the defendants monopolized motion picture film production by their activities as producers, but insisted that their distribution and exhibition monopolies, as such, unreasonably restricted the economic opportunities of all independent producers. The evidence offered at the trial showed that the major defendants' control over distribution and exhibition was, in general, as great at the time of the trial as it had been before the entry of the consent decree although there had been a substantial increase in the number of independently produced films.

The defense consisted mainly of (1) historical data to show that each defendant's theatres were acquired to meet competitive threats from others; (2) rationalization of the trade practices attacked in terms of business necessity and long usage; (3) statistical data intended to minimize the importance of the defendants' position in the industry and to show that the film rental payments they made to each other were not reciprocal or uniform in amount; (4) general denials of any intent to produce the discriminatory effects shown by the plaintiff's evidence; (5) general denials of the existence of any unlawful combination or conspiracy; and (6) affirmative testimony that there was intense competition among all the defendants in their production activities and testimony by the major defendants that they received substantial economic benefits from their theatre ownership, withdrawal of which would impair their service to the public.

The case was argued on January 15, 16, and 17, 1946, and an opinion by Circuit Judge Hand was rendered for the court on June 11, 1946, and reported at 66 F. Supp. 323. It found all the defendants guilty of violating the Act by their activities in distribution and exhibition, both individually and collectively. They were found not guilty insofar as their acts as producers were concerned. Although the court found that the major defendants had jointly maintained a collectively dominant position in the distribution and exhibition fields by an illegal uniform run, clearance, and minimum admission price structure which permitted others to enter the business only upon terms determined by these defendants, it held that their businesses could not be aggregated for the purpose of determining whether or not they enjoyed a control over either of those fields amounting to monopoly proportions. It concluded with respect to the towns in which the major defendants had complete control over exhibition in a particular community by operating all of the theaters there, or complete first run control in a large city by operating all of the first run theaters, that there was no sufficient proof that such a position was the result of the foregoing illegal practices, rather than a lack of enterprise or competence among potential independent competitors. The court, therefore, failed to find that any of the defendants, either individually or collectively, had actually achieved a monopoly in any branch of the industry in violation of section 2, although they were found to have violated that section by attempts to monopolize.

The court also rejected the plaintiff's claim that the major defendants' vested interests in protecting their own theatre-operating profits was itself a cause of the film licensing practices by which price-fixing and clearance privileges claimed by them to be lawful under their film copyrights were illegally extended to protect theatre operators from competition with one another. The court concluded that such practices would exist even in the absence of such ownership and that the divorcement relief sought by the plaintiff would be injurious both to the defendants and to the public. It therefore decided that such relief should not be granted, at least until a substitute remedy decreed by it should be tried and found inadequate. In lieu of divorcement relief it said that the defendants' features should be licensed picture by picture and theatre by theatre upon a basis where the films would be exhibited by the high bidder, regardless of affiliation, old customer relationships, or other criteria formerly relied on to favor arbitrarily one customer over another, provided, however, that each defendant might discriminate in any manner it chose with respect to the exhibition of its own films in its own theatres. Such relief had not been suggested by the parties or discussed in their briefs.

Certain established trade practices, such as minimum admission price fixing in film licenses and conditioning the licensing of one feature upon the taking of one or more others were outlawed unconditionally, in accordance with plaintiff's prayer. Clearance, that is, an agreement between a distributor and an exhibitor licensed on a prior run which protects the receipts of that run by providing that a given number of days must elapse before a print of the same film is made available for a subsequent run in another theatre or theatres, was unequivocally prohibited as to theatres not in substantial competition, but the court rejected plaintiff's contention that the defendants' clearance agreements, as such, were illegal. Clearance "in excess of that reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted" was therefore declared invalid only to the extent deemed excessive.

All so-called pooling arrangements, by which one or more theatres of one or more defendants or theatres of a defendant and an independent exhibitor were operated under a profit-sharing, common management, or joint stock ownership plan, were declared unlawful and their dissolution was ordered. Where the arrangements took the form of joint stock interests in corporations,[1] these interests were to be dissolved by a sale of the defendant's stock or a purchase by the defendant of the other party's stock. All purchases by a defendant of an independent's interest were to be subject to court approval, granted only after a showing that the purchase would not unduly restrain competition. Expansion of the defendants' theatre holdings in certain other situations was also sanctioned, subject to court approval. The court also recommended in its opinion that the existing arbitration system or one similar in form should be continued as a procedural device for enforcing the prohibitions of the decree, but conditioned such use upon the consent of the parties.

Proposed judgments and findings were then submitted by all parties and hearings were had thereon on October 21, 22, and 24, 1946. Counsel representing various groups of independent exhibitors were heard as friends of the court, all of whom objected to the competitive bidding provisions of the judgments submitted by the parties in accordance with the court's opinion, which asserted that such a provision would make divorcement relief unnecessary to achieve the aims of the suit. Two of these groups sought to intervene as parties and were denied intervention, but they and all others who sought leave to argue were heard orally and permitted to file briefs. An objection common to all was that the major defendants, as theatre operators had such a tremendous advantage over all other exhibitors in financial resources and in their privilege of exhibiting their own pictures in their own theatres upon any terms they pleased, that other exhibitors could not successfully compete with them in operating theatres. Counsel for the principal independent producers in the industry were also heard as friends of the court. They argued that since they were dependent upon the distributor-defendants for profitable distribution of their films the decree's restrictions on distribution practices would hurt them more than it would the major defendants, since the latter had their own theatre outlets which were unaffected by the restrictions.

The Government's proposed judgment modified the decree outlined in the opinion in the following principal respects: (1) a provision prohibiting the major defendants from licensing films produced or distributed by them to each other for use in their theatres for a ten-year period commencing one year after the entry of judgment was proposed as a supplement to the competitive bidding relief;[2] (2) the relationships involving theatre interests held by the defendants in conjunction with independents, and found by the opinion to violate the Act, were to be dissolved only by a sale of the defendants' interest to nondefendants; (3). the defendants were to be unconditionally prohibited from expanding their theatre holdings, either by acquiring the interests of independent partners or otherwise; and (4) all existing clearance agreements which protected the defendants' theatres were to be declared invalid. These modifications were all submitted as consistent with the opinion since they did not disturb the integrated structure of the major defendants, which the court found to be valid, but were intended to break up the illegal combination among them found by the court to exist. The existing arbitration system was to be liquidated since three of the defendants declined to agree to arbitration for any purpose and no agreement was reached between the major defendants and the plaintiff as to the substantive provisions under which such a system might operate.

[2] The primary purpose of this proposal was (a) to limit competitive bidding relief to disputes among nondefendant exhibitors insofar as the distribution of the major defendants' films were concerned; (b) to give the major defendants' theatres an incentive to bid against one another for the films of distributors not affiliated with them; (c) to compel a major defendant, as a distributor, to seek independent theatre outlets instead of another major's theatres; and (d) to prohibit the making of competitive-restricting agreements among themselves which had customarily taken the form of restrictive provisions in the film license agreements which one as a distributor made with the other as an exhibitor. A secondary effect was to compel a major defendant either to sell one or more theatres to an independent in areas so completely dominated by the defendant that there were not sufficient independent theatres to absorb the product of four of the major defendants and to increase the number of films which would be required for the major defendants' theatres from nontheatre-owning and nondefendant distributors.

The defendants offered decrees which ranged from decrees of dismissal to decrees which merely relaxed some of the provisions outlined in the opinion. The major defendants submitted a decree which included an arbitration system, apparently intended to operate simultaneously with contempt proceedings as a means of enforcement. At the hearing the major defendants suggested as a possible substitute for the so-called competitive bidding provisions a prohibition against "arbitrary refusal" to license one exhibitor a particular run sought by a competing exhibitor.

On December 31, 1946, the court entered a judgment, a copy of which is attached, rejecting the prohibition against cross-licensing sought by the Government and the prohibition against acquisition of independent partnership interests by the defendants. The court did modify the decree outlined in the opinion by providing for the liquidation of the existing arbitration system, as requested by the Government, and did prohibit all expansion of the defendants' theatre interests except that resulting from such acquisitions as the court might approve in dissolving joint relationships. It made all clearance agreements prima facie invalid when attacked and cast the burden of justifying the reasonableness of such agreements upon the distributor.

The judgment also narrowed the application of the competitive bidding provisions and added as a separate provision a modification of the provision submitted by the defendants relating to arbitrary refusals to license a run. The general means by which the competitive bidding restrictions are to be made operative are outlined in the judgment, but it neither creates nor authorizes any mechanism other than contempt by which they may be made effective. The court adopted findings of fact and conclusions of law which were substantially the same as those indicated in the opinion, with a memorandum, a copy of which is attached, which again recommended voluntary arbitration as a means of resolving disputes arising under the decree.

On January 10, 1947, all defendants filed motions to amend and clarify the findings and judgment, which were denied on February 3, except for an extension of the time allowed to dissolve certain pooling arrangements.[3]

THE QUESTIONS ARE SUBSTANTIAL

The Government's appeal presents four main questions. First, accepting the expediting court's findings as to the extent and nature of the violations involved in their entirety, it erred as a matter of law in failing to enter a judgment which dealt adequately with these violations. Second, the court erred as a matter of law in concluding that the major defendants had not actually achieved a monopoly in exhibition, either singly or collectively, and that all of the defendants had not actually collectively achieved a monopoly of distribution, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. Third, the court erred as a matter of law in concluding that any of the defendants may make a valid clearance agreement for the purpose of protecting any exhibitor from competition. Fourth, the court, upon proper findings as to the legal consequences of the defendants' violations, should have ordered the ultimate divorcement of the major defendants' theater holdings from their distribution and production activities and should have restrained them from licensing films for exhibition in each other's theaters while such relief is being effectuated. It should also have enjoined all of the defendants from continuing to make clearance agreements.

In rejecting the relief sought by the Government in favor of a system of competitive bidding, which merely regulates the exercise of the major defendants' power to dominate the domestic motion picture film industry, the expediting court exceeded the limits of its discretion in determining appropriate Sherman Act relief. Accepting as true every fact found by the court, the major defendants are found to have collectively maintained for a substantial period of time a collectively dominant position in both the distribution and exhibition of motion picture films in this country by a conspiracy which imposed unreasonable restrictions upon the opportunity of theatres operated by others to compete with their own theatres in licensing and exhibiting motion picture films and upon the competitive opportunities of independent distributors, as well. The defendants' collective domination of distribution was admittedly nationwide.

The major defendants' domination of exhibition as theatre operators was, of course, confined to the areas in which they operated theatres, but these areas included all but four of the 92 cities in the United States with populations of more than 100,000 and the great majority of those over 25,000. In 38 of the 92 cities of more than 100,000, one or more of the defendants operated all of the first run theatres and this was true of more than 100 cities of between 25,000 and 100,000. The decree concededly does nothing to disturb the continuance of this dominance because the opinion did not find it to be unlawful, despite the fact that it has been acquired and maintained by unlawful means.

The major defendants have not competed with each other either in buying or selling films in the past and there is nothing in the decree to induce such competition in the future. On the contrary, they are now expressly permitted to make agreements with each other for clearance "reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted." They are also now expressly authorized to retain the same vested interest in favoring each other's theatres as against outsiders that they had when the suit was begun and are further expressly authorized to use their own theatres as vehicles for discriminatory exploitation of their own films. The proposed injunction against mutual use by the defendants of each other's theatres for exploiting their films would not have prevented the latter form of discrimination, but it would have eliminated the unlawful combination among the major defendants, insofar as that could be accomplished by injunctive provisions. It probably would indirectly compel divestiture of some of the defendants' theatres in situations where they are dominant as theatre operators, but would not eliminate them as theatre operators in any situation where they are willing to compete, as the ordinary independent exhibitor is compelled to compete, by showing the product of four or less of the defendant-distributors plus that of independent distributors. The prohibition against cross-licensing among the major defendants was therefore consistent with the court's finding that the law violations in question were the product of a horizontal combination rather than integration and was clearly required to dissolve the unlawful combination among the major defendants. In the light of recent decisions, the court's failure to find any actual monopolization of exhibition seems inexplicable. The areas of commerce embraced by the defendants' theatre operations were sufficiently large to be the subject of monopolization, even though the defendants might not be regarded as having ever intended to secure "a nationwide monopoly of exhibition." Cf. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 229. The decision in American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781, clearly establishes that finding of possession of monopoly power in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act is not dependent upon proof of "overt acts" by which it is exercised against a particular competitor, as the trial court assumed in seeking to distinguish the Crescent and Schine cases, supra. The Tobacco decision also shows that the percentage of the market controlled by two or more parties to a conspiracy to monopolize may be aggregated, as the court below thought they could not.

The principles of law announced in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, are entirely inconsistent with the lower court's assumption that a film distributor may adopt licensing restrictions by agreement with an exhibitor which are calculated to protect the licensee from competition. If such agreements are to be sanctioned at all, their legality must apparently be made to rest upon protection of the licensor, which owns the copyright in the film licensed. But it is hardly possible to justify the making of any such agreements in the future by defendants found to have made in the past the persistent and widespread illegal use of them found in this case.

The inability of a court to regulate effectively in the public interest the illegal power found in the possession of the defendants in this case by the conventional mechanisms at its disposal was virtually conceded by the expediting court when it recommended the adoption of an arbitration system to secure enforcement of the decree. But it apparently recognized an inherent lack of power to establish and maintain a mechanism not approved by the defendants when it conditioned the incorporation of such a system in its decree upon the consent of the parties. The fact that the Government and the defendants were unable to agree upon arbitration machinery which would make effective the trade practice provisions of the judgment should have compelled the court to revise its relief in terms of prohibitions enforceable by contempt. The court's adherence to a system of decree-administered competition in the face of obvious limitations on enforcement approaching inability to enforce at all may hardly be justified upon the basis of the court's expressed conclusion that the defendants and the public would be hurt by divorcement relief and its impliedly similar conclusion as to the Government's proposed ban on cross-licensing of films among the major defendants. There is no evidence whatsoever that the theatre-going public would suffer hardship of any kind from a change of ownership or management of theatres now owned or managed by the major defendants. Any conclusion as to the public desirability of avoiding such private injury as may result from relief necessary to achieve the objectives of the Sherman Act appears to be for Congress rather than the courts. A specific legislative authorization would seem essential to substitute for dissolution of a monopoly which violates the Act mere regulation of its business practices.

The basic issue posed by this appeal is thus one of judicial power rather than the mere exercise of judicial discretion. If the district court is right in its assumption that the untried and unenforceable competitive bidding relief is an adequate substitute for the traditional divestiture relief and complete prohibition of future agreement among the guilty defendants, traditionally applied in situations of this character, then a proceeding under section 4 of the Sherman Act has become an instrument for protecting an established monopoly from either effective judicial or legislative correction. We submit that the district court's assumption is untenable and that reversal of its decision by this Court is required not only to secure adequate relief in this case but to maintain the validity of the equity suit as a mechanism of Sherman Act enforcement.

Respectfully submitted.

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., ET AL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the district court (R. 3504–3563) is reported in 66 F. Supp. 323, and its findings of fact, conclusions of law and decree are reported in 70 F. Supp. 53.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the district court was entered on December 31, 1946 (R. 3694). Timely motions of all defendants to amend the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment were ruled upon on February 10, 1947 (R. 3719–3720). The petition for appeal was filed on February 18, 1947. (R. 3720–3721) and allowed on February 21, 1947 (R. 3725).

The jurisdiction of this Court rests on Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823, 36 Stat. 1167, 15 U. S. C. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157, 38 Stat. 804, 43 Stat. 938, 28 U. S. C. 345). Probable jurisdiction was noted on June 23, 1947[1] (R. 3840).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether, in view of the widespread and habitual abuse of the defendants' enormous economic power over the distribution and exhibition of motion-picture films, and in view of the conspiracy and attempt to monopolize, all of which the court below found, the relief granted by the trial court is so inadequate as to constitute an abuse of discretion.

2. Whether each major defendant's ownership of production, distribution and exhibition facilities, which operates to control access to the domestic market at strategic points, constitutes a vertical combination in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, in view of the separate power of each to exclude competitors and the separate and collective continuing abuse of that power.

[1] On the same date, this Court noted probable jurisdiction in the appeals filed by the defendants herein in Nos. 80, 81, 82, 83, and 84 (R. 3840). Consideration of jurisdiction to hear the appeals in Nos. 85 and 86 of persons who sought unsuccessfully to intervene below was postponed to the hearing of this case on the merits (R. 3841).

3. Whether the divorcement of the major defendants' exhibition interests from their distribution and production interests is required to prevent the resumption of the unreasonable restraints found below, to dissipate the effects of these restraints and to pry open the film market to independent exhibitors and distributors.

4. Whether the court below erred in directing that the illegality inherent in the joint ownership by defendants and independents of theatre interests be terminated through a purchase by one or the other, instead of requiring that the defendants' interest be sold to nondefendants.

5. Whether the common use of each other's affiliated theatre outlets by all of the major defendants should be prohibited as an independent means of terminating their conspiracy, as interim relief until divorcement can be accomplished, and as an incentive to expeditious divorcement by theatre divestiture.

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, known as the Sherman Act, provides in part as follows:

> SEC. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: * * *. (15 U. S. C. 1.)

SEC. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor * * * (15 U. S. C. 2.)

* * * * *

SEC. 4. The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. * * * (15 U. S. C. 4.)

The Act of March 4, 1909, 35 Stat. 1075, 17 U. S. C. 1, provides in part as follows:

[SECTION 1.] That any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this Act, shall have the exclusive right:

I

PRIOR PROCEEDINGS IN THE CASE

The United States filed its original complaint in this case on July 20, 1938, and its amended and supplemental complaint on November 14, 1940 (R. 3137). The defendants named were five separate integrated groups of corporations (the major defendants),[2] each engaged in producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion-picture films throughout the United States; two separate integrated groups of corporations, each engaged in producing and distributing motion-picture films; and one corporation engaged exclusively in distribution.

[2] The term "major defendants" is used in this brief as it was by the court below (Fdg. 56, R. 3670).

The complaint charged, among other things (R. 3137–3201): (a) that all eight defendants, as distributors, had engaged in a conspiracy to restrain and had restrained, had attempted to monopolize and had monopolized interstate trade in the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion pictures, by concertedly fixing minimum admission prices, clearances[3] and runs[4] for theatres, and also by concertedly engaging in numerous other unlawful practices, many of which discriminated against small independent[5] theatres and in favor of large circuits of theatres, including the circuits of the five major defendants; (b) that the five major defendants (all engaged in producing, distributing, and exhibiting) had engaged in a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize and had actually restrained and monopolized interstate trade in the exhibition of motion pictures in most of the larger cities of the United States; (c) that each of the five major defendants constituted a vertical combination of the business of producing and distributing on the one hand and exhibiting on the other, which in itself violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act; and (d) that each distributor-defendant had entered into various contracts with theatre circuits, including the affiliated circuits of the five major defendants, and with exhibitors generally, which unreasonably restrained trade. The complaint prayed that the conspiracy among all the defendants be terminated, that defendants be enjoined from the numerous trade practices alleged to be illegal, and that each major defendant be compelled to divorce its exhibition business from its production and distribution business.

[4] "The successive exhibitions of a feature in a given area, first run being the first exhibition in that area, second run being the next subsequent, and so on" (Fdg. 1; R. 3660–3661).

[5] The term "independent" is used throughout this brief, as it was by the trial court (R. 3660), to refer to "A producer, distributor, or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendant in this action or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant."

Before any evidence was heard, negotiations for settlement were undertaken. As a result, the amended and supplemental complaint of November 14, 1940, was filed, and a consent decree against the five major defendants only was entered on November 20, 1940 (R. 3373). The amended complaint brought up to date the allegations of the original complaint, but made no substantial changes in the character of the charges or of the relief prayed, except to request a nation-wide system of arbitration tribunals to assist in securing adequate enforcement of prohibitions against illegal trade practices of nation-wide scope. Answers denying the charges of the amended complaint were filed by all defendants (R. 3201–3370), and the consent decree contained no admission of law violation and adjudicated no issue of fact or law except that the complaint stated a cause of action.

Pursuant to the amended prayer, the consent decree established an arbitration system (R. 3402–3413)* under which independent exhibitors could secure a hearing, before an arbitrator supplied by the American Arbitration Association, of complaints that unreasonable licensing restrictions of a specified character had been placed upon them by a consenting defendant as a film distributor. The decree provided for awards intended to limit the future conduct of the defendants in dealing with the complainant and his competitors, the awards being subject to review by an appeals board of three members appointed by the district court. Upon affirmance by the board or expiration of time for appeal, the awards became final and disobedience was punishable by contempt. Operations of the system were financed by the defendants, but supervised by the appeals board and the American Arbitration Association. The Department of Justice intervened in some of the proceedings and was kept fully advised as to all complaints, awards, and appeals.

The decree also provided that the consenting defendants' feature films could not be licensed before being trade-shown and could not be offered or licensed in groups of more than five at a time. It also prohibited the forcing of so-called short subjects, newsreels, reissues, westerns or foreigns by conditioning their sales upon sales of feature pictures. The only provision of the decree restricting the activities of the consenting defendants as theatre operators was a prohibition against their engaging in a general program of theatre expansion for a three-year period. There were no prohibitions restricting their conduct as producers.

The decree expressly reserved to the United States the right at the end of a three-year trial period to request the divorcement relief originally sought and still prayed for in the amended complaint. During that period, the Government was prohibited from seeking such relief in the instant or any other proceeding. The provisions concerning trade-showing and licensing features in blocks of five were binding upon the consenting defendants after the 1941-42 motion picture season only if the Government had by that time subjected the other defendants to the same relief.[1]

[1] Although the Government did not procure such relief by the specified date, the major defendants continued to observe these provisions voluntarily.

The decree also provided that any party might move for any modification whatsoever after the expiration of the three-year period.

At the end of the three-year period the Government concluded, upon review of the consent decree's actual operation, that it was inadequate to correct the violations of law alleged in the complaint and that appropriate relief could not be obtained without a judicial finding of those violations. Accordingly, it moved for trial against all eight defendants on the issues made by the amended complaint and answers, and sought a preliminary injunction pending final judgment.* (R. 3420). On June 13, 1945, an expediting certificate was filed (R. 3502). Beginning October 8, 1945, and concluding November 20, 1945, evidence was taken before an expediting court composed of Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand and District Judges Henry W. Goddard and John Bright.

At the trial, the Government abandoned its allegations that the defendants had monopolized film production by their activities as producers, but maintained that their distribution and exhibition monopolies had unreasonably restricted the economic opportunities of all independent producers, and of course continued to assert the other allegations of unlawful conduct.

On June 11, 1946, an opinion by Circuit Judge Hand was rendered for the court (R. 3504). It held that the defendants individually and collectively had engaged in conspiracies and agreements in restraint of trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in violation of Section 1, and had attempted to monopolize such trade in violation of Section 2, but held that the defendants had not, either individually or collectively, [redacted] actually monopolized any part of trade in either the exhibition or distribution of pictures. On December 31, 1946, the court entered its findings of fact and conclusions of law (R. 3659–3694), and its decree (R. 3694–3702).

II

THE FACTS

Our attack on the action below is confined largely to the adequacy of the relief granted. We do not dispute any of what we consider to be the evidentiary findings, but we do challenge the court's failure to conclude that the defendants, both individually and collectively, had monopolized important segments of the motion picture industry. In this discussion of the facts, therefore, we shall rely largely on those found by the district court. In those instances in which we go beyond the findings in order to give a complete picture, we shall refer only to facts about which we believe there is no dispute.

A. The defendants.—The five major defendants in this case are Paramount Pictures, Inc., (Paramount); Loew's Incorporated (Loew); Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation (RKO); Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Warner); and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation (Fox); and certain of their respective distribution and exhibition subsidiaries[9] (Fdg. 56, R. 3670). Each of these defendants is engaged either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies in the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion pictures throughout the United States.

The other three defendants are Columbia Pictures Corporation (Columbia) and Universal Corporation (Universal), and their respective

Loew is engaged in producing, distributing and exhibiting, either directly or through subsidiaries (Fdg. 12, R. 3663). No Loew subsidiary is named a defendant.

The RKO group of defendants includes: Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, engaged in producing, distributing and exhibiting, either directly or through subsidiaries; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary, engaged in production and distribution; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, engaged in exhibition prior to its dissolution on September 29, 1944, and 99% of whose common stock and 33% of whose preferred stock was held by Radio-Keithsubsidiaries;[10] and United Artists Corporation (United). Columbia and Universal are engaged directly or through subsidiary or associated companies in the production and distribution of motion pictures. United is engaged only in the distribution of motion pictures. None of these Orpheum Corporation; RKO Proctor Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary, engaged in exhibiting; and RKO Midwest Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary engaged in exhibiting (Fdgs. 13–17; R. 3663–3664).

The Warner group of defendants includes: Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., engaged in producing, distributing and exhibiting, either directly or through subsidiaries; Vitagraph, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary, engaged in distributing (on July 20, 1944, its name was changed to Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation); Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary, which acts as booking agent for the exhibition interests of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Fdgs. 24, 38, 39; R. 3665–3666).

The Fox group of defendants includes: Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, engaged in producing, distributing and exhibiting, either directly or through subsidiaries; National Theatres Corporation, owned and controlled by, and a holding company for the theatre interests of, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation (Fdgs. 40, 43; R. 3666–3667).

[10] The Columbia group of defendants includes: Columbia Pictures Corporation, engaged in producing and distributing motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiaries; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary, engaged in distributing (Fdgs. 44, 46, R. 3667–68).

The Universal group of defendants includes: Universal Corporation, engaged in producing and distributing motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiaries; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary, engaged in distributing; Big U Film Exchange, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary, engaged in distributing (Fdgs. 47, 49, 52, R. 3668–3669).

three defendants owns any theatres (Fdg. 58; R. 3670).

B. The theatre acquisitions of the five major defendants.—Prior to 1919, none of the defendants had combined the business of distributing with that of exhibiting pictures. In that year, Paramount decided to acquire "theatres of its own so that it might assure itself of outlets for Paramount productions" (Fdg. 8, R. 3662), and formed Southern Enterprises, Inc., which acquired various theatres in the south. At about the same time, Paramount also obtained a 50 percent interest in the Black chain of theatres in New England (Fdg. 8, R. 3662; Ex. 85, R. 197).

In 1920, Loew was a substantial theatre operator. At that time it acquired Metro Pictures Co., a producer and distributor. In 1924, Metro was merged with Goldwyn Pictures Co. and Mayer Pictures Co., both producers and distributors, to form Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (Ex. 48, R. 181).

RKO was organized in 1928 by Radio Corporation of America. At the time of its organization it acquired production and distribution facilities through merger with another company, and also acquired interests in a number of companies operating circuits of vaudeville theatres (Fdgs. 18, 19, 21, R. 3664; Ex. 94, R. 203).

In 1925, Warner acquired its first theatre circuit (Ex. 116, R. 209). In 1928, Warner acquired the stock of the Stanley Company of America which owned about 250 theatres situated principally in the Pennsylvania and New Jersey area (Fdgs. 27–29, R. 3665; Ex. 116, R. 209). In the next year and nine months, Warner acquired the stock of several other corporations owning circuits of theatres in the same general area and a smaller number of theatres scattered in various other parts of the country (Fdg. 30, R. 3665; Ex. 116, R. 209).

In 1925, Fox acquired its intial interest in theatres through the purchase of stock in corporations engaged in operating theatres (Ex. 45, R. 175). Since then, it has acquired additional theatre interests, some by acquisition from others and some by its own construction (Fdg. 42, R. 3667; Ex. 45, R. 175).

In 1929 and 1930, all of the major defendants except Loew acquired additional theatre circuits and emerged in 1930 in substantially their present form (Exs. 45, 85, 94, 116, R. 175, 197, 203, 209).

C. The geographical pattern of the major defendants' theatre holdings.—The exact location of all of the major defendants' theatres is shown at pp. 208–255 of the Appendix. These defendants operate theatres in 922 towns located in all 48 states and the District of Columbia. In Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Maine, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, and Vermont, the only affiliated theatres are Paramount's. In Kansas, Montana, Nevada, and Wyoming, the only affiliated theatres are those of Fox. In Idaho, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Virginia, and West Virginia, there are no towns in which two or more major defendants separately operate theatres.[11]

Thus of the total of 922 towns in which these defendants own theatre interests, there are 775 (84%) in which only one defendant has such interests. See App. pp. 208–255. In addition, there are 100 towns in which two or more defendants pool (infra, pp. 29–31) all or some of their theatre interests. There remain, therefore, only 47 towns in which the theatre interests of two or more majors are operated even in nominal competition with each other. A great part of these are cities of more than 100,000.[12] Even after the pooling arrangements are terminated, as directed by the district court (infra, p. 44), there will be only 60 towns, or 6 percent of the total of [11] This geographical allocation is spelled out in more detail in Monograph 43, The Motion Picture Industry—A Pattern of Control, TNEC, pp. 15–16. See also Ex. RKO–11, R. 1764.

[12] The only towns of less than 100,000 in which this situation prevails are Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz. (Paramount and Fox), Santa Barbara, Calif. (Fox and Warner), New London, Conn. (Paramount and Warner), Sioux City, Ia., and Waterloo, Ia. (Paramount and RKO), Lynn, Mass (Paramount and Warner), Union City, N. J. (RKO and Warner), White Plains, N. Y. (Loew and RKO), Ambridge and Butler, Pa. (Paramount and Warner), Aberdeen and Hoquiam, Wash. (Fox and Warner) (App. pp. 208, 212, 214, 222, 226, 236, 238, 242, 252).

922 in which the major defendants own theatre interests, where they will be competing even nominally as exhibitors.[120]

This situation prevails notwithstanding an expansion in the theatre interests of Paramount and Fox since 1935.[121] Their expansion, even when achieved through theatre corporations only 50% owned by them, has been subject to control at all times by the home offices of these companies (R. 886, 2102).

The lack of competition among the defendants in licensing films in towns where two or more of them have theatres operating in nominal opposition was demonstrated in concrete terms by evidence introduced by the Government describing the precise manner in which the defendants licensed their product for first run. This evidence shows that, in the 92 cities of more than 100,000 population, during the period 1936–37 to 1943–44, the product of the defendant distributors continued to flow to the defendant exhibitors with virtually no shifts from one defendant exhibitor to another. On the other hand there were substantial changes as between the defendants' theatres and independents' theatres (Exs. 44, 58, 84, 95, 147, 195, 349, U–1; R. 175, 185, 196, 203, 235, 255, 239, 1406, 1834).[14]

[14] These admissions of fact which cover the seasons 1936–37, 1939–40, 1941–42, and 1943–44, respectively, show that during these seasons there were no shifts in the first run distribution of any defendants films from one affiliated outlet to another, except in the following instances:

Newark, N. J.—Beginning with the 1941–42 season, RKO, which had been selling its own (Skouras operated) theatre split its product between this theatre and Paramount and Warner.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Fox-Paramount-RKO pool, which played Fox, Paramount, RKO, Warner and Universal product first run, was dissolved at the end of the 1936–37 season. The distribution of the pool's first-run product thereafter was as follows: Warner to Paramount and RKO; Fox to Fox; Paramount to Paramount and RKO; RKO to RKO; Universal to Fox.

Des Moines, Iowa.—The RKO-Paramount pool which held all defendants' first-run contracts was dissolved during the 1939–40 season. The first run distribution of defendants' films thereafter was still confined to the RKO and Paramount theatres.

Providence, R. I.—In the season 1941–42, RKO split its the major defendants' theatres in licensing the films he sold (R. 410, 572), and it is equally apparent that there was none among the major defendants' theatres in licensing the films distributed by any of them since such competition would have been utterly inconsistent with the general conspiracy to which these defendants were parties. (See infra, pp. 22–29.) No evidence was offered by any defendant to prove that any such competition among them occurred.

D. The defendants' position in the industry.—In the year 1945, the five major defendants had interests in 3,137 of the 18,076 motion-picture theatres in the United States, or about 17.35 percent.[15] (Fdg. 118, R. 3684). These 3,137 theatres, however, paid 45 percent of the total domestic film rental received by all eight distributor-defendants, as compared with the less than 5 product between Loew's and RKO theatres but in 1943–44 season sold its own theatres exclusively.

Lowell, Mass.—Fox split its product for the 1936–37 season between Paramount and RKO but in 1939–40 and thereafter sold to Paramount only.

[15] The figure 3,137 includes both theatres owned by the five major defendants and theatres in which any one of those defendants held a joint interest with an independent exhibitor (see infra, p. 31), except where the interest of the defendant was an indirect minority stock interest. The total theatre interests of this nature held by each defendant are: Paramount, 1,395; Warner, 501; Loew, 135; Fox, 636; and RKO, 109. There are 361 more in which two or more of the defendants held joint interests with each other either through joint stock ownership or through lease or operating agreements (Fdg. 118, R. 3684).

percent of such rental paid by the five largest unaffiliated theatre circuits" (Fdg. 126, R. 3685).

Most of these theatres are concentrated in the larger cities of the United States. The five major defendants together own interests in at least 70 percent of all the first-run theatres in the 92 cities of the United States having populations of over 100,000. They own interests in all of the first-run theatres in 38 of those cities.[16] (Fdg. 148, R. 3688). In 15 more, their affiliates have a virtual monopoly of first-run theatres.[17] In [16] The defendant Loew offered a list of first-run theatres in cities of over 100,000 which showed on its face that in the following 33 cities all such theatres were affiliated with one or more of the defendants: Albany, Rochester, Syracuse and Yonkers, N. Y.; Bridgeport and New Haven, Connecticut; Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Columbus, Ohio; Des Moines, Iowa; Dallas, Ft. Worth, Houston, and San Antonio, Tex.; Flint and Grand Rapids, Mich.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Elizabeth, Newark, and Paterson, N. J.; Chattanooga, Knoxville, and Memphis, Tenn.; Peoria, Ill.; Omaha, Nebr.; South Bend, Ind.; Charlotte, N. C.; and Lowell and Worcester, Mass. (App., pp. 327–338). The list contained theatres listed as independent first-runs in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Paul, and Washington, D. C., which Exs. 428 and 428A (App., pp. 299–307) show have played only one or two of the pictures of any defendant during an entire year.

[17] In New Orleans and Los Angeles, the independents played a total of 27 and 10 films, respectively, of those released by the defendants. In Atlanta, Ga., Birmingham, Ala., Dayton, Ohio, Detroit, Mich., Denver, Colo., Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla., Salt Lake City, Utah, Seattle and Spokane, Wash., Somerville, Mass., Trenton, N. J., and Wilmington, Del., the independent theatres played the regular product of only one defendant distributor on first run (Exs. 428, 428A; App., pp. 299–307).

others, the major defendants' affiliated theatres secured for first-run showing a major part of the product of the eight distributor-defendants.[18] (Exs. 428, 428A; App. pp. 299–307).

In cities of between 25,000 and 100,000 population, the major defendants own interests in 577 of a total of 978 first-run theatres, or almost 60 percent (Ex. 432; App. pp. 308–317). In 135 such cities, their affiliated theatres played all of the product of the eight distributor-defendants on first run.[19] And in at least 300 additional towns, most of them with populations under 25,000, an operator affiliated with one of the major defendants has all of the theatres in the town (Exs. 371, 397; R. 359–370, 2166).

The eight distributor-defendants comprise by far the most important distributors of motion pictures in the United States. In the 1943–44 season these defendants together distributed approximately 78 percent of the features ("Westerns" excluded) distributed by all national distributors in the United States (Fdg. 99, R. 3677).

These eight distributor-defendants received approximately 97 percent of the total film rental [18] Of the remaining cities of over 100,000, the product of the eight distributor-defendants was about equally divided on first-run between affiliated and unaffiliated theatres in cities, unaffiliated theatres had the larger number of first-run theatres and secured more than half of the first-run product in more, and all of the first-run theatres are unaffiliated in the remaining four (Exs. 428, 428A; App., pp. 299–307).

[19] These cities are listed at R. 2355–2357.

paid by all the affiliated theatres during the 1943–44 season. From 71 to 81 percent of that rental went to the five major defendants as distributors, from 26 to 15 percent went to the other three distributor-defendants, and only from 2½ to 4½ percent went to independent distributors (Fdg. 127, R. 3685–86).

E. The conspiracy to fix prices, clearances, and runs.—In the distribution of copyrighted motion pictures, the right to exhibit is licensed rather than sold by the distributor to the exhibitor (Fdg. 61, R. 3670). In licensing features, each of the eight distributor-defendants has agreed with its respective licensees on the minimum admission prices to be charged in exhibiting its features (Fdg. 62, R. 3670). Each distributor-defendant also has followed the practice of including in its license contracts agreements that the distributor will neither exhibit nor grant to another a license to exhibit the pictures licensed for a specified number of days after the run licensed. "This so-called period of 'clearance' or 'protection' is stated in the various licenses in differing ways; in terms of a given period between designated runs; in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified areas or towns; in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors; or in terms of combinations of these formulae" (Fdg. 73, R. 2673). Clearance is of course given to protect a particular run in a theatre over a subsequent run (Fdg. 83, R. 3674).

The price, clearance, and run provisions are all mutually interdependent. The run and clearance provisions together fix the relative playing positions of all theatres in a given area, and the minimum price provisions are based on playing position, the first-run theatres being required to charge the highest prices, the second-run theatres the next highest, and so on (Exs. 276, 278, 280, 282, 284, 286, 288, 290; App. pp. 1–18).

The pattern of exploitation of a first-class film in metropolitan centers is one in which the greatest film rental is derived from the first-run theatres and progressively lesser rentals are received from subsequent exhibitions (Exs. 467, 468, 469; App. pp. 280–285). The larger first-run film rental is of course a direct reflection of the proportionately greater box-office receipts of the first-run theatre resulting from the protection against competition of other theatres in the area which the run, clearance and minimum admission price provisions afford. In smaller towns, where fewer runs are sold, the first-run yields an even greater proportion of the total revenue from the town (Exs. F–21, F–21A; App. pp. 294–296).

All of the defendants, both distributor and exhibitor, have engaged in a conspiracy to fix the prices, runs, and clearances for substantially all theatres throughout the United States, including the large number of important affiliated theatres (Fdgs. 64, 65, 81, 82, R. 3670–3671, 3674). This conspiracy has been effectuated mainly by means of film-licensing agreements between all eight defendants as distributors and the five major defendants as exhibitors (Fdg. 64, R. 3670).

Each of the five major defendants as an exhibitor has been licensed by all of the other defendants as distributors at the fixed admission prices. The five major defendants have engaged in this nationwide system of price-fixing both by granting the price-fixing licenses as distributors and by accepting them as exhibitors; and the other three distributor-defendants have participated in the system by licensing the exhibitor-defendants at the fixed prices (Fdg. 69–71, R. 3672). The defendants' licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all of the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors (Fdg. 64; R. 3670). In this way are controlled the prices to be charged for most of the feature motion pictures exhibited in the United States (Fdg. 65, R. 3671). The major defendants also have made operating agreements as exhibitors with each other and with independent exhibitors providing for joint operation of theatres at fixed minimum admission prices, demonstrating the express intent of these defendants to maintain artificial prices (Fdg. 67, R. 3671). And certain master agreements and franchises between various defendants as distributors and other defendants as exhibitors stipulating minimum admission prices for large numbers of the defendants' theatres further indicate participation in the price-fixing scheme (Fdg. 68, R. 3671).

By agreeing to maintain the prices stipulated in the licenses, each exhibitor of any distributor's pictures consents to the price level at which he will compete with all other exhibitors of those pictures in his competitive area, whether they exhibit on the same or another run. The net effect of all the licenses of a distributor is to establish a price structure which regulates the competition between the various licensees of that distributor in each competitive area. Each exhibitor knows from the uniformity of price practices existing in the industry that the prices of all other exhibitors in his area are similarly controlled. Consequently, all licensees of each distributor are knowingly participating in the price-fixing system, and there is thus a conspiracy between each distributor-defendant individually and its licensees to fix minimum admission prices (Fdg. 71, R. 3672).

By means of the same types of agreements between the eight defendants as distributors and the five major defendants as exhibitors, all of the defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances and runs for the various theatres throughout the country

(Fdgs. 73, 81, 82, R. 3673, 3674). Some of their license agreements have granted clearance to all theatres then or thereafter owned or operated by a particular exhibitor as against all theatres in the competitive area then in operation or thereafter opened. The obvious purpose of such licenses was to give an advantage to the particular exhibitor over all competitors, without relation to the size, location or appointments of the competitive theatres (Fdg. 80, R. 3674). The major defendants "in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents" (Fdg. 79, R. 3674).

The net effect of this system of fixed prices, clearances and runs is that "a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices" (Fdg. 71, R. 3672).

An obvious purpose and result of this system was to increase the profits of the major defendants both as distributors and as exhibitors, and to produce greater profits for the nonexhibitor defendants in their capacity as distributors. "All of the five major defendants have a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which they own theatres and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing films to exhibitors in those areas" (Fdg. 66, R. 3671). The differentials in admission prices between first-run and later-run theatres in any competitive area are calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see the picture at the first-run theatres where they will pay the higher prices. The greater the percentage of potential customers who can be persuaded to see the picture at higher-priced first-run theatres, the greater will be the gross revenue received from exhibition of the picture, which will of course be reflected in increased rentals to the distributors. "In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum admission prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible" (Fdg. 72; R. 3672–3673).

As a result of the control over both distribution and exhibition exercised by the defendants, the conspiracy has been so successful that "Both independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with the defendants, have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatre or theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures" (Fdg. 84; R. 3674).

While the precise point at which this conspiracy originated cannot be accurately determined from the record, it is clear that it began some time after the entry of the major defendants into the exhibition field. An attempt was made by the defendants to show that licensing restrictions of the same character as those on which the conspiracy rests had been used prior to the integration of the defendants. The defendant Paramount offered in evidence a series of license forms intended to show the evolution of the standard form from 1917 through 1945 (Exs. P–1, P–5–P–8, P–11, P–12, P–14–P–16; App. pp. 18–45). The development of the form of license, run and clearance provisions, admission-price-fixing provisions and provisions for auditing the exhibitor's receipts, as they appear in the exhibits, is shown in the Appendix, pp. 18–45. This evolution shows on its face a steadily widening control by the distributor over the exhibitor's business during the period 1923 to 1942.

The first of these licenses which granted rights in a film copyright (Ex. P–7) was the 1923 form (R. 926), which contained provisions for both a minimum admission price restriction and a protection or "run" clause. In 1926, a so-called "standard form" of license (Ex. P–8) was adopted by agreement among the defendant distributors (R. 925), which contained more detailed admission price and "protection" provisions, comparable to those in use for the past ten years. The witness Keough placed the initial use of clearance provisions which referred to the prices to be charged by theatres other than those which signed the license in question as around 1924, 1925 or 1926 (R. 943–944). There was also positive evidence that in at least one area the system of fixing varying admission prices for competing theatres in accordance with their playing positions did not evolve until the principal theatre circuit there was acquired by one of the defendants.[20] The use of copyright restrictions in film licenses as a device for suppressing competition in this industry thus did not occur until after integration commenced, and it evolved into a more complete form of regulation of theatre operating competition as distributor-ownership of theatres increased.[21]

F. Theatre "pooling" arrangements.—The exhibitor-defendants have entered into many arrangements, both with each other and with independent exhibitors, for the pooling of theatres

[20] The witness Rhoden, President of Fox Midwest Circuit, operating theatres in Kansas and Missouri, which were bought by Fox in 1929 (R. 2041), said, with respect to his company's operations in Kansas City, Mo.: "Prior to the 1935–36 motion picture season, the availabilities of subsequent run theatres in Kansas City, Missouri, and the surrounding territory were based upon admission prices. This general system of clearance based upon admission prices had existed in the area since approximately 1929" (R. 2061). The change made in 1935 gave Fox theatres exclusive rights to the first three runs in the town (R. 1215).

[21] The prior use by the original motion picture patent trust of patent license restrictions for the same purpose is disclosed in United States v. Motion Pictures Patents Co., 225 Fed. 800 (E. D. Pa.), appeal dismissed, 247 U. S. 524, in which the United States secured an antitrust decree effectively dissolving that combination. It pooled patents essential to the operation of projection equipment and attempted to control which otherwise would be competitive. These arrangements have been of three types. One form has been that of "operating agreements" under which "given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition with each other, were operated as a unit, or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors, and by which profits of the 'pooled' theatres were divided among the exhibitors in or owners of such theatres according to pre-agreed percentages or otherwise" (Fdg. 112, R. 3682). Some of these agreements provide that the parties may not obtain additional theatres in the competitive area without first offering them to the pool (Ibid).

Another form of pooling arrangement has been "accomplished by leases of theatres, the rentals being determined by a stipulated percentage of profits earned by the 'pooled' theatres" (Fdg. 114, R. 3682). And a third form has been through joint ownership of theatres, or theatre-owning corporations (Fdg. 115, R. 3682).

The number of theatres thus held jointly by each defendant is as follows (Fdg. 117, R. 3683, 3684):

the market for films by requiring licensees of the projection equipment to use it exclusively for films licensed from them. Such a restriction was held illegal per se, in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Company, 243 U. S. 502, and the two decisions disposed of the patent licensing restriction techniques as a means of monopolizing the film business.

[1] These figures exclude theatres in which either the defendant or the independent held an interest of 5% or less, the district court having treated such an interest as de minimis (Fdg. 115, R. 3683).

The necessary effect of all of these pooling arrangements is to eliminate competition. In the case of pooling by two defendants, "The result is to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of features which flow almost automatically to the theatres in the earnings of which they have a joint interest" (Fdg. 112, R. 3682). In the case of pooling between a defendant and an independent, the effect is to eliminate competition in exhibition between the theatres involved and to combine their power in competition against theatres not in the pool (Fdg. 114, R. 3682).

G. Block-booking and blind-selling.—For many years, the distributor-defendants, except United Artists, licensed their copyrighted films in blocks of a year's releases before they had actually been produced. In such cases, the exhibitor knew nothing of the films he was buying, except the picture's title, plot, and players. In many cases, the exhibitor was forced to take licenses for all of the films in order to get any, although sometimes he was given a right to subsequent cancellation of a certain number of the pictures. The consent decree entered into by the five major defendants required them to trade-show their films before offering them for license, and limited to five the number which might be offered and licensed in any contract. These consent decree provisions on trade-showing and block-booking have lapsed, but the five consenting defendants have continued to observe them. Columbia and Universal have continued to license in annual blocks but have allowed the exhibitors considerable freedom in rejecting a percentage of the pictures (Fdg. 94, R. 3676). Both block-booking and blind-selling prevent exhibitors from bidding for individual pictures on their particular merits (Fdgs. 93, 97, R. 3676–3677).

H. Master agreements.—All of the distributor defendants have entered into master agreements with exhibitors covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres, usually either an affiliated or an unaffiliated circuit. Under such license agreements, the circuits are allowed to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as they see fit, to exhibit the pictures on such runs and clearance as they deem best, and to decide upon other terms for exhibition (Fdg. 88, R. 3675).

I. Formula deals.—Paramount and RKO have entered into formula deals with circuits affiliated with Paramount.[22] In these deals, the license fee for a given feature to be paid by the theatres covered is determined by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The circuit may allocate film rentals, runs, and clearances among its various theatres as it sees fit (Fdg. 86, R. 3675).

J. Franchises.—Franchises are licensing agreements which cover the exhibition of all features released by a distributor during more than one motion picture season (Fdg. 1, R. 3660). All of the distributor-defendants have entered into some franchises with various exhibitors (Fdg. 89, R. 3675).

In the case of master agreements, formula deals and franchises, all of the theatres of a circuit are included in one agreement, and other theatre owners in the area are given no opportunity to bid for the features covered by the agreements.

K. Other practices which discriminate against independents.—The distributor-defendants have included in their contracts with the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits numerous privileges which are not granted to the small independent exhibitors. These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include such privileges. "The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors" (Fdg. 110, R. 3681–3682).

THE TRIAL COURT'S CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The district court's construction of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and its application of those provisions to its evidentiary findings of fact is set forth both in its conclusions of law (R. 3691–3694) and in its opinion (R. 3504–3563). These legal conclusions of the court may be summarized as follows:

(1) Price fixing: All of the defendants, both distributor and exhibitor, have (a) unreasonably restrained and (b) attempted to monopolize trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures by conspiring with each other to fix uniform minimum theatre admission prices (R. 3516–3530, 3692–3693).

Each of the distributor-defendants also has (a) unreasonably restrained and (b) attempted to monopolize trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures by conspiring individually with its respective licensees to fix uniform minimum theatre admission prices (R. 3527–3530, 3692–3693).

The Copyright Act does not legalize defendants' price fixing because of the horizontal and vertical conspiracies (R. 3528–3529).

(2) Clearance and run: All of the defendants, both distributor and exhibitor, have (a) unreasonably restrained and (b) attempted to monopolize trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures by conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform in each local competitive area (R. 3530–3540, 3692–3693).

The court concluded, however, that an individual grant of clearance, when unaccompanied by price fixing and reasonable as to time and area, was essential in the distribution and exhibition of pictures and was lawful on the same principle that a vendor of property may covenant not to compete within a properly limited time and area (R. 3530–3534).

(3) Theatre pooling arrangements: Each exhibitor-defendant has unreasonably restrained trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures by joint operation (through operating agreements and profit-sharing leases) and joint ownership, both with each other and with independents, of normally competitive theatres (R. 3547–3549, 3693).

(4) Other unlawful practices: Each distributor-defendant has (a) unreasonably restrained and (b) attempted to monopolize trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures by: (1) agreeing individually with large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits to grant unreasonable clearance over theatres operated by their competitors (R. 3532–3533, 3693); (2) agreeing individually with such affiliated and unaffiliated circuits to grant numerous license privileges which discriminated against their exhibitor competitors (R. 3549–3551, 3692–3693); (3) entering into master agreements and franchises with such affiliated and unaffiliated circuits (R. 3540–3542, 3693); (4) blind-selling; and (5) block-booking [22] (R. 3542–3547, 3693). The court concluded that block-booking is unlawful because it conditions the licensing of one copyrighted film upon the acceptance of another, thereby preventing bidding for individual films on their merits and adding to the monopoly of one copyrighted picture that of another. The court also concluded that Paramount and RKO had similarly violated the Sherman Act by entering into formula deals (R. 3540–3541, 3693).

Each exhibitor-defendant has also unreasonably restrained trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures by conspiring with the distributor-defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission prices, clearances, runs and other license terms (R. 3693).

(5) Monopoly: Despite the trial court's findings and conclusions that the defendants had conspired to restrain trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and had attempted by their conspiracy to monopolize such trade, it held that "The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition" (R. 3553); and the court further held that even in the many cities where two or more of the major defendants control all or substantially all of the first-run theatres their interests could not be aggregated in considering whether a monopoly existed (R. 3552). With respect to those cities in which a single defendant owns all the first-run theatres, the court held that there was no unlawful monopoly because there was not sufficient proof that the monopoly position had been intentionally acquired rather than resulting from the inertness or inability of independent competitors (R. 3554). The court said nothing concerning the Government's claim of a collective distribution monopoly, or its contention that each vertically integrated combination between a major distributor and its theatres violated both Sections 1 and 2. Consequently, the court failed to find that any of the defendants, individually or collectively, had monopolized any part of the industry in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

IV

THE DECREE

At the close of the case, the Government reiterated its request for complete divorcement of the major defendants' theatre interests from their distribution and production interests, and took the position that the form and extent of the relief against unlawful trade practices could not be determined until the basic divorcement issue had been decided. The court in its opinion, however, not only decided the issues of law violation but outlined in considerable detail the form of the decree to be entered (R. 3559–3563). The court stated that the decree should provide injunctions against all the unlawful conspiracies and agreements, such as horizontal and vertical price fixing; agreements on systems of run and clearance, and unreasonable clearance even when individually imposed; master agreements, franchises and formula deals; all other practices which discriminated against independents; block-booking and blind-selling; and pooling arrangements in the form of operating agreements and profit-sharing leases. The opinion also stated that all joint ownership of theatres by two defendants, or by one defendant with an independent where the defendant's interest in any theatre was more than 5 percent and less than 95 percent, was to be terminated.

No divestiture of the major defendants' vast theatre holdings was to be ordered. The court recognized that mere injunctions against all the unlawful practices would not restore competition in the industry, and that some affirmative relief was necessary. But it concluded that the restraints existing in the industry did not lie in the "ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors," but in the unlawful practices, because if these practices were employed in favor of powerful independents, rather than the defendants, substantially the same undesirable results would follow (R. 3554–3555). Moreover, the court concluded that divestiture would "be injurious to the corporations concerned," and "damaging to the public" because "a new set of theatre owners * * * would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted * * *" (R. 3559, 3551). In lieu of divestiture and as "The only way competition may be introduced into the present system of fixed prices, clearances, and runs" (R. 3540), the court directed establishment of a competitive bidding system under which each picture (except those which a distributor exhibited in its own theatres) was to be sold to the highest desirable bidder on a picture-by-picture and theatre-by-theatre basis. The court concluded (R. 3551): "We think that the opportunity of independents to compete under the bidding system for pictures and runs renders such a harsh remedy as complete divestiture unnecessary, at least until the efficiency of that system has been tried and found wanting." The competitive bidding system had not been suggested or discussed by any of the parties.

The court, in its opinion, also directed that the joint theatre ownerships between a defendant and an independent could be dissolved either by purchase from or sale to the co-owner, or by sale to a nondefendant. Purchases of such interests by defendants were to be subject to court approval. Thus the defendants were permitted to acquire outright theatres in which their joint ownership with others had been held unlawful (R. 3561–3562). Except for acquisitions made in the process of dissolving the unlawful joint ownerships, each defendant was to be enjoined from expanding its theatre holdings (R. 3700).

Finally, the court rejected the Government's contention that clearance was unlawful per se, and concluded that clearance individually imposed and not "in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensees in the runs awarded to them" was lawful, and should not be enjoined (R. 3559–3560, 3530–3534).

Proposed findings and judgments (R. 3596–3603, 3610–3635) were submitted by all parties and hearings thereon had on October 21, 22, and 24, 1946 (R. 2917–3090). Counsel representing various groups of independent exhibitors, heard as friends of the court, all objected to the competitive bidding provisions outlined in the court's opinion (R. 2811–2872). A ground common to all these objections was that the major defendants as theatre operators had such a tremendous advantage in financial resources and in their privilege of exhibiting their own pictures in their own theatres upon any terms they pleased that other exhibitors could not successfully compete with them.

Counsel for the principal independent producers in the industry were also heard as friends of the court. They contended that since they were dependent upon the distributor-defendants for profitable distribution of their films, the decree's restrictions on distribution practices would hurt them more than it would the major defendants, whose own theatre outlets remained unaffected by the restrictions (R. 2850–2861).

The court having ruled in its opinion against divorcement and the Government's contention that all clearance was unlawful per se, the Government proposed a judgment modifying that outlined in the opinion in the following principal respects:

(1) a provision prohibiting each major defendant from licensing films produced or distributed by it to another major defendant for use in its theatres for a ten-year period commencing one year after the entry of judgment was proposed (R. 3601); and (2) joint interests in theatres held by a defendant with an independent exhibitor were to be dissolved only by a sale of the defendant's interest to a nondefendant (R. 3600–3601).

On December 31, 1946, the court, rejecting both of the Government's proposals mentioned above, entered its judgment (R. 3694–3701) providing that:

All the distributor-defendants were enjoined from:

(1) Granting any licenses in any way fixing minimum theatre admission prices (R. 3695);

(2) Agreeing with each other or with any exhibitor or distributor to maintain a system of clearances (R. 3695);

(3) Granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition, or between theatres in competition "in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted." When any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the decree, however, the distributor shall have the burden of sustaining its legality (R. 3695–3696);

(4) Making or performing any master agreements, franchises or formula deals (R. 3696);

(5) Entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned on the licensee's taking one or more other features (block-booking) (R. 3696);

(6) Refusing to extend to a licensee the right to reject 20 percent of features licensed prior to trade-showing, where any feature has not been trade-shown before the granting of a license for more than a single feature (R. 3696);

(7) Licensing a feature for exhibition in any theatre (other than its own) except by offering it at a minimum flat rental to the operator of each theatre in a competitive area who desires to exhibit it on any run. Within fifteen days, any such operator may submit a bid for the run he desires on a flat rental, percentage of gross receipts, or any other rental basis. The distributor may reject all offers, but any license granted must be to the highest "responsible" bidder on each run "having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor." This method of licensing is not required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in which no exhibitor makes an offer within the fifteen-day period. Each distributor's own theatres are exempt from this provision, and to those the distributor may license on any terms as to price, clearance, run, or otherwise that it chooses (R. 3696–3698).

All the defendant exhibitors were enjoined from:

(1) Making or performing any operating agreement with another defendant or with an independent exhibitor whereby two or more normally competitive theatres are operated collectively (R. 3698). All existing agreements of this kind are to be dissolved by July 1, 1947 (R. 3719). All agreements that newly acquired theatres in the area must be first offered to the pool are likewise enjoined (R. 3698–99).

(2) Making or performing any profit-sharing lease under which a defendant leases any theatre to another defendant or to an independent exhibitor in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits (R. 3699). All existing profit-sharing leases are to be terminated by July 1, 1947 (R. 3719).

(3) Owning any interest in any theatre jointly with an independent (where the defendant's interest is greater than 5 percent and less than 95 percent) or with another defendant. Existing relationships of this kind between defendants and independents are to be terminated within two years either by the defendant's purchase of the other party's interest, by defendant's sale of his interest to the other party, or by sale to a non-defendant third party. Purchases by a defendant of an independent's or another defendent's interest are subject to approval of the court upon finding "that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures." (R. 3699.)

(4) Expanding their theatre holdings in any manner except by acquisitions of joint interests as described above (R. 3700).

The decree expressly states that none of its provisions is to be construed to limit in any way the right of any distributor-defendant to license or otherwise provide for the exhibition of motion pictures distributed by it "in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions" as it may choose in any theatre in which it has or may under the decree acquire an interest of 95 percent or more either directly or through subsidiaries (R. 3700).

The court in its opinion (R. 3562) had directed that the decree provide for arbitration of disputes as to bids, clearances, runs and similar controversies that would arise under its competitive bidding system and other provisions of the decree. The arbitration system was to apply only "to all parties who may consent to the creation of such tribunals for adjustment of such disputes" (R. 3562). The three nonexhibitor defendants, however, refused to agree to arbitration for any purpose and no agreement could be reached between the major defendants and the Government on the substantive provisions for the operation of such a system. Consequently, in its decree, the court provided for the liquidation of the arbitration system which had existed under the consent decree (R. 3700), but, in an accompanying memorandum stated (R. 3702):

"We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree."

All parties have appealed, and on April 7, 1947, this Court entered an order staying substantially all provisions of the judgment relating to motion picture licensing practices and the provision terminating the consent decree and liquidating the arbitration system, pending final disposition of these appeals.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS TO BE URGED

The district court erred:

(1) In decreeing competitive bidding as appropriate relief (A. of E. 1, 10, 16, 18, 21, R 3721–3723);

(2) In failing to prohibit the continued use by the major defendants of each other's theatres as exhibition outlets for each other's films (A. of E. 5, R. 3721);

(3) In failing to prohibit absolutely any further acquisitions of theatre interests by the major defendants (A. of E. 8, R. 3722);

(4) In failing to order ultimate divorcement of the distribution and production businesses of the major defendants from their theatre operations by divestiture of their theatre holdings (A. of E 2, 3, 6, 7, 17, 20, 23, 24, 25, R. 3721–3723).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I

Each of the five major defendants is a film producer and distributor which has a large theatre circuit composed of wholly and partially owned theatre corporations. These vertical combinations were formed in order to acquire an assured outlet for films. The eight distributor-defendants are the principal sources of feature films and the five major defendants the principal market outlets for films in the United States. No exhibitor can operate successfully without access to a substantial number of the films of the eight distributor defendants, and no producer or distributor can succeed without access to a substantial number of the affiliated theatres of the five majors. The distributor-defendants have habitually made unlawful copyright license agreements with exhibitors containing provisions designed to restrict theatre operating competition. Identical restrictions on any particular theatre have been imposed by all the distributor defendants, and this practice has been followed with respect to all theatres with which the defendants deal. They have thus conspired with one another to restrict competition among themselves and with other distributors. They have thereby erected and maintained a fixed run, clearance and admission price system to which other distributors and exhibitors must conform to gain access to the market.

Thus, the five theatre owning defendants have a continuing power and established proclivity to discriminate in favor of each other as distributors and exhibitors. The major defendants' theatre circuits are so located geographically that there is little competition among them. In the limited areas in which theatres affiliated with one defendant are in nominal competition with theatres affiliated with another, actual competition among them in licensing films and fixing admission prices has been completely eliminated by the conspiracy. The same distributor's product habitually goes to the same affiliated outlet, and there has been little change in that pattern of distribution over the years. The defendants have also made express agreements with each other to pool specific theatres. They have made similar pooling agreements with independent theatre operators in other areas. They have also pooled theatre interests with each other and with independents over wide areas by pooling stockholdings in theatre corporations. These pooling arrangements were held illegal per se by the trial court. But the vertical integration and cross licensing are permitted to continue substantially unchanged.

The judgment below is inadequate to give the relief that the expediting court intended to grant.

That court recognized that affirmative relief was necessary. It recognized that it could have divorced the theatre business of these defendants from their distribution and production business so that economic incentives would induce future competition. It would have given such relief if it had followed existing judicial precedents dealing with similar abuses of such power. However, because of business hardship and a public inconvenience which the court mistakenly assumed such relief involved, the court instead decided first to try to compel future competition by regulating the film buying of 18,000 theatres. Such regulation was not sought by the Government and is opposed by those members of the industry whom it was intended to benefit.

The system of competitive bidding adopted for this purpose is wholly inadequate because competitive bidding can be no more than an empty gesture in an industry which must be non-competitive while vertical combinations exist. It is unenforceable because the defendants have considerable room for arbitrary exercise of discretion in determining the highest bidder and because no adequate enforcement machinery is available. Even if effectively enforced, the system would not prohibit the restrictions by which the defendants have illegally controlled the distribution of films in the past, even though some formal changes in the manner of their imposition are required by the decree. Independents are now in such a weakened bidding position due in large part to the defendants' long continued unlawful conduct that they cannot successfully compete with the major defendants for films.

For more than twenty years, attempts to regulate the motion picture industry in order to protect independents against unreasonable license restrictions have been made. Yet, in 1946, the court below found the defendants still in illegal control of the industry. The failure of such past regulations shows that the decisive competitive weapon has not been a particular restrictive practice but the power, inherent in the integration of the defendants, to suppress and control competition. So long as this power continues, any form of license regulation is futile.

II

The only way in which the domestic film market can now be opened to competition is by divorcing the major defendants from their affiliated theatres. Acquisition and continued use of similar market control for a similar purpose by vertical combinations has always resulted in their dissolution in Sherman Act cases decided by this Court. In United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255, the railroad was divested of anthracite coal mines which it had acquired to assure itself of the business of transporting and marketing their coal without competition from other carriers. The continuing power to discriminate against competitors which was inherent in that combination was coupled there, as here, with an intent to use such power for that purpose. Such an intent was established there, and here, by a past record of illegal discrimination. Upon such a record, this Court ordered dissolution of that combination, notwithstanding a continuing power in the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate such discrimination.

In United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, a 1920 consent decree which took the five major meat packers out of the grocery and retail meat trade was before this Court. The district court had, in 1930, rescinded prohibitions against their engaging in the grocery business and against any use of their distribution facilities for handling the groceries of others because it thought the rise of integrated grocery chains in the intervening ten years had ended any threat of monopoly by the packers in this field. That decision was reversed by this Court, despite the fact that there was then active competition among all five packers, because the packers had control of meat distribution facilities which gave them individually a continuing power to suppress competition in the distribution of groceries, and which they had shown a proclivity to use for that purpose. This was regarded as sufficient basis for refusing to rescind prohibitions designed to terminate their power.

The conspiracy found below may not effectively be terminated without divorcement of the affiliated theatres. So long as the five majors retain their theatres and all eight distributor-defendants are allowed to enter into license agreements with them, the defendants can continue to use these non-competitive theatre outlets of the major defendants to bring about uniformity of restrictive provisions in their film licenses. Wherever such license agreements between the distributor and exhibitor defendants are made, they will have much the same competitive effect as the horizontal agreements by which the conspiracy found below has been maintained. While a prohibition like that which we seek against cross-licensing among the major defendants (see point III) would eliminate the conspiracy among those five defendants, it would not prevent each of them from entering into similar restrictive agreements with the three non-exhibitor defendants.

The required divorcement can in part be accomplished by compulsory sale to independents of the major defendants' interests in those theatre enterprises now owned jointly with independents. These joint interests were specifically found below to be illegally held, but the court below erred in permitting their termination by purchase by the defendants. Sale by the defendants is, we think, the obvious remedy for the illegality, and such divestiture is, moreover, required by United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

III

The five major defendants should, in any event, be prevented from using each other's theatres as outlets for each other's films. Their joint use of theatres to suppress competition by pooling agreements among their theatre subsidiaries was found to be illegal below and enjoined. Their continued joint use of each other's theatres has the same competitive effect when a license agreement between the distributing subsidiary of one and an exhibiting subsidiary of another is permitted. By prohibiting these defendants from dealing with each other, the film market will be partially opened to competition from both independent distributors and exhibitors. This prohibition would not, however, end the continuing discrimination inherent in the major defendants' use of their affiliated theatres as noncompetitive outlets for their own films and as outlets for the films of the three non-exhibitor distributors. While it would supply an incentive for the major defendants to compete with each other, their power, incentive and means to suppress the competition of independent exhibitors and distributors by licensing discriminations would continue. This prohibition is therefore only an interim measure which must be supplemented by divorcement to secure effective, permanent relief.

ARGUMENT

I

The remedy decreed below is so inadequate as to constitute an abuse of discretion

The district court found that the distributor-defendants are the eight dominant distributors of motion pictures in the United States. Together they distributed approximately 78 percent of all features (Westerns excluded) nationally distributed during the 1943–44 season (Fdg. 99, R. 3677).

Five of these defendants have entered the exhibition field on a large scale, primarily by purchasing theatre circuits from former independent operators (Fdgs. 8, 18, 19, 21, 27–29, 30, 42, R. 3662, 3664–3665, 3667). The trial court specifically found that Paramount had acquired its theatre interests for the purpose of assuring an outlet for its films (Fdg. 8, R. 3662), and it is undisputed in the record that the other four defendants acquired some or all of their theatre circuits for a similar purpose. In addition, these defendants have entered into numerous agreements among themselves and with independent exhibitors providing for the joint ownership and operation of theatres (Fdg. 117, R. 3683–3684). As a result, these five defendants in 1945 had interests in a total of 3,137 theatres in the United States (Fdg. 118, R. 3684).

These theatres are concentrated in the larger cities of the United States. The five defendants own interests in at least 70 per cent of all first-run theatres in the 92 cities of the United States having a population of over 100,000 (Fdg. 148, R. 3688–89). In eight of those cities, corporations affiliated with one defendant own all the first-run theatres, in 30 others affiliates of two or more defendants own all the first-run houses (Fdgs. 147, 148, R. 3688–3689), and, in ~~15~~ 16 more, the defendants' affiliates have a virtual monopoly of first-run theatres (Exs. 428, 428A, App. 299–307). The defendants also own interests in almost 60 per cent of all first-run theatres in the approximately 300 towns of the United States having populations of between 25,000 and 100,000 (Ex. 432; App. 308–317). In 135 of those cities, their affiliated theatres played all of the product of the eight distributor defendants on first-run (R. 2355–2357). In more than 300 additional towns, most of them with populations under 25,000, an operator affiliated with one major defendant has all of the theatres showing all runs in each town (Exs. 371, 397 (R. 370, 2166); R. 359–370).

These theatre circuits are so located that there is practically no competition among them. Of the 922 towns in which the defendants own theatre interests there are 775 in which only one defendant has such interests. There are 100 additional towns in which two or more defendants have pooled their theatre interests. Thus there are at present only 47 towns (5%) in which the theatre interests of two or more majors are operating in nominal competition with each other, and even if the pooling arrangements are terminated pursuant to the direction of the trial court, there will be only 60 such towns (6%).

In the light of this position of the defendants in the distribution and exhibition fields, it is apparent that no exhibitor can operate successfully without access to at least some of the product of the defendant distributors (Fdg. 151, R. 3689), and that no producer or distributor can succeed without doing business with the theatres of the five major defendants.[1] Having this power over both the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, the defendants have engaged in a conspiracy to fix the prices, runs, and clearances for substantially all the theatres in the United States, their own as well as their competitors'. (Fdgs. 64, 65, 81, 82, R. 3670–3671, 3674).

The conspiracy to fix runs was nothing more or less than an exclusionary conspiracy. It was an agreement among the eight distributor defendants as to which theatres they would license on first-run, which they would license on second-run, and so on. This agreement of course, accounts for the major defendants' great control over first-run exhibition in the larger cities. Each of the defendants selected not only its own theatres but also those of the other defendants for first-run showings, and, by means of the conspiracy and their control over distribution, guaranteed those theatres dominion over the first-run field.

The conspiracy on prices and clearance was designed not only to eliminate price competition in the sale to the public of defendants' products, but also to protect the first-run theatres, encourage the maximum number of persons to patronize those theatres, and thereby increase the profits of defendants both as distributors and as exhibitors. The clearance agreements fixed the interval between runs so as to protect the first-run exhibitors from the competition of later runs and to persuade patrons to attend the first-run showings rather than wait for subsequent showings (Fdg. 83, R. 3674). By means of the price agreements, "a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices" (Fdg. 71, R. 3672). The range in prices between competing theatres was so fixed as "to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible" (Fdg. 72, R. 3672–3673).

The conspiracy has been extremely successful. While defendants' theatres comprise only a little over 17 percent of the total number of theatres in the United States, they have paid 45 percent of the total domestic film rental received by all eight distributor defendants.[16] This contrasts with the less than 5 percent of such rental paid by the five largest unaffiliated theatre circuits. (Fdg. 126, R. 3685).

The eight distributor defendants, on the other hand, received approximately 97 percent of the total film rental paid by the affiliated theatres in the 1943–44 season, from 71 to 81 percent going to the five majors and from 26 to 15 percent going to the other three defendants (Fdg. 127, R. 3685).[17] By reason of their power and their conspiracy, the defendants have so controlled the industry that "Both independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with the defendants, have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatre or theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures" (Fdg. 84, R. 3674).

[16] See Ex. 425, App. 258–259. A tabulation offered by Warner (Ex. W–4, App. pp. 360–361) shows that its percentage of film rental received from all affiliated theatres increased from 37.2 to 45.4% during the period 1935–44. This increase was achieved notwithstanding a decrease in the proportion of affiliated theatres to independent theatres in the domestic market during the same period. Compare affiliated expansion noted in note 13, p. 17, supra, with Fdg. 145, R. 3688.

[17] See Ex. 424, App. pp. 256–257. This control of the film revenue from these theatres has remained substantially unchanged during the past ten years, notwithstanding a substantial increase during the same period in the proportion of independently distributed films used by these theatres (see App. pp. 344–346, 348, 350, 353).

The district court recognized that the defendants had such extensive power to exclude others from the film market that mere injunctions against future practices would not be enough, and that some affirmative relief was necessary to eliminate the effects of the unlawful conduct and restore competition to the industry. Consequently, it adopted the competitive bidding plan as "The only way competition may be introduced into the present system of fixed prices, clearances and runs * * *" (R. 3540). It thought that this plan would bring an end to the noncompetitive price-fixing, run and clearance system (R. 3540), and enable independents to compete with the large affiliated circuits on a fair basis, even where the defendants now operate all of the first-run theatres (R. 3552–3553).

In our view, the district court plainly erred in concluding that the competitive bidding system would accomplish even the objectives which it recognized were necessary. We think that competitive bidding will neither end the unlawful practices nor permit independents to compete with the majors on a fair basis, and, moreover, that even if it were otherwise adequate in substance to accomplish those purposes, it will not do so because the system is procedurally unworkable. Consequently, we submit that the judgment below is so inadequate as to amount to an abuse of discretion.

A. THE COMPETITIVE BIDDING SYSTEM IS INEFFECTIVE TO ELIMINATE THE RESTRAINTS AND RESTORE COMPETITION

In equity proceedings brought by the United States under Section 4 of the Sherman Act, it is the authority and duty of the district court "to prevent" as well as to "restrain" violations of the Act. Accordingly, it is well established that the court must enter a decree which not only will end the illegal practices found to exist, but which will provide "such reasonable measures as would preclude their revival" (United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 188; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 461; Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293, 299), and will "effectively pry open to competition a market that has been closed by defendants' illegal restraints". International Salt Co., Inc. v. United States, No. 46, October Term, 1947.

The decree below will not accomplish any of these purposes. Under that decree, the distributor-defendants remain as the largest distributors of pictures in the United States with control of the supply necessary to operate a theatre successfully. The five major defendants continue not only as the most important distributors, but also as the operators of by far the largest theatre circuits in the United States—the very relationship that the trial court found had been so persistently abused in the past. These major theatre circuits are so powerful, so concentrated in the larger cities, and so distributed geographically that no distributor can succeed without access to the market which they represent. Each defendant can continue to do business with the other defendants just as it has in the past, except that if an independent bids for pictures the majors' theatres must outbid him, and the defendants are enjoined from agreeing on minimum admission prices or imposing unreasonable clearance. They are expressly permitted, however, to grant such clearance "as is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted." Each major also is explicitly allowed to continue to license all of its own product to its own theatres on any terms it chooses, even to the extent of discriminating against independents by any of the very means the lower court found generally unlawful. In fact, the only relief given to the independent is that he is allowed to bid against the five major defendants for pictures.

We think that this, in reality, is no affirmative relief at all, for the reason that the independents are in no position to compete with the majors for pictures, an inability in large part due to the defendants' unlawful conduct over the past years. We submit, therefore, that the competitive bidding system is fundamentally ineffective because it does nothing to pry open to independent competition the market that has been so long closed by defendants' unlawful conduct.

The independent will be attempting to break into a monopolized field against powerful corporations backed by great wealth and resources. If these corporations want to prevent his entry into the field by outbidding him on pictures, there is no doubt of their ability to do so. In fact, it is likely that paying higher prices for the films would result in no injury to the majors for they would at the same time receive more as distributors.

The independent newcomer is competing with a company that makes a profit in both distribution and exhibition. If the affiliated company wants to undercut an independent exhibitor, it can operate its theatre at a loss, and still survive on its profits from production and distribution. In addition, the affiliated exhibitor has the great advantage of the assured supply of its own distributor's pictures. The independent has no assured supply and must compete with the affiliated exhibitor for the product of the other distributors. The affiliated exhibitor can use the profits from its assured product to out-bid the independent for the desirable films of other distributors needed to fill out its program. The independent's chances of securing adequate films through competitive bidding become progressively worse as the number of affiliated companies having theatres in a particular town increases. If three of the majors have theatres in any one town the independent can compete with those three for the product of only the other five distributors.

And with respect to the picture supply tied to each major's affiliated theatres, that defendant is permitted by the decree to discriminate against independent exhibitors in any way it chooses. It can grant exceptionally long clearance or engage in any of the various other discriminatory practices which have been followed in the past and which the district court found generally unlawful.

Finally, in many cities it will be difficult, if not impossible, for the independents to obtain theatres. The majors will not, of course, sell their theatres to independent competitors. And it is not easy to build theatres, as the lower court suggested. The first-run downtown areas in most cities are built up with no available sites for construction of new theatres.

The competitive bidding system is also basically ineffective because it does nothing to eliminate the very inducements which gave rise to the unlawful conduct in the first place. Cf. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 189–190. Since the affiliated circuits of the five majors remain by far the largest customers of the distributor-defendants, those distributors have the same economic incentive to favor the majors' theatres wherever possible. Since the distributor-defendants continue as the most important sources of supply, the major defendants as exhibitors have the same economic incentive to favor those distributors. And there will, of course, be the continued inducement among the major defendants as both suppliers and customers of each other to continue to use their dual functions to cooperate rather than to compete with each other.

The terms of the competitive bidding system will themselves do much to bring these incentives into play. The decree provides that the distributor-defendants must offer each picture to all exhibitors in a competitive area, stating the minimum flat rental acceptable for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the picture will be available and the clearance which will be granted. Within 15 days, any exhibitor in the area may submit a bid stating the run desired, the amount he will pay on the basis of a flat rental, a percentage of gross receipts or any other rental basis he desires, the clearance he will accept and the days on which he wants to exhibit the picture. The distributor-defendant may reject all offers, but if it accepts any, it must grant the license on the run bid to the "highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to a licensor" (R. 3697).

These provisions give the distributor-defendants every opportunity to favor the large affiliated theatres. They can so combine the length-of-run and rental terms that the offer would be attractive only to a major's theatre. Moreover, it is highly unlikely that any two exhibitors would submit bids specifying the same exhibition dates, clearance and rental basis. The distributors have the authority to compare the imponderables listed in the decree and decide which of the bids is most desirable. The mere comparison of a flat rental bid with one specifying a percentage of gross receipts would be a highly discretionary matter. Also the distributors decide who is a "responsible bidder" and whether the bidder has an adequate theatre (R. 3697). With all of these decisions left to the distributor-defendants and with their powerful incentive to favor the large affiliated theatres, the independent is hardly in any better position than formerly to obtain pictures.

It becomes apparent, therefore, that the competitive bidding system will not introduce new independent competition into either the exhibition or the distribution field, will not even bring about competition among the defendants themselves, and as a result will do nothing to disturb the restrictive pattern of distribution and price-fixing created by the unlawful conspiracy.

In the many towns in which one or more of the defendants own all of the theatres or all first-run theatres, the situation will go on precisely the same as before. In those towns, there is no independent in a position to invoke the competitive bidding system. The decree expressly provides that operation of the system is not required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in which no offer is made within 15 days after a picture is offered for bidding. With no independent to bid, there is no reason to assume that any of the majors' theatres will bid. Evidence introduced at the trial concerning the distribution of the defendants' pictures in the 92 cities of over 100,000 demonstrated that the pattern of first-run distribution among the majors' theatres remained virtually the same during the period 1936–37 to 1943–44. The defendants' witness Rogers, sales manager of Loew's, conceded that there was no competition among the majors' theatres in licensing the pictures he sold (R. 410, 572). No evidence was introduced by defendants to prove that any such competition among the majors' theatres existed. And, of course, any such competition would have been incompatible with the defendants' general conspiracy. It is apparent, therefore, that in such cities the major defendants would continue to get the same pictures and runs as they did under the conspiracy and market them at the same prices.

The defendants are permitted also to extend whatever clearance "is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted." Since by the very terms of the decree the reasonableness of clearance is to be measured by the protection required by the exhibitor, it follows that the length of clearance must depend on the amount of rental paid. The higher the rental paid by the exhibitor the greater is his need for protection over a subsequent run. The net effect of the clearance restriction, therefore, is that the exhibitor gets the amount of clearance it pays for. Consequently, the defendants' theatres can continue with substantially, if not precisely, the same clearance they formerly had.

While the decree prohibits price-fixing in the license agreements, clearance largely controls the ability to charge higher prices. By virtue of the clearance provision, therefore, the defendants will be permitted to maintain their prices as before. They cannot by their license agreements control the prices of independent subsequent-run houses, but, again, the possibility of competition from this source can be regulated through clearance provisions. If the subsequent-run houses reduce prices, the distributors can justify an increase in prior-run clearance, which would of course largely dissuade any independent from taking such action.

The competitive bidding system is almost equally ineffective in the event an independent attempts to enter a town in which the defendants now own all theatres or all first-run theatres, or in a town in which there already is some minor independent competition. In such cases, the independent can invoke the competitive bidding system and at least force the defendants to go through the formality of bidding. But, undoubtedly, the majors will continue to do business with the same distributors as before and simply out-bid the independent, thereby preventing him from getting any pictures, or at least any more than he formerly had. Having the pictures, the major defendants can continue with their clearance over subsequent runs and maintain the same pattern of protection and price control as was created by the conspiracy.

It is for these very reasons that those the decree was intended to benefit oppose the competitive bidding system. The independent exhibitors have consistently objected that it will give them no relief because of the affiliated theatres' tremendous advantage in financial resources and their privilege of exhibiting their own pictures in their own theatres on any terms they please (R. 2870–2872). The principal independent producers have objected that the decree will not help them because their access to the important segment of the market represented by the affiliated theatres will continue to be controlled by their competitors (Brief for Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, pp. 16–21), and further that the decree actually adds injury by subjecting them to the same prohibitions as the defendants (since they are compelled by economic necessity to distribute through the defendants), while at the same time leaving the defendants free of those prohibitions in the operation of their own theatres (Id. at pp. 31–33). Even the non-exhibitor defendants contend that the decree puts them at a competitive disadvantage with the majors because they must put up all of their pictures for competitive bidding, while the majors have an assured outlet in their own houses in many important cities (Columbia Brief, pp. 66–68).

B. THE COMPETITIVE BIDDING SYSTEM IS UNWORKABLE

We further submit that, even if the substantive provisions of the competitive bidding system were effective to eliminate the evils found by the lower court, it would not be an adequate remedy because no adequate method for enforcement of this regulatory system either exists or is in prospect. All the disputes arising anywhere in the United States over the reasonableness of clearance, the fairness of distributors' offers, and the distributors' decisions on the best bid, the responsibility of the bidder and the adequacy of theatres, can be settled only in the Southern District of New York by way of contempt proceedings instituted by the Department of Justice. Neither the Department nor the court could handle all of the controversies that might arise if even a fair number of independents chose to pursue this remedy. The delays in decisions on such disputes obviously would be interminable. And even then the decisions would cover only the narrow issues of the individual controversies before the court and would not govern future conduct, except possibly in the case of controversies over the adequacy of theatres. Consequently, the independent would be required to come to the Department of Justice each time he thought he was being unfairly treated. In many cases moreover, the independent would be reluctant to follow this procedure for fear of antagonizing the distributors on whom he is dependent for supply. As this court said in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 190, "There is no reason why the protection of the public interest should depend solely on that somewhat cumbersome procedure when another effective one is available."

By this decree the district court has assumed the burden of regulating the day-by-day business activities of over 18,000 theatres located throughout the United States. The court recognized that its decree would hardly be workable without the aid of an arbitration system which it was not within its power to order. In its opinion, the court stated that the decree should provide for arbitration for all parties who would consent to such a system (R. 3562). And in its memorandum accompanying its decree it said: "We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree" (R. 3702).

There is, however, no chance for such a system. The refusal of the three non-exhibitor defendants to agree to the 1940 consent decree had demonstrated beyond any doubt that they were not prepared to submit to regulation of their trade practices in order that the industry's antitrust problems might be solved without disturbing the dominating position of their theatre owning competitors. They reiterated this refusal at the hearings preceding the entry of the judgment here under review. The Government's experience under the consent decree had convinced it that a permanent solution of the problem posed by this suit was not possible by consent. That was, of course, the basic reason for this trial.

C. EXTENSIVE EXPERIENCE SHOWS THAT NO JUDGMENT WHICH MERELY REGULATES DEFENDANTS' TRADE PRACTICES CAN GIVE ADEQUATE RELIEF

In no other industry have the dominant members been so often involved in antitrust litigation, so frequently found to have violated the Sherman Act, and so often subjected to injunctive relief against their trade practices.[2] This extensive past experience, involving both judicial and administrative proceedings, demonstrates with the certainty of a laboratory experiment that mere regulation of trade practices will not eliminate unreasonable restraints in this industry. It establishes that such restraints are inherent in the control of the five principal theatre circuits by

[2] No specific reference will be made to pending antitrust proceedings against these defendants by private persons, of which there are many. A prospectus filed by Loew in July of 1947 with the Securities and Exchange Commission recites at p. 13:

"There are approximately 40 such private Anti-Trust suits now pending in which the Company and/or its subsidiaries are among the defendants. In such suits, with few exceptions, all the other so-called major distributors in the industry are also party defendants. In 2 of said actions only equitable relief by way of injunction or otherwise is sought. Most of these suits are for treble damages with or without injunctive relief. * * * This type of litigation is common to the industry." [Italics supplied.]

A similar statement appears in a prospectus of May 1947, filed by Fox with the Commission. To the same effect are Universal Prospectus of March 1944, p. 24 (46 suits); Fox Prospectus of July 1943, p. 35 (49 suits); Columbia Prospectus of November 1935, pp. 6–7 (36 suits); RKO Prospectus of June 1944, p. 30–31 (46 suits).

the five principal film distributors and their use of each other's theatres as outlets for their films.

1. Federal Trade Commission.—The initial attempt of the Government to protect independent exhibitors was made in 1921. In that year, the Federal Trade Commission instituted an action against Famous Players-Lasky Corporation (predecessor of the defendant Paramount), Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky, its principal executives, and a number of theatre chains in which they had acquired substantial financial interests. After extended hearings, the Commission, on July 9, 1927, entered an order against Zukor, Lasky, and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The corporation and its two principal officers were ordered to cease and desist from (1) a general conspiracy to restrain trade in motion pictures as set forth in the findings, (2) employing block-booking in renting films to exhibitors, and (3) acquiring or threatening to acquire theatres with the purpose or effect of coercing exhibitors to play films produced or distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.[4] The conspiracy prohibited by paragraph 1 of the [4] The following accurate prophesy of the ultimate result of such vertical integration appeared in an issue of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, devoted to The Motion Picture, published in November 1926, Vol. CXXVIII, No. 217:

"The tendency toward consolidations and elimination of weaker concerns continues, and with it a tremendous growth order was one in which the respondents had attempted to dominate the entire industry by first merging a group of film producers with the dominant film distributing corporation and then acquiring control of a series of theatre operating chains which were largely engaged in the operation of first run theatres."

The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit declined to grant the Commission's petition to enforce the block-booking provision in the Commission's order in the absence of a of the chain theatre movement, which was given important impetus by the First National combine and the Famous Players-Lasky counter movement. Every important producer-distributor combination is seeking to extend theatre controls and the investment of the motion picture in the theatre plant is climbing to new high totals. The exhibitor, the retailer chains, are eventually to control the production-distribution machinery, but in the process the masters of production-distribution are taking control of exhibition" (pp. 18–19).

In the November 1947 issue of the Annals, again entirely devoted to the motion picture industry, Charles Skouras, president of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation noted that "some 2,700 theatres account for 55 to 60 percent of the revenue received by the motion picture producers" (p. 28), and Donald Nelson, president of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, noted that (p. 56);

"The independents were forced to the painful realization that, no matter how well their pictures were made, they were not getting a fair chance to place them before the public. By a system of cross-licensing, under which one major studio would agree to show the pictures of another in theatres under its ownership or control, and by other trade methods which the Federal court has since held illegal, the large Hollywood

"finding that the respondent combined with other large producers for the purpose of hindering those outside the large combination". Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Fdmous-Lasky Corporation, 57 F. 2d 152, 157. But that finding has been supplied by the court below and its absence in the Paramount Famous-Lasky case hardly justified Paramount's disregard of the unlitigated provisions of the Commission's order which both preceded and followed this decision. The Commission found that Paramount had interests in only 368 theatres in 1926 (11 F. T. C. 187, 209), whereas 20 years later it was in possession of approximately 1,400 such interests (Fdg. 118, R. 3684). These theatres were admittedly acquired for the purpose of relieving Paramount of the necessity of competing with other distributors in licensing its films. Even if it be assumed that the means of acquisition were combines managed to acquire a monopolistic control over a vast part of the industry."

The vertically integrated combinations' monopoly of the industry is described in detail at pp. 125–136 of this issue of the Annals.

[5] The Commission found that first run theatres at that time yielded about 50 percent of the total film rental earned by any particular film. The record in this case shows that the restrictive practices used to channel revenue into first run theatres were being so successfully used 20 years later, that as much as 80 or 90 percent of the total film rental earned in large cities on a first-class picture comes from the first run theatres. See App. pp. 295–296.

different from those prohibited by the Commission's order, it seems clear that their trade restraining purpose was precisely the same.

In May 1925, the Federal Trade Commission instituted two proceedings charging West Coast Theatres, Inc. (which, with its subsidiaries, constituted a vertically integrated combination) and others with preventing independents from securing any films or securing films until they had lost their exhibition value (12 F. T. C. 383, 436). In August of that year, Fox acquired an interest in West Coast Theatres, Inc. (Ex. 45, R. 175). In May of 1929, the Commission made elaborate findings of restraints and monopolization, including the following (12 F. T. C., pp. 470, 480):

> Paragraph Thirteen. By purchase and construction of theatres, by contracts with competitors eliminating competition, by making partnerships with competitors, respondents West Coast Theatres, Inc., and West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, have steadily progressed from the time of the organization of the former to the time of the hearing in this proceeding toward domination of the motion picture theatre field in California. * * *
> Paragraph Twenty-One. Because of extensive ownership and control of theatres in California by respondents, and because of common interests of respondents West Coast Theatres, Inc., and West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, with some of the producers and/or distributors doing business in California, respondents exert and have exerted great influence and power over the business of leasing motion picture films in that territory. Such power places these respondents in position either to give a producer and/or distributor a satisfactory business in the State of California, or to make it extremely difficult for the producer to find a satisfactory market in that territory for his motion picture films. Such influence and power has been used by respondents West Coast Theatres, Inc., West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, and T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, Inc., to prevent their competitors from securing films for their theatres which were desired by respondents, and to force producers and/or distributors by threats of boycott of their films, to refuse to lease films to their competitors, who had been customers of said producers and/or distributors for a long time, in certain cities and towns, and give said films to respondents for their theatres in said cities and towns.

The Commission ordered the respondents to cease and desist from interfering by the means theretofore used with the sale or lease of films to independent exhibitors (12 F. T. C. at pp. 433, 488). Subsequent litigation concerning similar practices by these respondents is described in the ensuing paragraphs of this brief.[6]

2. Government Sherman Act suits.—Local actions against theatre circuits on the West Coast and in Chicago, in which the defendants here or their predecessors were joined, were instituted by the Government in 1928. United States v. West Coast Theatres, Inc., S. D. Calif.;[7] United States v. Balaban & Katz Corporation, N. D. Ill.[8] The West Coast actions concerned the same circuit as was involved in the 1925 Federal Trade Commission proceedings mentioned above. Criminal informations, indictments, and petitions in equity were filed; the essence of the charges in all was that the defendants had conspired to exclude independent exhibitors from contracting for films on early runs. The ensuing proceedings were protracted and, in California, for example, during the pendency of the proceedings, a uniform zoning and clearance schedule was adopted by the defendants and others, giving rise to a new suit

[6] As shown by the findings here, maximum interference with the independents' right to secure films was ultimately achieved through copyright license restrictions rather than by a sale or lease of any film. Supra, pp. 27–29 and App. pp. 18–45.

[7] Criminal information (No. 4902–M) filed September 28, 1928; indictment (No. 9663) filed April 19, 1929; petition in equity (S–10–C) filed August 21, 1930; petition in equity (Y–38–H) filed November 16, 1932; contempt information (No. 14048–C) filed August 31, 1939.

in equity charging the illegality of such a schedule. The years passed, consent decrees were entered, and contempt proceedings were brought, but little more can be said to have been accomplished than an ultimate supersedure of those decrees by the 1940 consent decree entered in the instant case.[9] For the California and Chicago courts had sought mainly to control the form of agreement used to accomplish an unlawful result, only to be met by new and different forms which enabled the defendants to attain the same ends.

Suits against the defendants or their predecessors involving their nation-wide distribution activities bore little more fruit. Two such suits were instituted by the Government in April 1928. In one of these, it was charged that the defendants had agreed upon a uniform licensing contract and had concertedly refused to license pictures to independent exhibitors who refused to execute the agreement. This standard form contract provided for the submission of any dispute which might arise under the contract to a board of arbitration, in the selection of which the distributors had a dominant voice. In the other suit, the defendants were charged with concertedly refusing to license pictures to independent purchasers of motion-picture theatres who refused to assume contracts for films entered into by the previous owners of the theatres. Each of these restrictive provisions was administered through local Film Boards of Trade. The Government prevailed in both of these suits. Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30; United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., 282 U. S. 44.

The local Film Boards of Trade which administered the arbitration and assumption of contract provisions found unlawful in those cases also established uniform clearance schedules. This latter phase of their activity was subsequently disclosed in Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, 60 F. 2d 538 (D. Neb.), which found the uniform clearance schedule there involved to be a violation of the Sherman Act. That schedule was the product of express agreement among the distributors and only that mode of establishing such schedules was enjoined. The terms of that schedule were somewhat more favorable to the independent theatres in Omaha than the schedules in force there at the time this suit was tried, which were established by separate express agreements between the first run exhibitor, a Paramount affiliate, and the distributor defendants.[10]

On December 15, 1936, the Government filed a suit at Dallas, Texas, against Paramount, a large theatre circuit affiliated with it, and against the other seven distributor-defendants here. It circuit in subsequent-run situations from exhibiting at an admission price of less than 25 cents pictures which had been shown in the circuit's first-run theatres at a 40-cent admission price. The Government also charged that they had made agreements which provided that any feature shown first-run in the circuit's theatres with an admission price of 40 cents or more could not be shown on a double feature bill in a subsequent run theatre. The district court found that these restrictions had injured the business of the independent subsequent run houses and adversely affected the public in these areas by increasing admission prices at their theatres, most of which had been accustomed to charging 15 cents instead of 25 cents (United States v. Interstate Circuit, 20 F. Supp. 868 (N. D. Tex.)). It entered a decree enjoining each of the distributor defendants from making any agreements with the exhibitor defendants which granted the restrictions referred to above. This Court, on appeal, held the restraints involved illegal and affirmed the district court's decree. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208.

The clearance granted by Fox (Ex. 42, Omaha; R. 173) and Loew (Ex. 57–28; R. 185) in first-run Omaha contracts with Tri-States for the same season was identical with that stated above except that the clearance over Plattsmouth, Nebr., was 14 days instead of 28 for each of these distributors and neither of them included the towns of Glenwood and Logan, Iowa, in their schedules.

In the instant case, the Government introduced in evidence the contract between Universal and Interstate Circuit found illegal in the Interstate case (Ex. 198, App. 86), together with the 1941–1944 franchise contract between Universal and Interstate Circuit (Ex. 261, App. 50–57). The latter agreement omitted the prohibited clearance restrictions, but gave the circuit just as many prior runs and a greater control over availability of Universal films to its competitors than it had before. That contract established a blanket weekly rental of $5,000 for all features, shorts, serials and news used on all runs. The amount of the rental was subject to "review and revision" in accordance with actual performance, and the net effect of the deal was simply to make Interstate Circuit the "chosen instrument" of the distributor for exploiting this territory on a virtual partnership basis.

Despite the interdiction of the Interstate and Perelman[11] cases against restrictions upon double featuring, Columbia (Ex. 139, R. 228), Paramount (Ex. 82, R. 196), Fox (Ex. 42, R. 173), [11] In 1938, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals found the five major defendants guilty of combining to prevent independent theatre operators in Philadelphia from playing double features. Vitagraph, Inc. v. Perelman, 95 F. 2d 142, certiorari denied, 305 U. S. 610. This opinion, as well as that of the trial court, 9 F. Supp. 729 (E. D. Pa.), contains a valuable analysis of the defendants' tendency to present a united front against independent competition.

RKO (Ex. 94, R. 203), Universal (Ex. 365, R. 346), and Warner (Exs. 126–128, R. 221–222) have been giving the distributor-exhibitor theatres in Cleveland, Ohio, a clearance over subsequent runs graduated in length according to the admission price and double feature policy of the latter. For instance, Paramount's clearance in 1943–44 in Cleveland was 35 days over subsequent run single bill theatres and 63 days over subsequent run double bill theatres. Other examples of this sort of restriction taken from answers to interrogatories are: Universal (Ex. 365, R. 346); RKO in Sioux City, Iowa (Ex. 94, R. 203); Fox in Lakewood, Ohio (Ex. 42, R. 173); Paramount in Fort Worth, Texas (Ex. 82, R .196).

3. NRA Code and 1940 consent decree.—The regulation of trade practices as a method of eliminating restraints from the industry and affording independents and the public alike the protection of the Sherman Act does not become more effective when implemented by a nation-wide administrative enforcement system. That we believe is amply demonstrated by the experience under the NRA and the 1940 consent decree. The Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry (NRA Code No. 124) became effective on December 7, 1933, and expired in May 1935. This Code attempted to regulate only unfair trade practices. To administer the Code, two sets of local boards were set up throughout the country: Local Clearance and Zoning Boards, which had authority to establish uniform schedules fixing the playing positions of all theatres in local competitive areas, and Local Grievance Boards, which heard unfair practice complaints of individual exhibitors. While these boards heard a substantial number of complaints, the most that can be said of their decisions is that they tended to palliate the effects of discriminations implicit in continued control of large theatre circuits by film distributors.[12] The Boards' membership generally consisted of representatives of distributors, first run exhibitors, and later run exhibitors, and, since the first run exhibitors were more often than not affiliates of the distributors, it is not surprising that patterns of discrimination are found in the uniform clearance and zoning schedules established pursuant to NRA authority. That these discriminatory patterns still persist is pointed out in a consent decree Appeal Board decision of 1944 (App. 428, 430).

While the consent decree entered in this case in 1940 established an efficient and impartial arbitration system, even its effect has been merely to mitigate the discriminations inherent in the major defendants' ownership of theatres. See App. pp. xi, xii, 403–446. The trial court's finding that the Government was entitled to new affirmative relief is itself a finding that the consent decree was inadequate to end the violations found. And private antitrust litigation against the defendants during the period of operation of the consent decree confirms this conclusion.

4. Private Sherman Act suits.—During the foregoing period of regulation under the consent decree, all of the distributor defendants have been found guilty in private antitrust suits of combining in a united front against independent exhibitors who sought to compete with them. In Chicago, all of the major defendants were found guilty of jointly maintaining a discriminatory admission price, run and clearance structure in Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U. S. 251; 162 F. 2d 520, certiorari denied November 10, 1947, No. 394, this Term. The injunction granted by the district court prohibits Paramount from playing its own films in the Balaban & Katz (98% owned by Paramount) first-run theatres in downtown Chicago for more than two successive weeks. These were the same theatres that were involved in the Master's findings, supra, p. 79, note 9. In 1945, all of the defendants here were found guilty of illegally protecting Warner's first-run monopoly in Philadelphia in Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3). Pursuant to this decision, the district court entered an injunction compelling Warner to extend to the complainant the right to bid for first-run exhibition of Warner films in Philadelphia, although Warner operates first-run theatres there. The most recent finding of Sherman Act violation by these defendants is that of Theatre Investment Co. v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 72 F. Supp. 650 (W. D. Wash.), decided in 1947, where the court found all of the distributor defendants here and a circuit affiliated with Fox guilty of restricting independent theatre competition in Seattle, Washington. While these private Sherman Act suits have given some relief to the particular complainants there involved, they cannot, of course, solve the problem posed here of restoring and protecting competition for the benefit of the public. All independents, including these complainants, are still faced with the ever-recurring discriminations not anticipated by their injunctions which are inherent in the integrated structure of the major defendants.

5. Conclusion.—The history above set out teaches that the ultimate solution to the problems raised by the defendants' pervasive economic power over the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures is not to be found in a new regulatory scheme. The only appropriate relief in this case at this time is relief which will terminate this conspiracy for all time and will open to future competition a film market long closed to such competition by the defendants' unlawful conduct.

In now offering its competitive bidding system as a substitute for divorcement, the court's opinion suggests that, if this system fails to work after a trial period, divorcement may still be decreed (R. 3551). But the district court was not writing on a clean slate. If its judgment offered real hope of solving any of the basic problems that its opinion raises, this would be a welcome experiment. But the impossibility of effective administration, the opposition of those it is intended to benefit, and its resemblance in impact and method to past systems of regulation which have already been tried and found wanting, deprives the lower Court's system of any value, even as a tentative approach to solving these problems. Its system of regulation would therefore have to be rejected even if there were no judicial precedents for dealing with these problems by the remedies sought by the Government. The following argument will show that both prohibition of cross licensing among the major defendants and ultimate divestiture of their theatres are now required to open the domestic film market to competition at both the exhibition and distribution levels. We shall also show that such relief is the kind held appropriate by decisions of this Court. This Court has never sanctioned mere regulation of a vertical combination which has persistently abused its continuing power to discriminate against independents.

II

The district court should have ordered ultimate divorcement of the distribution and production businesses of the major defendants from their theatre operations by divestiture of their theatre holdings

A. EACH INTEGRATED VERTICAL COMBINATION BETWEEN A MAJOR DEFENDANT'S PRODUCING AND DISTRIBUTING BUSINESS AND ITS AFFILIATED THEATRES CONSTITUTES A RESTRAINT AND A MONOPOLIZATION OF AN APPRECIABLE SEGMENT OF TRADE WHICH CAN BE REMEDIED ONLY BY DIVORCEMENT

The Government has consistently maintained that each integrated combination between a major distributor and its affiliated theatres constitutes a restraint and a monopolization of an appreciable segment of trade in violation of both Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and that this amounts to a continuing unlawful condition which can be corrected only by theatre divestiture. The opinion of the trial court is silent with respect to this point, except for the statement that (R. 3555): "The percentage of pictures on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatres would be relatively small and in nowise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition." The findings of fact and conclusions of law add nothing explicit in this connection.

It is not our contention that each major defendant has a national monopoly of distribution, or that its film product alone would give its theatres a national monopoly of exhibition. We contend that each vertical affiliation between a major distributor and its theatres necessarily results in a continuing restraint and monopolization with respect to that important segment of trade represented by the pictures it distributes to its own theatres.

Most of the major defendants' vast theatre holdings were acquired through purchase of assets or stock in, or merger with, independent theatre enterprises (Fdgs. 8, 21, 28–30, 42; R. 3662, 3664, 3665, 3667). The trial court specifically found that Paramount's theatre interests were acquired "so that it might assure itself of outlets for Paramount productions" (Fdg. 8, R. 3662). It is undisputed in the record that the other four major defendants also integrated theatre operations with film distribution in order to have non-competitive market outlets for their films. It is clear, therefore, that such integrations were in no sense an effort to meet an expanding business demand resulting from superior skill in film production or distribution. They were in each case a deliberate creation of a market control which would assure them of retail outlets regardless of the merits of their product.

The necessary consequence of these several affiliations is arbitrarily to tie the pictures of each major defendant to its own theatres, and conversely to tie those theatres arbitrarily to the pictures of the major defendant. Each vertical relationship thus has two serious trade-restraining consequences. First, to the extent that the motion picture requirements of each group of affiliated theatres are satisfied by the pictures of its distributor, all other distributors are excluded from that important segment of the market. Second, wherever a distributor has theatres, the other exhibitors are excluded from the opportunity of licensing the exclusive runs reserved for the distributor's own theatres. As the defendants' witness Rathvon, president of RKO, frankly stated with reference to his company's ownership of key first-run theatres:

> * * * if you have got an unsuccessful picture, your first-run outlets that you control let it get into the flow of distribution * * * it gives you a chance to get some revenue back because you forced it into the flow of distribution (R. 1622).

This Court has consistently held that combinations vertically integrated to secure arbitrary market control violate the Sherman Act. United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255; United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26;[1] Cf. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218. They constitute an unreasonable restraint, an attempt to monopolize, and an actual monopoliza-tion of a part of trade because "the mere existence of such a combination and the power acquired" thereby "constitute a menace to, and a restraint upon, that freedom of commerce which Congress intended to recognize and protect, and which the public is entitled to have protected." United States v. Reading Co., supra, at p. 58.

The Lehigh Valley case is almost precisely like the instant one. There, several railroads competed for the business of transporting coal from certain Pennsylvania anthracite mines to the eastern markets. The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company entered upon a policy of acquiring coal lands tributary to its lines by purchasing and leasing such lands, and by acquiring stock in corporations owning such lands. It organized a coal company to hold title to the acquired coal lands and stock. Later it organized a sales company to act as selling agent for the coal company. At the time the suit was brought, the railroad company had gained control of the transportation and sale of most of the coal derived from lands tributary to its lines. This amounted to about 20 percent of all anthracite coal produced, and the coal mined by the railroad company and its subsidiaries was something less than that. The largest single purchase, that of Cox Brothers, resulted in discontinuing the latter's connections with the other carriers and exclusive carriage of its coal by the Lehigh. This Court held that the railroad's deliberate purchase of the coal lands for the purpose of arbitrarily controlling the transportation and sale of coal derived from those lands amounted to a restraint of trade, an attempt to monopolize and an actual monopolization of a part of the transportation and sale of anthracite coal in violation of the Sherman Act. It directed divorcement of the railroad company, the coal company and the sales company so that each would be entirely independent of the others. The railroad company and its coal producing and selling subsidiaries had no monopoly of the transportation or sale of all anthracite coal, and this Court did not mention the effect upon the national coal market of the railroad company's control of 20 percent of all anthracite coal produced. The vertical combination was held unlawful because the railroad's acquisitions of coal lands were for the purpose of eliminating competition for the transportation of coal mined from those lands, and this amounted to a restraint and a monopolization of an appreciable segment of commerce. The continuing inducement to rate discrimination provided by such a combination was thought to have serious enough consequences to warrant divestiture relief, even though the Interstate Commerce Commission had continuing power to control such discrimination by appropriate regulatory action.

The illegality of the integrated vertical combinations in the case at bar is further confirmed by the numerous decisions of this Court condemning similar restraints when accomplished by a conspiracy between two or more parties. Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, 18–19, and cases cited; Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291. Since the Sherman Act looks to substance rather than form (United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 227), restraints which are unlawful when accomplished by a horizontal conspiracy must be equally unlawful when they follow as a natural consequence of a vertically integrated combination. Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 376–377. To hold otherwise would be to emasculate the Act and make of it an inducement to integrated combinations with their serious tendencies to monopoly.

It would be no defense even if the trade restrained and monopolized by each of the vertical combinations were small in relation to the entire amount of commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. "The Sherman Act is concerned with more than the large, nation-wide obstacles in the channels of interstate trade. It is designed to sweep away all appreciable obstructions so that the statutory policy of free trade might be effectively achieved." United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 226; Cf. United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255.

But here the trade restrained by each is substantial. A large and important part of the pictures exhibited by any group of affiliated theatres comes from its affiliated distributor, and substantially all of the distributor's pictures are taken by its affiliated theatres wherever it has such theatres. During the 1943–44 season, RKO distributed 38 features; Fox and Loew, 33 each; Paramount, 31; and Warner, 19. The features distributed by these five majors aggregated 154 of a total of 260 (excluding "Westerns") distributed by the eight distributor-defendants, and a total of 335 distributed by all national distributors (Fdg. 99, R. 3677). In 1945, Paramount had interests in 1,395 theatres; Fox, 836; Warner, 501; Loew, 135; and RKO, 109 (Fdg. 118, R. 3684). During the 1943–1944 season, theatres affiliated with Fox paid to it, in round numbers, $5,000,000 out of total film rental payments of $25,000,000. Comparable figures for the other major defendants are: Loew, $9,000,000 out of $20,000,000; Paramount, $14,000,000 out of $50,000,000; RKO, $4,000,000 out of $13,000,000; Warner, $6,000,000 out of $23,000,000 (Ex. 424, App. pp. 256–257).[10] Clearly each vertical relationship results in a restraint and a monopolization of an "appreciable segment" of the market. The market thus closed to competition is much greater than that involved in the Yellow Cab case (replacements of 5,000 taxicabs in four cities) and in International Salt Company, Inc. v. United States, No. 46, this Term (119,000 tons of salt worth $500,000).

[10] The number of corporations through which the theatres affiliated with each major defendant are held is: Fox, 235; Loew, 81; Paramount, 378; RKO, 73; and Warner, 33. The number in which each has a direct or indirect stock interest of 51% or more is Fox, 200; Loew, 50; Paramount, 179; RKO, 43; and Warner, 23. The number in which each has an interest of 50% is: Fox, 10; Loew, 21; Paramount, 128; RKO, 10; and Warner, 10. A detailed statement of these holdings appears at App. pp. 446–462.

The fact that defendants' pictures are copyrighted provides no defense. It is true that under the Copyright Act the copyright owner has the right to exhibit its own pictures and to prevent their exhibition by others, but the Act gives no one any special privilege in the general operation of motion-picture theatres. The judgment here expressly sanctions the making of license agreements by the major defendants which contain every form of discrimination condemned in the opinion and findings, provided only that the license is for the exhibition of films distributed by it in a theatre or theatres in which it owns a direct or indirect interest of 95% or more (R. 3700). As noted above the unreasonable restraint of trade sanctioned by this provision of the judgment alone is substantial in extent. The court rested its sanction of clearance agreements between the defendants and others, which are intended to give "reasonable" protection to the licensee against competition from another theatre operator (R. 3530–3531), upon an analogy between them and a valid common law agreement of the seller to protect the good-will of a going business by an agreement not to compete with the buyer for a reasonably limited length of time in a reasonably limited area. But no such analogy can sustain the unlimited restrictions which the judgment allows these distributors to incorporate in their licenses with their 95% owned theatres. The trial court therefore apparently assumed that such a privilege was granted by the Copyright Act.

Its error becomes apparent upon a consideration of Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, the most recent case discussing the extent to which the Copyright Act provides a defense against a charge of Sherman Act violation. If Paramount now adds a forty-five per cent stock interest in Interstate Circuit to the fifty percent it presently has and had when that decision was made, it could in its license agreements with this affiliated circuit incorporate much the same clearance restrictions that were there found to violate the Sherman Act, without liability for contempt of the judgment entered here.[2] Paramount would then, the court below apparently assumed, merely be engaged in the exhibition of its own copyrighted films, a privilege which the Copyright Act expressly grants to it. This assumption not only contradicts the existence of the separate corporate entities respectively employed by all of the major defendants in carrying on their distribution and exhibition businesses (see App. pp. 446–462), but also ignores the diverse functions of these entities and the function of the theatres themselves.

[2] Paramount could not now include a minimum admission price restriction in its licenses with Interstate's competitors. It could still agree with Interstate that if an independent competitor charged less than 25¢ admission, Paramount would not serve the independent with films until long after the films had played at an Interstate theatre. Paramount could also accomplish the same result without any agreement simply by not making prints available promptly to such competitors.

As the court below found, none of these theatres except for a limited number in the very largest cities could operate with the films of only one distributor (Fdg. 151, R. 3689). Neither the theatres of the defendants nor the theatres competing with them are an outlet for but a single distributor's films. These theatres compete in making available for the public all the films that each can profitably license from any distributor, and it was that competition in selling films to the public that was unlawfully suppressed in the Interstate Circuit case and here. Such suppression in Interstate Circuit impaired the ability of the independent to compete as a theatre owner and unlawfully protected Paramount as a 50% theatre owner. The restriction also gave Paramount additional revenue as a film distributor, but this Court flatly rejected the increase in film rental as a justification for the suppression of theatre operating competition which also resulted. The case was therefore a clear holding that the Copyright Act affords no sanction for restrictions which suppress theatre operating competition simply because they are the most effective means of exploiting a copyright.

The Copyright Act gives a film distributor no more right to suppress competition among theatre owners by clearance agreements than it sanctions such a suppression by agreements to maintain a stated price. The distributors' assumption that they had a legal right to control price competition between theatres rested upon the false premise that they had a specially protected interest in the gross receipts of all theatres which exhibited their films, although they furnished only one part of the entertainment sold.

A motion-picture patron pays an admission fee for the privilege of sitting in a theatre for a period of time during which he may see one feature film, a newsreel, and a short subject, or two features, or any combination of feature films and other forms of entertainment which the theatre management sees fit to offer. Depending on his taste and opportunities, the patron may choose a comfortable seat in an air-conditioned theatre with a poor picture to look at, or a less attractive theatre from a physical standpoint with superior entertainment on the screen. In any event, the admission price he pays does not necessarily reflect the quality of the entertainment offered him by any particular film which appears on the program.

Everyone who contributes to this entertainment must, of course, look to the payment from the patron as the ultimate source of his reward for his patricular contribution. The maker of the projection equipment, the owner of the theatre building, the operator of the theatre, the producers of the films exhibited, the makers of the technical devices, and the possessors of the dramatic and other talent employed in their production, all have a similar stake in seeing that the patron pays the highest price consistent with maximum attendance, for the privilege of witnessing the ultimate entertainment to which they all contribute. Suppression of price competition among theatres may well be the most effective method of securing a maximum financial return for all of them, but a distributor's film copyright no more justifies the making of restrictive agreements which accomplish that result than patents possessed by other contributors to the entertainment world. The limits of the copyright or patent grant clearly are exceeded by license restrictions which control the terms on which not merely the licensors' product but related entertainment is sold to the public. Mercoid Corp v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 666.

There is thus no sanction in the Copyright Act for the use of theatres to suppress competition, regardless of whether they are wholly or partially owned by a film distributor. The question presented by the lower court's sanction of restrictive agreements made by a defendant with a theatre operating corporation in which it has or may acquire control of 95% or more must therefore be determined by the application of Sherman Act principles. Control of another corporation by a Sherman Act defendant has never been thought to justify the making of agreements between them which unreasonably restrict the competition of others. General Motors v. United States, 121 F. 2d 376 (C. C. A. 7), certiorari denied, 314 U. S. 618. While such control may in practical effect make the use of such an agreement wholly unnecessary to accomplish the restraint desired, such control per se could never give a lawful sanction to such agreements where the parties deemed their use desirable or necessary.[a]

Since such agreements are in fact wholly unnecessary to accomplish the trade restraining purposes of the major defendants, any judgment which leaves them in control of their theatres sanctions the continued restraint of trade implicit in such ownership. But in view of the corporate structure of these combinations, whereby theatre owning and operating functions are performed by corporate entities separate from those engaged in production and distribution, the failure to divorce the theatre corporations from the others sanctions a continuing conspiracy among each group of affiliated corporations which is itself a continuing violation of Section 1 of the Act.

[a] As noted at p. 87, supra, federal courts in private antitrust litigation involving similar violations by these defendants have enjoined distributors owning interests of 95% or more in certain theatres from discriminating in favor of those theatres in licensing films to them.

Even if each major defendant is regarded as a single trader, it is in no different position from a manufacturer of any article, copyrighted or not. Any manufacturer has the right to use his own product in his own outlets, so long as he does not use the advantage resulting from integration to restrain unreasonably the competition of others or to monopolize. But no manufacturer, whether of a copyrighted or an uncopyrighted article, has the right deliberately to acquire control of a particular market for his product when the purpose or necessary effect is to exclude others from an important segment of the market. The restraint on competition resulting from such integrations is particularly serious where, as here, there are only a few distributors, there are and can be only a limited number of theatres in any one competitive area, a large investment is required for new entrants into the exhibition field, and the downtown areas of large cities are built up so that it is difficult to secure adequate sites for new theatres. The continuing power thus acquired to exclude competition in the sale and purchase of pictures is unlawful because it "was not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management, but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control." United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57; United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 227–228.

Nor does it make any difference that one of the reasons for the theatre acquisitions was that the actions of others were making it difficult for defendants to market their films. If others were violating the antitrust laws, that is no justification for defendants doing likewise. Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, 312 U. S. 457, 467–468; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 188. And if others were securing an advantage over defendants by means of honest competition, defendants can not combat that advantage with unlawful conduct. The law requires that success in the market be attained by competition, not combination.

It can not be said that the Government is entitled to no relief against these vertical combinations because they are stale, most of them having been effected between 1919 and 1930. Cf. United States v. U. S. Steel Corp., 251 U. S. 417. In the case at bar the restraining effects of the combinations have continued to date, and are more serious now than when the integrations took place. Moreover, the market control provided by these vertical combinations has constantly been abused to the prejudice of independent exhibitors, independent producers, independent distributors and the public. This persistent use of their theatres as a means of arbitrary suppression of the competition of others is itself conclusive evidence of the unlawful purpose of the major defendants' vertical integrations. United States v. Reading Co., supra, pp. 59–60; United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255, 259.

There is no economic justification whatever for the integration here involved. The distributor does not need its own theatres to "sell" its pictures to the patrons. Theatre-goers are attracted by the stars, the directors, the story, the national advertising done by the producers and distributors, and the quality of the picture. The quality of the theatre is an important factor, but there is no reason why independents cannot operate as good theatres as the distributors. Assuming two theatres of equal quality and location, a picture will attract as many patrons in one as in the other. Nor is there any saving to the patron through this integration. The number of steps in distribution is the same. There would seem to be a single reason for such affiliation, amply reflected in this record: a desire for market control with the resulting opportunity to control prices, exclude competition and extract monopoly profits both as a distributor and as an exhibitor.

The lower court's decree permits these vertical relationships to stand and expressly provides that each major defendant may exhibit its pictures in its affiliated theatres on any terms it chooses. The effect of the decree is to put the judicial imprimatur on these integrated combinations and forever remove them and their serious trade-restraining consequences from the prohibitions of the anti-trust laws. We submit that the creation of these combinations was itself a violation of law and that their mere existence constitutes a continuing illegal restraint of trade. Under these circumstances dissolution of these combinations should be ordered. United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255; United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 63; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 354–360; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 78–82; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 186–188; United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, 97; United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U. S. 214; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 189.

There are further compelling reasons for divorcement here. In addition to the serious trade restraints which necessarily flow from the vertical integration of the five major defendants, all of the defendants have for years used these integrated positions to carry out the unlawful conspiracy found by the court below to restrain competition among themselves and with independents in both the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures throughout the United States. These vertical relations have provided the incentive, the power and the very means for accomplishment of that unlawful conspiracy. In view of the demonstrated proclivity of defendants to use that power for such unlawful purposes, divorcement is a necessary measure to eliminate the conspiracy and restore competition to the industry.

The five major defendants have participated in the conspiracy for the dual purpose of eliminating competition in both distribution and exhibition. The three non-exhibitor defendants have participated for the purpose of restricting competition in the distribution field. The conspiracy had been effectuated through license agreements made by all eight defendants as distributors with the five major defendants as exhibitors specifying uniform terms as to runs, prices and clearances. By means of these uniform agreements, all of the defendants have eliminated competition among themselves as distributors. At the same time, they have protected the theatres of the five major defendants from the competition of independents.

So long as the five major defendants are permitted to retain their theatres and the eight distributor-defendants are allowed to enter into license agreements with them, all will have the same incentive and the same power to eliminate competition among themselves and with others. In fact it is inevitable that the exclusionary and price-fixing conspiracy will continue, albeit in a somewhat different form.

When a distributor defendant licenses a major's theatre and agrees on any terms which restrict the competition of others in exhibiting the same films, such agreement constitutes an understanding between those two defendants as distributors, since each major defendant is a distributor as well as an exhibitor. When two or more defendants as distributors license the theatres of a major with the same restrictive provisions, the net result is identical agreements between them restricting the terms on which their films will be made available to other theatres. Thus, precisely the same unreasonable competitive effects as resulted from the general horizontal conspiracy found below may be continued. Since such restrictions control admission prices, the defendants may even continue their price-fixing conspiracy.

Relief short of divorcement also will permit the defendants to retain the fruits of their unlawful conduct. The exclusionary conspiracy on runs was designed to give defendants' theatres a superior position, and the price-fixing and clearance conspiracy had the purpose and effect of protecting that position and the profits of those theatres. As the court below found, the conspiracy was successful. Consequently, the present superior position of the defendants' theatres throughout the important cities of the United States has been built up and maintained by defendants' conspiracy.

The decision of this Court in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, supports divorcement in this case. There this Court approved divestiture of affiliates whose acquisition represented part of the fruits of the conspiracy, saying (p. 189): "Those who violate the Act may not reap the benefits of their violations and avoid an undoing of their unlawful project on the plea of hardship or inconvenience." Further, the Court approved divestiture of affiliations which induced joint action and agreement, saying (pp. 189–90): "Common control was one of the instruments in bringing about unity of purpose and unity of action and in making the conspiracy effective. If that affiliation continues, there will be tempting opportunity for these exhibitors to continue to act in combination against the independents. The proclivity in the past to use that affiliation for an unlawful end warrants effective assurance that no such opportunity will be available in the future."

We also think that United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, while it involves a consent decree, provides strong support for dissolution of these combinations. There, this Court reversed a modification in 1930 of a consent decree entered in 1920. The complaint charged that the five major meat packers had achieved a joint monopoly of the distribution of meat by concerted action with each other, and that they had begun to control the supply of groceries through ownership of refrigerator cars and branch houses. Possession of the latter facilities was alleged to give them such substantial advantages in distribution costs that they could undercut the prices of competitors not possessing the economic advantages of such integration. (286 U. S., at p. 110.)

All five packers, without expressly admitting any law violation, consented to an injunction against (1) owning any interest in a stockyards company, (2) making, selling or transporting 114 enumerated grocery products, (3) using or permitting others to use their distribution facilities for the handling of those grocery products, (4) selling meat at retail, (5) holding any interest in any public cold storage plant and (6) selling fresh milk or cream (286 U. S., at p. 111).

Ten years after this decree was entered, Swift and Armour prayed for a modification permitting them, inter alia, to own and operate retail meat markets, to make, sell and deal in the 114 grocery items, and to use and permit others to use their distribution facilities in handling those items. As grounds for the modification sought, the defendants were able to show that great changes in the methods of food distribution had occurred since the entry of the decree. Other vertically integrated combinations such as A. & P. had begun to dominate the grocery business. (See Record in Swift case, pp. 1045–1048.) It was stipulated that each of the defendants then had no monopoly of meat distribution and was in active competition with the others in each geographical market where they bought and sold (Id. at pp. 1043–44). The district court granted the modification as to the grocery business because it thought that use of the packers' storage, transportation and marketing facilities for groceries as well as meat was "sound as an economic and business proposition" and that the presence of the new chains in the grocery field would prevent any grocery monopoly by the packers (Id. at p. 1058). In denying the meat retailing modification, however, the district court said (Id. at p. 1059):

> Whether such complete integration in merchandising from the producer to the consumer would produce better conditions as a whole is an economic question which is not for the Court to decide. The policy of Congress as shown by the statutes enacted by it and as interpreted by the Supreme Court is to preserve and stimulate competition, and to permit the defendants to engage in the retailing of their own products would, in my opinion, have the opposite result.

The United States appealed, but the defendants did not. In determining the propriety of the district court's grocery modification, this Court did not consider separately the prohibition against defendants' making, selling or transporting groceries from the prohibition of the use by anyone of their distribution facilities for that purpose since it regarded one as necessary to supplement the other. After reciting the allegations in the complaint concerning the economic advantages inherent in the packers' vertical integration which enabled them to undercut independent competition in the grocery trade, this Court said (286 U. S. at p. 116):

> Whether the defendants would resume that practice if they were to deal in groceries again, we do not know. They would certainly have the temptation to resume it. Their low overhead and their gigantic size, even when they are viewed as separate units, would still put them in a position to starve out weaker rivals.

The Court then pointed out that the decree was framed upon the theory that even after the meat monopoly was dissolved, each defendant packer would be "so huge that the capacity to engage in other forms of business as adjuncts to the sale of meats should be taken from them altogether" (286 U. S. at p. 116). The Court reasoned that the prohibition against engaging in the retail meat business and the grocery prohibition which the district court modified were both "directed against abuse of power by the individual units after the monopoly was over; and the death of the monopoly, the breaking up of the combination, if an adequate reason for terminating one of them, is an adequate reason for terminating both" (286 U. S. at p. 117). Then, after reviewing the advantages inherent in the major packers' vertical integration which parallel those of the major defendants here, the Court said (286 U. S. at p. 119):

> The case comes down to this: the defendants had abused their powers so grossly and persistently as to lead to the belief that even when they were acting separately, their conduct should be subjected to extraordinary restraints.

The consent decree there was also sustained because the defendants "chose to renounce what they might otherwise have claimed" (286 U. S., at p. 119). Nevertheless, the elaborate discussion of the economic power inherent in the vertical integrations and the asserted abuse of such power which led to the entry of the decree was evidently intended to show that the prohibition which the court below had modified on the ground of changed conditions continued to be appropriate relief so long as the power and economic incentive to repeat such an abuse was unchanged.

Here, as in the Swift case, there have been serious trade restraints resulting from horizontal agreements among the vertically integrated defendants. The defendants have demonstrated a proclivity to persist in such abuses of their power, despite the extensive use of injunctive provisions and administrative regulations intended to prevent them (supra, pp. 72–89). Consequently, removal by divorcement of the power to continue such restraints through agreements among all the defendants as distributors with the five major defendants as exhibitors is necessary, if the decree is to end the unlawful practices, provide "such reasonable measures as would preclude their revival," and "effectively pry open to competition a market that has been closed by defendants' illegal restaints" [4] (see p. 60, supra).

We contend in Point III (infra, pp. 127–135) that the five major defendants should be prohibited from cross-licensing among themselves for a ten year period, while the long-range remedy of divorcement is being carried out. Such a cross-licensing prohibition would effectively eliminate the power of these five defendants to conspire among themselves as they have in the past. It would have no effect, however, upon the continuing incentive, power and proclivity of the three non-exhibitor defendants and each major defendant to eliminate competition among themselves and with others by the simple expedient of continuing to enter into the license agreements which gave rise to this conspiracy in the first place. And, as we also point out in Point III, a prohibition against cross-licensing without divorcement would not in any event provide the full relief necessary to restore competition to this industry.

B. THE TRIAL COURT SHOULD, IN ANY EVENT, HAVE COMPELLED THE MAJOR DEFENDANTS TO SELL THEIR STOCK INTERESTS IN THEATRE CORPORATIONS OWNED JOINTLY WITH INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS

The district court found that according to Exhibit RKO-11 there were a total of 1,078 theatres jointly owned or operated by the major defendants with independent exhibitors which would be affected by the dissolution provision of its judgment (Fdg. 117, R. 3683–3684). The agreements for joint operation were ordered terminated by July 1, 1947. There were some jointly owned theatres in which either the defendant or the independent owned less than a 5 percent interest, which the court treated as de minimis (Fdg. 115, R. 3682–3683). The court held that the remaining joint ownerships were unlawful and should be terminated within two years "by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendants" (R. 3699). In the case of purchase by a defendant, however, there must be a showing to the satisfaction of the court that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. The Government contends that all such illegal joint ownerships with independent exhibitors should be dissolved by sale of defendants' interests to non-defendants.

Each major defendant, in creating each of these joint ownerships, eliminated competition between it and an independent "for their more effective competition against theatres not members of the 'pool'" (R. 3548). Such a resriction of competition was particularly unreasonable because each acquiring major was "a powerful factor in the industry capable of exerting vast influence to its ends" (R. 3556) and had habitually restrained and controlled normal competition.

The court made no inquiry into the precise circumstances under which any particular interest had been acquired and treated all such relationships alike insofar as their dissolution is concerned. It recognized the enormous extent of the joint interests acquired by the major defendants in independent theatre enterprises as an obvious consequence of the majors' extraordinary control over the film supply on which those independents were dependent for survival. For example, Loew did not license its films for a first run moveover to independent theatres in Atlanta, Georgia, and Providence, Rhode Island, until it had acquired a 50 percent interest in them (R. 578–579). The theatre pooling agreements in evidence (App., pp. 137–206) show that partial control of the film supply was the basic bargaining weapon with which every defendant entered a pooling negotiation with an independent, and that an important purpose of any such pooling arrangement was to make films available to the independent's theatre on terms that were not available to an independent operator. By allowing the defendants to buy these independents out entirely, the decree will simply permit the defendants to complete the process of eliminating these independents which was begun in the first place by defendants' unlawful conduct and market control.

We agree with the finding that these relationships are unlawful, but they should have been dissolved by a sale of the defendants' interests under the doctrine applied in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. Only by such a sale may the defendants be deprived of the fruits of their unlawful conduct. Permitting a major defendant to take over an independent's interest entirely will lead to more serious results than those found to be illegal. While joint ownership eliminated putative competition between a major and an independant, at least there was an independent in business. The district court's decree, however, will permit complete removal of the independent from the exhibition field and allow the major defendant, already a powerful factor and guilty of serious restraints on normal competition, to increase its power. Instead of eliminating an existing restraint in a way calculated to increase competition, the decree will extend the scope of the restraint by imposing an even more serious one.

This provision is particularly unsound when considered in the light of the district court's conclusion that the defendants had both restrained and attempted to monopolize trade in the distribution and exhibition fields. It seems clear that where defendants have attempted to monopolize an industry they should at the very least be prohibited from gaining any further power by any means whatsoever. The district court apparently applied this theory in enjoining the major defendants from expanding their present theatre holdings in any manner other than that under discussion (R. 3700). But it failed to follow that principle in its relief with respect to joint ownerships. There appears to be no valid reason for this difference in treatment.

While such acquisitions are subject to court approval, that condition does not, in the view of the Government, cure the deficiencies in the court's decree. It is our view that if joint operation or ownership is illegal per se, as the trial court found, that illegality can, under no circumstances, be terminated by a defendant's acquisition of its partner's interests to make the enterprise wholly owned and controlled by a defendant. The seriousness of leaving it open to a defendant to acquire exclusive rights is underlined by the expectation that, in most instances, the independent will be inclined to sell rather than buy, for separation from the major will deprive the independent of the protection which induced the affiliation.* The theatres in question also have a monopoly value in the defendants' hands which they have for no one else. Therefore, any proposal to buy or sell at a fixed price would result in a purchase by the defendant instead of by the non-defendant.

* While defendants have so far reported to the district court no substantial dissolution of joint stock interests with independents, Paramount has reported that most of its partners are interested in selling to it rather than buying out Paramount.

The optional nature of the provision also produces a deadlock in those situations where neither the defendant nor the independent desires to sell. In such cases the effectiveness of the provision is left entirely to future litigation, the outcome of which cannot now be predicted. The Government proposes compulsory sale of defendants' interests to non-defendants as the only certain way of dissolving these pooling relationships, and as the only means of preventing the major defendants from extending an already illegally acquired control of theatres.

These compulsory sales to independents of the major defendants' stock interests in theatre-owning corporations will accomplish substantial divorcement relief as to some of the major defendants. It will not, however, divest them of local theatre-operating monopolies maintained through other corporations in which independents have no interest whatever.

C. THE LOWER COURT'S CONCERN THAT DIVESTITURE WOULD BE INJURIOUS TO DEFENDANTS AND THE PUBLIC PROVIDES NO BASIS FOR DENYING SUCH RELIEF

One of the reasons given by the lower court for denying divestiture was that it "would be injurious to the corporations concerned," and

"would be damaging to the public" because new theatre owners "would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service" as the defendants (R. 3551, 3559, 3690).

We do not deny that divestiture of the theatre interests would injure the defendants. We do deny that the injury would be undue, or any more than is necessary to protect the public interest in free competition. This Court has said on several occasions that, while the primary duty in an antitrust case is to eliminate restraints and restore competition, consideration should be given to the interests of the general public and investors. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 185, 187; United States v. U. S. Steel Corp., 251 U. S. 417, 453, 457. We know of no case, however, where divestiture has been refused because it would injure the corporate defendants that have violated the law. The true rule is that "those who violate the Act may not reap the benefits of their violations and avoid an undoing of their unlawful project on the plea of hardship or inconvenience." United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 189.

There are two answers to the trial court's concern over damage to the public. The first is that there is nothing in the record to suggest that independent interests cannot give the public as good service as the defendants. The trial court was certainly not justified in taking judicial notice to this effect. The basic requisite for successful theatre operation is access to good pictures. Independent exhibitors have been deprived of this essential in the past by defendants' unlawful conspiracy. Given adequate films, it seems apparent that any competent businessman can give the public good service. There are four towns of over 100,000 which the defendants have not invaded (Fdg. 150, R. 3689). No one has suggested that the theatre-goers in these towns have suffered. The record here shows that the renowned Radio City Music Hall in New York City is operated by unaffiliated interests. And the Third Circuit Court of Appeals found in William Goldman Theatres v. Loew, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738, 742, that the independent theatre there involved "as to management, reputation and in all other respects * * * was suitable for profitable exhibition of first-class feature motion pictures on first-run competition with the" Warner theatres in Philadelphia.

The second answer to the lower court's concern over public injury is that its conclusion is a paradox. The control over the industry exercised by the defendants, their system of fixed prices, clearances, and runs, and their various discriminatory practices for years have injured the public and deprived it of the advantages of competition. If these practices can be eliminated and competition restored only through divestiture of the distributor-exhibitor relationship, it is contradictory to deny such relief on the ground that the public might be injured because the service of independent competitors might temporarily be inferior to that provided by the monopolists. Monopolists often may provide good service, but in the Sherman Act Congress has made the judgment that competition is, in the end, to the greater public advantage.[58]

What has already been said serves, we think, to put at rest the objections made to divestiture by the court below on the grounds of injury to the defendants and to the public. An additional factor to be noted in this connection, however, is that the interest of the public in divestiture is not solely negative—avoiding injury to it; the interest of the public is a positive one—an interest in ensuring the distribution of more motion-picture products to more exhibitor outlets. If divesture is, as we think it is, the only way in which that end can be attained, then the public has a direct and affirmative interest in that remedy.

Motion pictures have become an important medium of expression and education. Their importance in controlling the thought and action of the American people has recently been the subject of a study dealing with the adverse public effects of monopolistic practices in these fields.* Divestiture will make for greater independent production of motion pictures and more exhibition outlets willing and able to exhibit to the public not only those pictures produced and distributed by the defendants but also other products, with different outlooks and of different types, which now are made available to the public, if at all, only in small out of the way theatres access to which is unavailable to the public at large.

The evidence introduced at the trial was quite properly concerned with the commercial rather than cultural aspects of the film business. In our view the relief requested here which the trial court rejected is required by antitrust precedents in purely commercial fields and was so argued there. Nevertheless, the expediting court's remedy has implications affecting constitutional

*See general report of The Commission on Freedom of the Press, A Free and Responsible Press, c. 6, pp. 82–83, 1947. The conclusions of the full commission, with respect to the problems here considered, may be summarized as follows:

1. The constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press should be recognized as including motion pictures. The growing importance of the documentary film gives fresh emphasis to the need.

2. The Government should use its antitrust powers to destroy monopolistic control of production, distribution, and theatrical outlets. A healthy competition within the industry conduces to that variety and quality of service which the public interest requires.

freedom of expression which may scarcely be ignored here.

The content of films, regardless of who produces them, or exhibits them, must necessarily be conditioned to some extent by the prejudices and moral attitudes of those who control the channels of distribution. Only by assurance that the distribution field is equally open to all may the fullest diversity of film content be had. The existing decree makes no attempt to give such assurance. In fact it gives assurance that the major distributors will continue to control the distribution of the most commercially valuable films in the future as they have in the past because it assures them of continued possession of a controlled market for their product which they are free to exploit in any discriminatory manner that they choose. The past performance of the defendants has been one of creating and maintaining a control of the film market expressly designed to prevent a diversity of financial rewards comparable to the diverse merits of the films they distributed. Certainly such a past gives little hope that they will in the future encourage production of the wide variety of films needed to satisfy the wide variety of tastes possessed by the potential American film audience, rather than a standardized mass product adapted to profitable exhibition in a controlled market.

The lower court's findings leave no doubt that the freedom to exploit commercially films of the widest diversity by divers marketing methods has been illegally suppressed by the defendants in this case. The precise effects of that suppression are now incalculable. We know only from this record that they have been long continued and wide-spread. The decree under review established a system of affirmative regulation of the defendant's distribution practices as a substitute for measures required to restore that freedom, because such measures involve a high degree of dislocation of business ownership. We respectfully submit that this Court's past decisions require the rejection by this Court of that approach and the adoption of the relief here sought.

Our point can be succinctly stated by paraphrasing a sentence from Judge Learned Hand's opinion for the district court in United States v. Associated Press, 52 F. Supp. 362, 372: It is impossible to treat two theatres or two films as interchangeable, and to deprive a theatre or a distributor of the benefit of any service of the first rating is to deprive, pro tanto, the theatre-going public of means of information which it should have; "it is only by cross-lights from varying directions that full illumination can be secured."

When the Associated Press case came to this Court, the Court noted that the First Amendment, far from providing an argument against the application of the Sherman Act, provided "powerful reasons to the contrary". 326 U. S. 1, 20. And Mr. Justice Frankfurter, concurring, rested his affirmance of the judgment upon the ground that the restrictions it prohibited "offend the basic functions which a constitutionally guaranteed press serves in our nation". 326 U. S. at 29. When here, as in the Associated Press case, the distribution of information is involved, "We do not agree that the corporation's property interests settle the question". Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U. S. 501, 505.

III

The district court should have prohibited cross-licensing among the major defendants

The Government proposed below to prohibit each major defendant from licensing films produced or distributed by it to another major defendant for use in its theatres for a 10-year period beginning one year after entry of the judgment. The one-year waiting period is designed to permit the defendants to make necessary adjustments through increased film production, or through selling theatres in areas where they could not operate all of their theatres with their own product plus that of the three non-exhibitor defendants and that of non-defendant distributors. The 10-year period is considered sufficiently long to assure discontinuance of the major defendants' unlawful conduct. This relief is also required independently of divorcement as a means of inducing a prompt divesture of theatres in those towns where the defendants have a monopoly position. See infra, pages ~~194–195~~. 122

A prohibition against cross-licensing is particularly appropriate relief in this case because it is directed at the very agreements by which the defendants effectuated their conspiracy. Each of the major defendants as a distributor has licensed theatres of the other majors as exhibitors on preferential terms including the conspiratorial prices, clearances and runs. Since these defendants are by far the largest exhibitors and among the most important distributors, the licensing agreements among them have set the pattern for the operation of the conspiracy in most of the large cities in the United States. So long as the right to make such agreements continues the pattern of restraints fixed by the conspiracy will persist. Under such circumstances use of these agreements should be prohibited at least until the effects of the conspiracy can be dissipated, even though the defendants are deprived of rights they otherwise might have. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 187–188; Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436; United States v.

Masonite Corporation, 316 U. S. 265; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 724; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241, 254.

Even if defendants were prohibited absolutely from making restrictive agreements of any kind, each of them normally would tend to make its films available to the others upon the same runs they had enjoyed in the past and would continue to maintain the now customary periods of protection against later runs which were originally established by the illegal conspiracy. This can and has been done without a written agreement of any kind. For example, the record shows that Paramount did not conclude a license agreement with Loew's theatres in New York City for the 1944–45 season and did not serve them with any films until May 1945 (R. 811). Notwithstanding that there was no contract in effect during these negotiations which gave Loew a prior position in the playing of Paramount films in New York City, the showing of these films in independent subsequent-run theatres was delayed until after their exhibition by Loew (R. 782-893). Similarly, in many instances the defendants have done business with each other under contracts which contained no express clearance provisions, but simply permitted the licensee to play as many runs as it desired before the film was available to others (See Exs. 241, 273, 399, 471; App. pp. 45, 89, 116, 125, 127).

Of particular significance in this connection are net-profit-sharing license agreements between the major defendants, which the court below did not enjoin. Examples of such agreements are found in Exhibits 243 and 250 (See App. pp. 59, 97). These agreements show that Loew's pictures were licensed to Paramount's theatres in Chicago during the 1943–44 season for a share of the net profits derived from their exhibition, while, during the same season, Paramount's pictures were licensed to Loew's New York theatres for a share of the net profits derived from their exhibition. In the latter contract, no clearance or admission price terms appear, but the priority of Loew's theatres over subsequent runs on these films was maintained throughout the period covered pursuant to clearance established by prior agreement (R. 782–783).

The effect of such film licensing in unifying the financial interests of two or more defendants in exploiting a particular market is substantially the same as that of the theatre pooling arrangements which the court held unlawful.[1] It would seem that the major defendants' film licensing agreements with each other must be equally unlawful if consciously produced suppression of competition by agreement is the test. The court, however, permitted such licensing to continue and such arrangements would not be ended by the competitive bidding system prescribed by the trial court.

While a prohibition against cross-licenses between the major defendants would not itself prevent their theatres from exhibiting the films of Universal, Columbia, and United Artists upon the prior runs now established, it would tend to break up the existing pattern of prior runs in the major defendants' theatres, which has required these and all other distributors to favor such theatres in the past, even in the absence of an ownership interest in any theatre. The major defendants as distributors have collectively controlled and still control the major part of the first-class film supply, which enables them to set a pattern of run priority to which other distributors conform in selling in any market in which the defendants' theatres are located.

As we have pointed out earlier (supra, p. 108), if permitted to cross-license, the defendants can accomplish horizontal restrictive agreements among themselves, the very practice found unlawful by the court below. Since the major defendants are both distributors and exhibitors, the net effect of such cross-licenses is to use the non-competitive outlets of each other to bring about uniformity of licensing restrictions, and thereby eliminate competition among these five defendants and with others in both distribution and exhibition. We submit that the resulting uniform agreements are unlawful per se. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150; International Salt Co., Inc., v. United States, No. 46, this Term. In any event, these cross-licenses must be prohibited if effective relief is to be granted against defendants' conspiracy to fix prices and playing positions by means of such licenses.

A prohibition of cross-licensing, in addition to preventing continuation of the very practices by the major defendants which the court below found unlawful, would tend to bring at least some independent competition into both distribution and exhibition fields. It would compel the major defendants, as distributors, to seek other prior-run outlets in the areas where they now employ each other's theatres for that purpose. It follows of course that a defendant would sell such theatres as it did not choose to operate with its own pictures plus those of the three nonexhibitor defendants and independent distributors. This record, however, shows that such operation in cities of over 25,000 is feasible, since independents operating first-run theatres in such cities have in the past generally existed with the product of only one, two or three of the distributor-defendants (see Exs. 428, 428A, 432, App. pp. 299, 304, 308). In no case would any defendant be compelled to withdraw from any town as a theatre operator.

In towns where one defendant owns all of the theatres,[8] the primary effect of the prohibition would be to establish an independent theatre. This might occur by a sale of a defendant's theatre to an independent, or through new construction by an independent. In either event, the defendant's theatre operating monopoly in that area would be broken. Thus the relief provides a substantial degree of flexibility for the defendants in meeting its requirements.

There are no exact litigated precedents for such relief, since no other integrated manufacturers of products for mass consumption have enjoyed a similar mutual use of each other's retail outlets.[9] Relief restricting the number and character of retail outlets available to a national distributor is found in the consent decree before this Court in United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693. That decree required the defendant to divest itself of some 5,000 retail outlets which it was alleged had been used to deprive other manufacturers of adequate retail outlets. This Court, in refusing additional relief sought by the Government, relied heavily on that provision as an adequate stimulus to competition. 274 U. S. at pp. 705–706. In United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, this Court reversed a district court decision which had modified the 1920 consent decree against the major meat packers. This modification would have revoked a prohibition of the use of their distribution facilities for the marketing of certain grocery products made by them or by others which was included in the decree as assurance against their engaging in any part of the business of making or marketing such products. (See full discussion of Swift decision, supra, pp. 110–115).

[8] Theatre affiliates of Paramount have at least 220 of these closed towns, those of Warner at least 61, and those of Fox at least 63 (R. 359–369; Exs. 371, 397, R. 370, 2166). These are mainly towns of less than 25,000 population.

[9] Perhaps the closest approach to such a situation in Sherman Act litigation before this Court is represented by United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265. But in that case the use of competing manufacturers as sales outlets for the products of one as a means of controlling resale prices was alleged to be permitted by patent license agreements. As shown (supra, p. 97), there is no basis here even for a claim of any comparable copyright license sanction.

A prohibition against cross-licensing among the major defendants should stimulate competition in both distribution and exhibition, but it will not deprive defendants of the fruits of their conspiracy, will not effectively reduce the power of defendants to the point necessary to permit independents to compete on a fair basis, and will not remove the restraints which automatically flow from the vertical integration between each major distributor-defendant and its theatres. We propose a ban on cross-licensing as a necessary short-range remedy which will provide some relief during the long period required to bring about complete divorcement, and which supplies an economic incentive for divestiture of theatres in the cities where one or two of the major defendants occupy a monopoly position as theatre operators. Where three or four operate first-run theatres, the effects of such a prohibition in providing independent first-run outlets are unimportant, since there are then non-competitive preferred outlets for the films of most of the major defendants.[10] But a prohibition against the use of major defendants' theatres as an exhibition outlet for the features of another does in any event provide an incentive, now lacking, for such defendants to compete with one another, both as theatre operators and as film distributors. This is essential to any effective relief which may be decreed.

CONCLUSION

We respectfully submit that this Court should reverse the judgment below and remand the case for the entry of a decree divorcing the major defendants from their affiliated theatres and pro-

[10] It should also be borne in mind that a flat prohibition of theatre acquisitions through dissolution of pools is a necessary complement of this relief. (See, supra, pp. 115–120.)

APPENDIX TO BRIEF FOR UNITED STATES

I—Film Licenses

A. Excerpts From Printed Forms of License of Each Distributor-Defendant for the 1943–44 Season

1. Columbia (Ex. 286, R. 274):

(a) Admission Price Provisions

Minimum admission price: Matinee—Adult ..... Children .....; evening—Adult ..... Children .....

Admission prices

Twentieth: The Exhibitor warrants, represents and agrees that the admission prices listed in the Schedule are the usual prices charged by Exhibitor and that during the whole of the licensed exhibition period of the motion pictures exhibited hereunder, Exhibitor shall charge not less than the prices listed in said Schedule. Exhibitor acknowledges that said prices specified in the Schedule are the prices normally and usually charged under Exhibitor's regular operating policy for admission to said theatre and that, induced thereby, Distributor has agreed to the license fees set forth in the Schedule. If during any such period less than said admission prices listed in the Schedule is charged, the Distributor, in addition to all other rights and remedies hereunder, and at law and in equity shall have the right (a) to immediately terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such motion picture shall forthwith terminate and revert to the Distributor; or (b) if any of the pictures exhibited at such lesser admission price are licensed hereunder upon a percentage of the gross receipts, to require the payment by Exhibitor out of such gross receipts of the equivalent amount payable to Distributor had the aforesaid admission price set forth in the Schedule been charged; and/or provided the Exhibitor is granted herein a period of "Clearance" to reduce such period by not to exceed one-half (½) in respect to each of the motion pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) provided no period of "Clearance" is specified in the Schedule, to withhold for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days, notice of the date when each motion picture thereafter deliverable hereunder will be available for exhibition by the Exhibitor; and as to each motion picture the "run" thereof, if any, granted the Exhibitor, shall be deemed revoked and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such motion picture after notice of the available date thereof upon the date or dates determined as provided in Clause Sixth hereof.

(b) Run and Clearance Provisions

Run: If the Exhibitor is granted hereunder a second or subsequent "run," the Distributor shall have the right in its sole discretion to grant the Exhibitor in respect to any of the motion pictures herein embraced, a "run" prior to such second or subsequent "run" by giving notice in writing to such effect to the Exhibitor and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit any such motion picture in accordance therewith.

* * *

Clearance and run

Seventh: The Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the "run" or prior to the expiration of the "clearance period" if any in the Schedule specified at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of clearance as to each of said motion pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof licensed hereunder. If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened.

* * *

Advertising prior to first run

Ninth: (a) If the Exhibitor is granted a subsequent run of the said motion pictures, the Exhibitor shall not advertise any thereof by any means of advertising prior to or during the exhibition of any one of said motion pictures by any other exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof. Nothing in this Clause shall be deemed to prohibit the Exhibitor from advertising generally all of said motion pictures as a group, but such general advertising shall not refer to any one of said motion pictures during its exhibition by any other exhibitor having the first or immediately prior run thereof, excepting as herein provided.

(b) The Exhibitor shall not advertise by any means of advertising any of said motion pictures which may be roadshown by the Distributor and not excepted and excluded from this license, until after the completion of such roadshowing in the United States, and then only as permitted in paragraph (a) of this Clause.

(c) For a breach of the provisions of this Clause the Distributor shall have in addition to all other rights the right to exclude from this license any motion picture advertised in violation of the provisions hereof by written notice to such effect mailed to the Exhibitor and upon the mailing of such notice the license of such motion picture shall terminate and revert to the Distributor, but without prejudice to any and all rights Distributor may have against Exhibitor on account of such breach.

First run exhibitions

FIFTEENTH: (a) If the Exhibitor is granted a first run of the said motion pictures, the Exhibitor shall exhibit each of the feature motion pictures excepting those described in Paragraph (d) of this Clause within the period beginning with the date scheduled and announced by the Distributor for the general release of each feature motion picture in the territory wherein is located the exchange of the Distributor out of which the Exhibitor is served and ending one hundred and twenty (120) days thereafter, notwithstanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the first exhibition date of any of the said motion pictures shall occur on a date later than ninety (90) days after its scheduled and announced general release date, then the period of clearance of such motion picture shall be reduced so as to expire one hundred and twenty (120) days after said scheduled date of its general release. If the Exhibitor is granted a first run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said period of one hundred and twenty (120) days, the grant of the said first run and the clearance period in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the Distributor, with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in Paragraph (e) of this Clause provided.

Second run exhibitions

(b) If the Exhibitor is granted a second run of the said motion pictures and any other exhibitor having been granted the first run thereof immediately prior to such second run fails to exhibit any of the feature motion pictures, excepting those described in Paragraph (d) of this Clause within the said period of one hundred and twenty (120) days specified in Paragraph (a) of this Clause, the Exhibitor shall exhibit each such feature motion picture within the period beginning with the date of the expiration of the said one hundred and twenty (120) days period and ending fourteen (14) days thereafter, notwithstanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the Exhibitor is granted a second run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said fourteen (14) days period the grant of such second run and the clearance period if any in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the Distributor with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in Paragraph (e) of this Clause provided.

Subsequent runs exhibitions

(c) If the Exhibitor is granted a run subsequent to a second run of the said motion pictures and any other Exhibitor having been granted the second run thereof immediately prior to such subsequent run fails to exhibit any of the feature motion pictures, excepting those described in Paragraph (d) of this Clause within the said period of fourteen (14) days specified in Paragraph (b) of this Clause the Exhibitor shall exhibit each feature motion picture within the period beginning with the date of the expiration of the said fourteen-day period and ending seven (7) days thereafter, notwithstanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the Exhibitor is granted a run subsequent to a second run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said seven (7) day period, the grant of such subsequent run and the clearance period if any in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the Distributor with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in Paragraph (e) of this Clause provided.

Extended runs

(d) Any of the motion pictures which shall have been exhibited at any theatre in the said territory for more than one show week prior to the run granted the Exhibitor shall be excepted from the provisions of this Clause and of Paragraph (b) of Clause Fourth.

Exhibition after revocation of run and clearance

(e) Upon the waiver of the grant of the run and/or the clearance period of any feature motion picture as provided in Paragraphs (a), (b), or (c) of this Clause, the Exhibitor upon payment of the sum or sums payable hereunder as provided in this Clause for the license to exhibit such feature motion picture, shall have the right to exhibit the same hereunder upon a date or dates not in conflict with any run and/or clearance period granted or hereafter granted to other exhibitors, upon written request mailed or delivered to the Distributor within sixty (60) days after the last date upon which such feature motion picture should have been exhibited by the Exhibitor as provided in this Clause. Failing to make such request within said period of sixty (60) days the license to exhibit such feature motion picture granted hereunder shall terminate and revert to the Distributor.

2. Fox (Ex. 276, R. 273):

(a) Admission Price Provisions

Admission prices

The Exhibitor during the whole of the licensed exhibition period of each of the licensed pictures exhibited hereunder shall charge for admission per person to said theatre the following prices: Evenings—Adults, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....; Children, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....; Matinees—Adults, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....; Children, Orchestra .....Balcony .....

If during any such period less than said admission price is charged, the Distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right: (a) to terminate the license of the picture then being exhibited, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such picture shall forthwith terminate and revert to the distributor; or (b) provided the Exhibitor is granted herein a period of "clearance" to reduce such period by not to exceed one-half in respect to each of the licensed pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) provided no period of clearance is specified in the Schedule to withhold, for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days notice of the date when each picture thereafter deliverable hereunder will be available for exhibition by the Exhibitor; and as to each such picture the "run" thereof, if any, granted the Exhibitor, shall be deemed revoked and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such picture after notice of the available date thereof upon the date or dates determined as provided in paragraph 7 hereof; if Distributor does not elect to terminate the license of the picture then being exhibited, as provided in subdivision (a) of this paragraph, the Exhibitor shall account for all admissions to said theatre during the exhibition of such picture on the basis of the admission prices hereinabove stipulated.

(b) Run and Clearance Provisions

Exhibition arrangement

Clearance—Run .....

The license herein granted for the number of days specified in the Schedule shall not include the right of exhibition at any time previous to dawn of the first licensed and booked date of exhibition without securing express written permission hereunder.

Notwithstanding the maximum number of days of exhibition herein specified, or of any right hereunder to exhibit at any one or more of two or more theatres named herein, the license herein granted is expressly limited to the right to exhibit each licensed picture at only the theatre and on the respective date or dates of exhibition which shall be designated, selected, or otherwise agreed upon, and confirmed by Distributor in writing for such theatre; and said license shall not include any right of exhibition (a) at any other time or place of exhibition, (b) by means of any print other than that furnished to Exhibitor by Distributor for the express purpose of exhibition upon the play dates so licensed and confirmed in writing for the designated theatre, nor (c) at any time prior to 8:00 A. M. of the first play date so licensed and confirmed unless exhibition prior to such hours is expressly permitted in advance thereof by Distributor in writing.

8. Clearance and run: The Distributor agrees not to exhibit or license the exhibition of any of said licensed pictures in conflict with the run or prior to the expiration of the clearance period, if any, specified in the Schedule at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of clearance as to each of said licensed pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof therein licensed.

* * *

10. Advertising prior to first run: (a) If the Exhibitor is granted a subsequent run of the said licensed pictures the Exhibitor shall not advertise any thereof prior to or during the exhibition of such picture by any other exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof.

(b) The Exhibitor shall not advertise any of said licensed pictures which may be road-shown by the Distributor, until after the completion of such road-showing in the United States.

(c) For a breach of the provisions of this paragraph the Distributor shall have, in addition to all other rights, the right to exclude from this license any licensed picture advertised in violation of the provisions hereof by written notice to such effect mailed to the Exhibitor and upon the mailing of such notice the license of such motion picture shall terminate and revert to the Distributor.

13th: Admission Prices. A main consideration for the grant of this license is that Exhibitor warrants and agrees as follows: that during the entire engagement of each said pictures not less than the respective prices shown in the Schedule shall be charged for admission, and if without Distributor's prior written consent any of such respective prices are reduced during the engagement of any of said pictures Distributor may forthwith change or modify the run, availability and/or clearance herein provided for; that with respect to each participating picture Exhibitor shall account to Distributor on the basis of the respective admission prices shown in the Schedule for each person admitted to the theatre at each performance, except for a customary and reasonable number of free admissions to bona fide representatives of the press and/or in consideration of theatre advertising (provided that if at any performance any of the prices of admission are greater than as shown in the Schedule Exhibitor shall account on the basis of such larger amounts); and that during the engagement of any participating picture any of the admission prices shown in the Schedule are reduced without Distributor's prior written consent or upon failure or refusal of Exhibitor to account on the basis herein provided with respect to any one or more of the participating pictures, Distributor may forthwith either (1) change or modify the availability and/or clearance herein provided for, or (2) terminate the license herein granted as to all pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder, or (3) terminate the license herein granted and any other exhibition contract(s) between the parties hereto, as to all feature pictures not theretofore exhibited thereunder. In the event of such termination Distributor may thereupon declare such violation a breach of the entire contract, or contracts, so terminated as to all feature pictures not theretofore exhibited and/or paid for, entitling Distributor to recover as damages therefor the amount payable as license fees in respect of all feature pictures not theretofore exhibited and/or paid for pursuant to the provisions of the contract so terminated. Such rights shall be in addition and without prejudice to any and all other rights and remedies granted Distributor in this agreement and to any and all other rights and remedies of Distributor at law or equity.

Employment or use of cut-rate tickets or coupons or any other method of a substantially similar nature—including as example but without limitation two-for-one tickets or scrip tickets—which lowers the price of admission during the exhibition of any of the pictures licensed hereunder to said theatre to any patron or patrons below any of the respective minimum admission prices provided for hereunder shall constitute a reduction in admission price violative of this Article, entitling Distributor to exercise any or all of the rights herein granted.

(b) Run and Clearance Provisions

10th: Clearance and Run. During the life of this contract Distributor agrees not to exhibit or license the exhibition of any of said pictures in conflict with the "run" or to the expiration of the clearance period, if any, in the Schedule specified, but it is agreed that any violation hereof shall not affect this contract except as to the particular picture to which such violation has occurred, and that the damage which may be claimed by Exhibitor shall not exceed the amount of the license fee herein provided for such picture or if such picture has been contracted for, or is designated by Distributor, to be exhibited on guarantee against percentage, shall not exceed the amount of such guarantee, or if straight percentage, shall not exceed an amount to be determined as provided in "Liquidated Damages", and that such claim for damage shall be the sole and exclusive remedy of Exhibitor on account of such violation. In any arbitration involving a claim by Exhibitor under this Article any award in favor of Exhibitor shall be limited as above provided. Unless otherwise provided herein the clearance period as to each picture shall be computed from the last date of exhibition thereof licensed hereunder. If clearance is granted hereunder against a specified theatre or theatres indicating it was Distributor's intention to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of Exhibitor's theatre, then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule such clearance shall be deemed to apply to and include any theatre hereafter opened in such vicinity.

4. PARAMOUNT (Ex. 280, R. 273):

(a) Admission Price Provisions

Admission prices

The Exhibitor agrees to charge minimum admission prices per person to said theatre on the respective exhibition dates thereat of the motion pictures licensed hereunder as follows: Evenings (After 6 P. M.): Adults, Orchestra ....., Balcony ..... Children, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....; Matinees (Before 6 P. M.): Adults, Orchestra ..... Balcony ..... Children, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....

If during any such period less than said admission prices is charged, the Distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right: (a) To immediately terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited and/or of all the remaining motion pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such motion pictures shall forthwith terminate and revert to the Distributor and the Distributor may, at its option, declare such failure or refusal a breach of the entire contract entitling the Distributor to recover from the Exhibitor as damages therefor the license fees payable in respect of all motion pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder; or (b) Forthwith to revoke the run, availability and clearance, if any, herein provided for and to fix the run, availability and clearance applicable to each motion picture thereafter deliverable hereunder, and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such motion picture in accordance with the run, availability and clearance so fixed; and (c) If the license fee of any such motion picture is to be computed either in whole or in part upon a percentage of the gross admission receipts of said theatre, then the Exhibitor shall account to the Distributor for all admissions to said theatre during the exhibition of such motion picture upon the basis of the said admission prices specified above. The Exhibitor shall not be entitled hereunder to any change in the run, availability or clearance, if any, herein provided for, by reason of any increase in admission prices at said theatre after the signing of this application by the Exhibitor.

It is expressly understood and agreed that the above minimum admission prices are exclusive of any State, Federal, or local taxes which now are or may be imposed upon admission to the theatre or theatres licensed hereunder.

(b) Run and Clearance Provisions

If the Exhibitor is granted hereunder a second or subsequent run, the same shall not be exclusive unless otherwise specified in this Schedule, and the Distributor shall have the right to license as many of the same runs and as many prior and subsequent runs as it may desire. If so required by the Distributor, the Exhibitor shall exhibit any motion picture licensed hereunder for an earlier run than herein provided.

* * *

Clearance and run—~~Seventh. (a) Subject to the~~ provisions of paragraph (b) of this Article, the Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the run or prior to the expiration of the clearance period, if any, in the Schedule specified at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of clearance as to each of said motion pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof licensed hereunder, disregarding any "road show," "try-out" or "preview," or special "midnight" exhibition. If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened.

(b) The Distributor shall have the right to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures as a "road show," "try-out" or "preview" or special "midnight" exhibition at any time prior to the exhibition thereof hereunder. Any such "road show," "try-out" or "preview" or special "midnight" exhibition shall not be deemed a run of said motion picture, nor shall the run, availability or clearance provided herein with respect to said motion picture to be governed thereby.

Advertising prior to run—Eighth. (a) The Exhibitor shall not advertise by any means of advertising any of said motion pictures if road shown by the Distributor until after the completion of such road showing in the United States.

(b) If the Exhibitor is granted a second or subsequent run of said motion pictures the Exhibitor shall not advertise any thereof by any means of advertising prior to or during the exhibition of any one of said motion pictures by any other exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof in the same city, town, or zone.

(c) For a breach of the provisions of this Article the Distributor shall have in addition to all other rights the right to exclude from this license any motion picture advertised in violation of the provisions hereof by written notice to such effect mailed to the Exhibitor and upon the mailing of such notice the license of said motion picture shall terminate and revert to the Distributor.

5. RKO (Ex. 282, R. 274):

(a) Admission Price Provisions

Admission prices

During the entire period while any picture licensed hereunder is being exhibited at the theatre, the Exhibitor shall charge the following prices per person for admission to said theatre, which prices shall be exclusive of any tax upon such admission.

Matinee: Adults, orchestra.....balcony.....; children, orchestra.....balcony..... Evening: Adults, orchestra.....balcony.....; children, orchestra..... balcony.....

Unless a greater admission price is specified above, the Exhibitor will charge an admission of not less than 15¢ exclusive of any tax for adults at evening performances and not less than 10¢ exclusive of any tax at all other performances.

If during the exhibition of any picture hereunder, the Exhibitor should charge lower admission prices than those hereinbefore specified, the Distributor, in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right (a) to immediately terminate the license for the picture then being exhibited by giving written notice to that effect to the Exhibitor, and upon giving such notice the license for such picture shall thereupon terminate forthwith and revert to the Distributor; or (b) to reduce by not more than one-half any clearance period granted herein to the Exhibitor in respect of each picture thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) if no clearance is granted herein, then to withhold for not more than sixty (60) days the availability notice to the Exhibitor in respect of all pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder, and as to each such picture the "run" thereof, if any, granted the Exhibitor, shall be deemed revoked and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such picture after notice of the availability thereof upon the date or dates determined as provided in Article Ninth hereof.

(b) Run and Clearance Provisions

Clearance and run

Fourth. If the Exhibitor is granted a specific run or clearance of the pictures hereunder and is not in default hereunder, the Distributor will not license the exhibition of any such picture in conflict with the run or prior to the expiration of any clearance period so granted the Exhibitor.

Sixth. If any run herein granted is other than a first run, the Distributor shall have the right without incurring any liability to the Exhibitor to license any of the pictures hereunder for a "continued first run exhibition." A "continued first run exhibition" is defined to mean a run commencing immediately after the end of the initial first run and before any other run, and with admission prices not lower than those charged at the initial first run. The availability to the Exhibitor of any picture so exhibited for a continued first run shall be deferred for a period equal to the number of days that such picture shall have been so exhibited.

Prior runs

Seventh. If the run herein granted is other than a first run, the Distributor may request that any of the pictures be exhibited by the Exhibitor as a prior run and the Exhibitor agrees to comply with such request.

6. WARNER (Ex. 284, R. 274):

(a) Admission Price Provisions

Schedule of minimum admission prices

Admission prices. The Exhibitor during the whole of the licensed exhibition period of the pictures exhibited hereunder agrees to and shall charge for admission to said theatre as a minimum the following prices: (See Article Eighteenth, Page One.)

Admission prices

Eighteenth. Throughout the exhibition period of each picture Exhibitor shall charge for admission to said theatre as a minimum, the prices specified in the Schedule and unless a greater minimum is therein specified the minimum shall not be less than fifteen cents (15¢) for each adult person for each matinee and evening performance. If during any such period less than such minimum admission is charged, Distributor, in addition to all other rights of Distributor hereunder in the event of a breach, may at its option by written notice to Exhibitor, either terminate this license in its entirety or with respect to the picture then being exhibited.

(b) RUN and Clearance Provisions

Clearance and run

Eighth. Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any picture in conflict with the "run" or prior to the expiration of the "clearance period," if any, in the schedule specified for any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein defined. The period of clearance as to each picture shall be computed from its last date of exhibition and unless otherwise provided in the Schedule shall cover any theatre thereafter erected or opened in the immediate vicinity of Exhibitor's theatre.

Advertising prior to first run

Ninth. If Exhibitor is licensed a subsequent run of said pictures Exhibitor shall not advertise any of them in any way before the completion of all prior run exhibitions other than by the general advertising of them as a group without referring to any one of them. Distributor may, in addition to all other rights of Distributor in the event of a breach, exclude from this license any picture advertised in violation of this paragraph by written notice to such effect mailed to Exhibitor.

7. United Artists (Ex. 288, R. 274):

(a) Admission Price Provisions

Exhibitor warrants he Charges Minimum Admission: (After 5 P. M.—Adults ..... Children .....) Matinee, Adults ..... Children .....

(b) Run and Clearance Provisions

Clearance and run

Eleventh. (a) Provided the Exhibitor is not in default hereunder the Distributor agrees to observe the Clearance specified in the schedule hereof.

(b) If the Exhibitor is granted hereunder a second or subsequent run, the Distributor shall have the right in its sole discretion to advance the Exhibitor's run, and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit any motion picture the run of which is thus advanced in accordance therewith, even though the Exhibitor's run thus becomes a first run and there are no runs prior thereto.

Advertising prior to first run

Twelfth. If the Exhibitor is granted hereunder a second or subsequent run, the Exhibitor agrees not to advertise any picture to be delivered hereunder except by means of advertisements inside the said theatre not intended for removal therefrom by the public, prior to the exhibition of any such picture by any other exhibitor having the right to the first or prior run thereof. In the event of any violation of this clause the Exhibitor agrees to pay to the Distributor a sum equal to the damage, if any, so caused such other Exhibitor, and the Distributor may, at its option, terminate the license granted hereunder for that picture to be delivered by the Distributor. The Distributor, however, shall not be liable for any breach of the provisions of this article by any other exhibitor.

8. UNIVERSAL (Ex. 290, R. 274):

(a) Admission Price Provisions

Admission prices

The Exhibitor during the whole of the licensed exhibition period of each of the motion pictures exhibited hereunder agrees to and shall charge for admission to said theatre not less than the following prices:

Matinees: Adults, orchestra.....loges.....balcony .....Children, orchestra.....loges.....balcony....

Evening: Adults, orchestra.....loges.....balcony .....Children, orchestra.....loges.....balcony.....

If during any such period less than said admission prices is charged, the Distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right: (a) immediately to terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such motion picture shall forthwith terminate and revert to the Distributor; or (b) provided the Exhibitor is granted herein a period of "clearance" to reduce such period by not to exceed one-half in respect to each of the motion pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) provided no period of clearance is specified in the Schedule to withhold for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days notice of the date when each motion picture thereafter deliverable hereunder will be available for exhibition by the Exhibitor; and as to each such motion picture the "run" thereof, if any, granted the Exhibitor, shall be deemed revoked and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such motion picture after notice of the available date thereof upon the date or dates determined as provided in Clause Sixth hereof. If the Distributor does not elect to terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited, as provided in subdivision (a) of this paragraph, the Exhibitor shall account for all admissions to the said theatre during the exhibit of such motion picture on the basis of the respective admission prices above stipulated for each person admitted to the said theatre, at each performance of said motion picture, provided that if at any such performance any of the prices of admission are greater than the respective amounts above set forth, the Exhibitor shall account to the Distributor on the basis of such larger amounts. The Distributor shall also have the right to suspend all further deliveries of motion pictures to the Exhibitor until such scale of admission prices at the said theatre shall have been restored to at least the amounts above specified. The use of "two for ones", service passes or similar devices shall be construed as a reduction in admission.

(b) Run and Clearance Provisions

Clearance and run

Seventh: The Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the "run" or prior to the expiration of the "clearance period" if any in the Schedule specified at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of clearance as to each of said motion pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof licensed hereunder. If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such a clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened.

* * * *

Advertising prior to first run

Ninth: (a) If the Exhibitor is granted a subsequent run of any of the said motion pictures, the Exhibitor shall not advertise any thereof by any means of advertising, prior to or during the exhibition thereof by any exhibitor having the right to prior run thereof.

(b) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit the Exhibitor from advertising generally all of the feature motion pictures licensed for exhibition by the Exhibitor as a group, but such general advertising shall not refer to any one of said motion pictures at any time prior to its exhibition by any other exhibitor having first or immediately prior run thereof, excepting as hereinabove provided.

(c) The Exhibitor shall not advertise by any means of advertising any of said motion pictures which may be roadshown by the Distributor and not excepted and excluded from this license, until after the completion of such roadshowing in the United States, and then only as permitted in paragraph (a) of this Clause.

(d) For a breach of the provisions of this Clause the Distributor shall have in addition to all other rights the right to exclude from this license any motion picture advertised in violation of the provisions hereof by written notice to such effect mailed to the Exhibitor and upon the mailing of such notice the license of such motion picture shall terminate and revert to the Distributor.

B. Evolution of the Printed License Form

In the following pages the evolution of the printed form of license, as evidenced by the agreements introduced by the defendant Paramount, is shown with respect to (1) the initial licensing clause, (2) the run and clearance provisions, (3) the minimum admission price provisions, and (4) the provisions relating to auditing the exhibitor's receipts. The applicable provisions relating to each of these headings appearing in each of these forms is hereinafter set forth with the form's exhibit number and year in which it was used.

Same as Ex. P–15 (1942).

Ex. P–1, 1945 (R. 683)

License—First. Distributor grants Exhibitor, and Exhibitor accepts, a limited license under copyright of the motion pictures specified in the Schedule hereof and of any matter recorded therewith, to exhibit publicly said motion pictures and to reproduce the recorded sound in synchronism therewith at the said theatre for the number of days specified in the Schedule; on condition that, if copyrighted musical compositions are included in such recorded sound, Exhibitor will have at the date or dates of exhibition of such motion pictures a license from the copyright proprietor or the licensee thereof, to perform publicly the said musical compositions.

2. Run and Clearance Provisions

There were no printed run and clearance provisions in the 1917 form. The 1917 license in evidence, Ex. P–5, contains the following typewritten provision:

For the protection of the applicant no productions supplied under this contract shall be shown in any other theatre in the Back Bay Section for a period of two weeks after the Exeter St. Theatre, with the exception of the St. James Theatre, which can play these productions on the same day and date with the Exeter St. Theatre.

Ex. P–6, 1918 (R. 917)

In the 1918 application, Ex. P–6, the following statement appears:

It is understood that for the protection of the applicant, you will not supply any production included in said service for exhibition (within the period of.....days immediately succeeding the last day of exhibition of the same production by the applicant) in any other theatre within the following described territory:

Ex. P–7, 1923 (R. 926)

Tenth. During the life of this agreement the Distributor agrees not to authorize or license the exhibition of any of the photoplays above specified in violation of any protection or "run" clause contained in this contract.

The only other reference to run or clearance is the column heading in the schedule, "Consecutive Days Run".

Ex. R-8, 1926 (R. 927)

Run:

Protection Period. The Distributor agrees that during the period of .....days immediately succeeding the expiration of the period for which the said photoplay is licensed hereunder, the Distributor will not exhibit or permit the exhibition of said photoplay within the following described territory:.....

In addition to the provisions of Article "Fourteenth" hereof, the Exhibitor agrees not to advertise or announce in front of the theatre above named or in the lobby thereof or on the screen or by newspaper or by any other medium of advertising whatsoever, the exhibition of said photoplay until the theatre, or theatres named below shall have completed its or their exhibitions thereof:.....

* * *

Seventh. During the life of this contract the Distributor agrees not to authorize or license the exhibition of any such photoplays in violation of the "run" or "protection," period, if any, in the schedule specified. Unless otherwise provided herein such "protection" shall be computed from the first date of exhibition of each photoplay as fixed herein.

Run: Protection Period:

Protection and Run—Fourth. During the life of this contract the Distributor agrees not to exhibit or license the exhibition of any such photoplays in conflict with the "run" or "protection period," if any, in the Schedule specified. Unless otherwise provided herein, such "protection period" shall be computed from the last date of exhibition of each photoplay as fixed herein. If "protection" is granted hereunder against a specified theatre or theatres which "protection" shall indicate that it was the intention of the Distributor to grant such "protection" against all of the theatres in the immediate neighborhood or vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre, then, unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such "protection" shall be deemed to apply to and include any theatre that may hereafter be opened in such neighborhood or vicinity.

Ex. P-11, 1935 (R. 931)

Run: Clearance:

Clearance and Run—Seventh. The Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the "run" or prior to the expiration of the "clearance period" if any in the Schedule specified at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of clearance as to each of said motion pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof licensed hereunder. If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened.

Advertising Prior to First Run—Eighth. (a) If the Exhibitor is granted a subsequent run of the said motion pictures, the Exhibitor shall not advertise any thereof by any means of advertising prior to or during the exhibition of any one of said motion pictures by any other Exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof. Nothing in this Clause shall be deemed to prohibit the Exhibitor from advertising generally all of said motion pictures as a group but such general advertising shall not refer to any one of said motion pictures during its exhibition by any other exhibitor having the first or immediately prior run thereof, excepting as herein provided.

(b) The Exhibitor shall not advertise by any means of advertising any of said motion pictures which may be roadshown by the Distributor and not excepted and excluded from this license, until after the completion of such roadshowing in the United States, and then only as permitted in paragraph (a) of this Clause.

(c) For a breach of the provisions of this Clause the Distributor shall have in addition to all other rights, the right to exclude from this license any motion picture advertised in violation of the provisions hereof by written notice to such effect mailed to the Exhibitor and upon the mailing of such notice the license of such motion picture shall terminate and revert to the Distributor, unless arbitration is herein provided for and immediately upon the receipt of any such notice of exclusion the Exhibitor by written notice given to the Distributor shall deny breaching any of the provisions of this Clause, in which case the question of fact raised by such denial shall be determined by arbitration.

First Run Exhibitions—Fifteenth. (a) If the Exhibitor is granted a first run of the said motion pictures, the Exhibitor shall exhibit each of the feature motion pictures excepting those described in Paragraph (d) of this Clause within the period beginning with the date scheduled and announced by the Distributor for the general release of each feature motion picture in the territory wherein is located the exchange of the Distributor out of which the Exhibitor is served and ending one hundred and twenty (120) days thereafter, notwithstanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the first exhibition date of any of the said motion pictures shall occur on a date later than ninety (90) days after its scheduled and announced general release date, then the period of clearance of such motion picture shall be reduced so as to expire one hundred and twenty (120) days after said scheduled date of its general release. If the Exhibitor is granted a first run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said period of one hundred and twenty (120) days, the grant of the said first run and the clearance period in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the Distributor, with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in Paragraph (e) of this Clause provided.

Second Run Exhibitions. (b) If the Exhibitor is granted a second run of the said motion pictures and any other exhibitor having been granted the first run thereof immediately prior to such second run fails to exhibit any of the feature motion pictures, excepting those described in Paragraph (d) of this Clause within the said period of one hundred and twenty (120) days specified in Paragraph (a) of this Clause, the Exhibitor shall exhibit each such feature motion picture within the period beginning with the date of the expiration of the said one hundred and twenty (120) days period and ending fourteen (14) days thereafter, notwithshtanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the Exhibitor is granted a second run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said fourteen (14) days period the grant of such second run and the clearance period if any in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the Distributor with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in Paragraph (e) of this Clause provided.

Subsequent Runs Exhibitions. (c) If the Exhibitor is granted a run subsequent to a second run of the said motion pictures and any other Exhibitor having been granted the second run thereof immediately prior to such subsequent run fails to exhibit any of the feature motion pictures, excepting those described in Paragraph (d) of this Clause within the said period of fourteen (14) days specified in Paragraph (b) of this Clause the Exhibitor shall exhibit each feature motion picture within the period beginning with the date of the expiration of the said fourteen day period and ending seven (7) days thereafter, notwithstanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the Exhibitor is granted a run subsequent to a second run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said seven (7) day period, the grant of such subsequent run and the clearance period if any in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the Distributor with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in this Clause provided.

Extended Runs. (d) Any of the motion pictures which shall have been exhibited at any theatre in the said territory for more than one show week prior to the run granted the Exhibitor shall be excepted from the provisions of this Clause and of Paragraph (b) of Clause Fourth.

Exhibition After Revocation of Run and Clearance. (e) Upon the waiver of the grant of the run and/or the clearance period of any feature motion picture as provided in Paragraphs (a), (b) or (c) of this Clause, the Exhibitor upon payment of the sum or sums payable hereunder as provided in this Clause for the license to exhibit such feature motion picture, shall have the right to exhibit the same hereunder upon a date or dates not in conflict with any run and/or clearance period granted or hereafter granted to other exhibitors, upon written request mailed or delivered to the Distributor within sixty (60) days after the last date upon which such feature motion picture should have been exhibited by the Exhibitor as provided in this Clause. Failing to make such request within said period of sixty (60) days the license to exhibit such feature motion picture granted hereunder shall terminate and revert to the Distributor.

If the provisions of this Clause shall in anywise be in conflict with the provisions of any other license agreement made and entered into by the Distributor with any other exhibitor prior to September 1, 1935, the provisions of this Clause shall be deemed to be subordinate and subject to the provisions of such other license agreement.

Ex. P–14, 1941 (R. 1867)

Run: Clearance:

If the Exhibitor is granted hereunder a second or subsequent run, the same shall not be exclusive unless otherwise specified in this Schedule, and the Distributor shall have the right to license as many of the same runs and as many prior and subsequent runs as it may desire. If so required by the Distributor, the Exhibitor shall exhibit any motion picture licensed hereunder for an earlier run than herein provided.

* * *

Clearance and Run—Seventh. (a) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (b) of this Article, the Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the run or prior to the expiration of the clearance period if any in the Schedule specified at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of clearance as to each of said motion pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof licensed hereunder, disregarding any "road-show," "try-outs" or "preview," or special "midnight" exhibition. If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened.

(b) The Distributor shall have the right to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures as a "road-show," "try-out" or "preview" or special "midnight" exhibition at any time prior to the exhibition thereof hereunder. Any such "road-show," "try-out" or "preview" or special "midnight" exhibition shall not be deemed a run of such motion picture, nor shall the run, availability or clearance provided herein with respect to such motion picture be governed thereby.

Advertising Prior to Run—Eighth. (a) The Exhibitor shall not advertise by any means of advertising any of said motion pictures which may be roadshown by the Distributor until after the completion of such roadshowing in the United States.

(b) If the Exhibitor is granted a second or subsequent run of the said motion pictures, the Exhibitor shall not advertise any thereof by any means of advertising prior to or during the exhibition of any one of said motion pictures by any other exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof in the same city, town or zone.

(c) For a breach of the provisions of this Article the Distributor shall have in addition to all other rights the right to exclude from this license any motion picture advertised in violation of the provisions hereof by written notice to such effect mailed to the Exhibitor and upon the mailing of such notice the license of such motion picture shall terminate and revert to the Distributor.

Run: Clearance:

Clearance and Run—EIGHTH. (a) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (b) of this Article, Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the run or clearance, if any, specified in the Schedule. Clearance as to each of said motion pictures shall be computed from the last date of exhibition thereof licensed hereunder. If clearance is granted against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of Exhibitor's theatre, then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such clearance shall include theatres in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened.

(b) Distributor shall have the right to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures as a "roadshow," "try-out" or "preview" or special "midnight" exhibition at any time prior to the exhibition thereof hereunder. Any such exhibition shall not be deemed a run of said motion picture, nor shall the run, availability or clearance provided herein with respect to said motion picture be governed thereby or computed therefrom.

(c) If Exhibitor is granted a second or subsequent run, the same shall not be exclusive unless so expressly specified in the Schedule and Distributor may license as many of the same runs and as many prior and subsequent runs as it may desire. If Distributor so requires, Exhibitor shall exhibit any motion picture licensed hereunder for an earlier run than herein provided.

Advertising prior to run—Ninth. (a) Exhibitor shall not advertise by any means any of said motion pictures if roadshown by Distributor, until after completion of such roadshowing in the United States.

(b) If Exhibitor is granted a second or subsequent run of said motion pictures Exhibitor shall not advertise any thereof by any means, prior to or during the exhibition of any of said motion pictures by any other exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof in the same city, town or zone.

(c) Distributor shall have in addition to all other rights and remedies the right to exclude from this license any motion picture advertised in violation of the provisions hereof, by mailing written notice to Exhibitor and upon such mailing the license of said motion picture shall terminate and revert to Distributor.

3. Admission Price Provisions

Ex. P–5, 1917 (R. 916)

Contains no provision respecting admission prices.

(b)

Ex. P–6, 1918 (R. 917)

Application contains a representation which reads as follows:

Applicant agrees to charge following admission prices for "Paramount Pictures":

Minimum.....¢

Maximum.....¢

(c)

Ex. P–7, 1923 (R. 926)

Second: The Exhibitor shall charge an actual minimum admission fee of .....cents..... at said theatre on the dates when said photoplays shall be exhibited thereat.

(d)

Ex. P–8, 1926 (R. 927)

The Exhibitor agrees to charge the following minimum prices for admission to said theatre during entire period of exhibition of said photoplay:

Matinee: Adults, Boxes..... Orch..... Balcony ..... Children, Boxes....., Orch..... Balcony.....

Evening: Adults, Boxes..... Orch..... Balcony ..... Children, Boxes..... Orch....., Balcony.....

Any free list of the theatre shall be suspended during the exhibition of the said photoplay hereunder, and no passes or reduced or gratuitous admission shall be allowed unless expressly and specifically provided for in this contract.

If the Exhibitor charges less than the admission prices herein stipulated, the Exhibitor shall account for all admission to the said theatre during the exhibition of such photoplay on the basis of the prices hereinabove stipulated.

Seventeenth. The Exhibitor warrants and agrees that during the period each of the photoplays herein provided for shall be exhibited in said theatre the Exhibitor will charge for admission to said theatre an actual admission fee which shall not be less than ten cents, unless a greater admission charge is herein elsewhere specified, for each exhibition and that such photoplays shall not be exhibited unless such admission fee is charged.

Ex. P-12, 1928 (R. 943)

The Exhibitor agrees to charge minimum admission prices to said theatre on the respective exhibition dates thereat of the photoplays licensed hereunder as follows:

Evenings: Adults, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....
Children, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....
Matinees: Adults, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....
Children, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....

Minimum Admission Charge—Twelfth. The Exhibitor warrants and agrees that during the period each of the photoplays herein provided for shall be exhibited in said theatre the Exhibitor will charge for admission to said theatre an actual admission fee which shall not be less than ten cents, unless a greater minimum admission charge is herein elsewhere specified, for each exhibition and that such photoplays shall not be exhibited unless such admission fee is charged.

(f)

Ex. P–11, 1935 (R. 931)

The Exhibitor agrees to charge minimum admission prices per person to said theatre on the respective exhibition dates thereat of the motion pictures licensed hereunder as follows:

Evenings (after 6 P. M.): Adults, Orchestra ..... Balcony ..... Children, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....

Matinees (before 6 P. M.): Adults, Orchestra ..... Balcony ..... Children, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....

If during any such period less than said admission prices is charged, the Distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right: (a) to immediately terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited and/or of all the remaining motion pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such motion picture and/or motion pictures shall forthwith terminate and revert to the Distributor and the Distributor may, at its option, declare such failure or refusal a breach of the entire contract entitling the Distributor to recover from the Exhibitor as damages therefor the license fees payable in respect of all motion pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder; or (b) provided the exhibitor is granted herein a period of "clearance" to reduce such period by not to exceed one-half in respect to each of the motion pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) provided no period of "clearance" is specified in the Schedule to withhold for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days notice of the date when each motion picture thereafter deliverable hereunder will be available for exhibition by the Exhibitor; and as to each such motion picture the "run" thereof, if any, granted the Exhibitor, shall be deemed revoked and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such motion picture after notice of the available date thereof upon the date or dates determined as provided in Clause Sixth hereof; and (d) if the license fee of any such motion picture is to be computed either in whole or in part upon a percentage of the gross admission receipts of said theatre, then the Exhibitor shall account to the Distributor for all admissions to said theatre during the exhibition of such motion picture upon the basis of the said admission prices specified above.

Roadshows—Seventeenth. (a) The Distributor shall have the right to exhibit and/or cause to be exhibited as a "roadshow," at any time prior to the exhibition thereof hereunder, such of the motion pictures licensed hereunder as the Distributor may from time to time select and determine, provided, however, that such roadshow exhibitions shall be at theatres at which admission prices for evening performances, during such exhibitions thereof, of not less than one ($1) dollar shall be charged for the majority of the orchestra seats, and further provided that, except in the cities of New York and Los Angeles, not more than two of such motion pictures shall be so roadshown.

(b) If and when any such roadshow exhibition shall be in the City of New York and/or the City of Los Angeles, and if the Exhibitor's theatre is situated in the territory then served by the Distributor's exchange or exchanges located in New York or in Los Angeles, as the case may be, the Distributor shall have the right to except and exclude from this license not to exceed two of such motion pictures so roadshown in each or both of said territories, upon sending to the Exhibitor written notice to such effect not later than four (4) weeks after the commencement of such roadshow exhibition and provided that the Distributor shall by like notice except and exclude such motion picture from all other license agreements containing this Clause and licensing the exhibition of such motion picture in such territory. The exception and exclusion of any such motion picture in the territory then served by the Distributor's exchange or exchanges located in the City of Los Angeles, or in the City of New York, as the case may be, shall not be deemed to require the Distributor to except and exclude the same motion picture in both of said territories.

Ex. P–14, 1941 (R. 1867).

The Exhibitor agrees to charge minimum admission prices per person to said theatre on the respective exhibition dates thereat of the motion pictures licensed hereunder as follows:

Evenings (After 6 P. M.): Adults, Orchestra..... Balcony ..... Children, Orchestra ..... Balcony .....

Matinees (Before 6 P. M.): Adults, Orchestra..... Balcony..... Children, Orchestra..... Balcony.....

If during any such period less than said admission prices is charged; the Distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right: (a) to immediately terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited and of all the remaining motion pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such motion pictures shall forthwith terminate and revert to the Distributor and the Distributor may, at its option, declare such failure or refusal a breach of the entire contract entitling the Distributor to recover from the Exhibitor as damages therefor the license fees payable in respect of all motion pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder; or (b) forthwith to revoke the run, availability and clearance, if any, herein provided for and to fix the run, availability and clearance applicable to each motion picture thereafter deliverable hereunder, and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such motion picture in accordance with the run, availability and clearance so fixed; and (c) if the license fee of any such motion picture is to be computed either in whole or in part upon a percentage of the gross admission receipts of said theatre, then the Exhibitor shall account to the Distributor for all admissions to said theatre during the exhibition of such motion picture upon the basis of the said admission prices specified above. The Exhibitor shall not be entitled hereunder to any change in the run, availability or clearance, if any, herein provided for by reason of any increase in admission prices at said theatre after the signing of this application by the Exhibitor.

It is expressly understood and agreed that the above minimum admission prices are exclusive of any State, Federal or local taxes which now are or may be imposed upon admission to the theatre or theatres licensed hereunder.

Ex. P–15, 1942 (R. 1868)

Same as Ex. P–14 (1935).

(i)

Ex. P–16, 1944 (R. 1868)

Same as Ex. P–14 (1935) and Ex. P–15 (1942).

Ex. P–1, 1945 (R. 683)

The minimum admission prices per person (excluding federal, state or local taxes) to said theatre on the respective exhibition dates of the motion pictures licensed hereunder shall be as follows:

Evenings (After 6 P. M.): Adults, Orchestra..... Balcony..... Children, Orchestra..... Balcony.....

Matinees (Before 6 P. M.): Adults, Orchestra..... Balcony..... Children, Orchestra..... Balcony.....

If the license fee of any such motion picture is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the gross receipts of said theatre and if Exhibitor charges less than said minimum admission prices, Exhibitor shall nevertheless account to Distributor for admissions to said theatre during the exhibition of such motion picture upon the basis of the minimum admission prices above provided.

If Exhibitor charges less than said minimum admission prices, Distributor may forthwith revoke the run, availability and clearance, if any, herein provided for and fix the run, availability and clearance applicable to each motion picture hereunder, and Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such motion picture in accordance with the run, availability and clearance so fixed. Exhibitor shall not be entitled to any change in the run, availability or clearance, if any, herein provided for because of any increase in admission prices at said theatre after the signing of this application by Exhibitor.

4. Provisions For Auditing Exhibitor's Receipts

Ex. P–5, 1917 (R. 916)

Contained no such provision.

Ex. P–7, 1923 (R. 926)

Sixteenth. If this contract calls for payments computed upon the Exhibitor's gross receipts, the Exhibitor shall furnish to the Distributor daily a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for admission thereto upon the play dates of said photoplays, upon forms supplied by the Distributor should the latter so demand; and the Distributor shall have access at all reasonable times for the purpose of inspection to the box office and to all books and records relating to the Exhibitor's box office receipts during the period of exhibition of said photoplays.

Ex. P–8, 1926 (R. 927)

Fifth. If this contract calls for payment or any part thereof computed upon the Exhibitor's gross receipts the Exhibitor shall furnish to the Distributor daily a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for admission thereto upon the exhibition date or dates of each photoplay for which payment is so required to be made. Should the Distributor so require, such itemized statement shall be made upon forms furnished by the Distributor.

The Distributor shall have access during the period of exhibition of each such photoplay and for a period of sixty (60) days after the receipt by the Distributor of the final box office statement, for the purpose of inspection, to the box office and to all books and records relating to the Exhibitor's box office receipts during the period of exhibition of each such photoplay.

Payment or any part thereof computed upon the Exhibitor's box office receipts shall be made daily during the exhibition of the print of each photoplay for which payment is so required to be made.

Ex. P-12, 1928 (R. 943)

Percentage Bookings. If this contract calls for payment or any part thereof computed upon the Exhibitor's gross receipts, such payment or any part thereof shall be made daily, together with a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for admission thereto upon the exhibition date or dates of each photoplay for which payment is so required to be made. Should the Distributor so require, such itemized statement shall be made upon forms furnished by the Distributor. Upon such date or dates an authorized representative of the Distributor is hereby given the right to verify the sale of all tickets of admission to said theatre, and the receipts therefrom; and for such purpose shall have access to the theatre, including the box office, and also the right to examine the Exhibitor's books and records insofar as they relate to such gross receipts. The Distributor, or its authorized representative, shall also have access for a period of sixty (60) days after the receipt by the Distributor of the final box office statement, to all of the Exhibitor's books and records for the purpose of verifying such box office statement. The Distributor agrees that any information obtained by it pursuant to the provisions of this Clause will be treated as confidential, except in any arbitration proceeding or litigation in respect of this contract. The Distributor agrees, unless such representative be a regular employee of the Distributor, not to employ, as such representative any person a resident of, or regularly employed in the place where the Exhibitor's theatre is located, excepting with the consent of the Exhibitor.

(b) Percentage Bookings. If the rental of any of such motion pictures is to be determined either in whole or in part upon the admission receipts of said theatre or any part thereof, the Exhibitor agrees to pay such rental immediately after the last exhibition upon the last date of the exhibition of each such motion picture or if requested by the Distributor at the end of each day's exhibition. In each such case the Exhibitor shall deliver to the Distributor immediately after the last exhibition upon each date of exhibition of each such motion picture a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for admission thereto upon each such date. Such statement shall be signed by the Exhibitor or the Manager or Treasurer of said theatre and the Cashier thereof and shall include a statement of such facts and figures as may be provided in the Schedule to be furnished by the Exhibitor, and if requested by the Distributor, shall be made upon forms furnished by the Distributor. Upon the exhibition date or dates of each motion picture an authorized representative of the Distributor is hereby given the right to verify the sale of all tickets of admission to said theatre, and the receipts therefrom; and for such purpose shall have access to the theatre, including the box office, and also the right to examine all relevant entries relating to such gross receipts in all the Exhibitor's books and records, and if hereunder it is provided that the Exhibitor make certain expenditures and/or deductions, to examine all entries relating to such expenditures and/or deductions. Such right of access and examination of the Exhibitor's books and records limited as aforesaid, shall continue for a period of four (4) months after the receipt by the Distributor of each such statement. The Distributor agrees, unless such representative is in the continuous employ of the Distributor or employed as a checker, not to employ as a representative for such purpose any person a resident of or employed in the place where the said theatre is located, other than a person engaged in business as an accountant. The Distributor agrees that any information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this clause will be treated as confidential, excepting in any arbitration proceeding or litigation in respect to this license.

(c) Liquidated Damages—Percentage Bookings. If the Exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit any of said motion pictures as herein provided and the rental or any part thereof is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre, the Exhibitor shall pay the Distributor as liquidated damages for each day the Exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit such motion pictures, in addition to any fixed sums payable hereunder in respect of such motion picture, a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre on each date any feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited thereat during the period of ninety (90) days prior to the date or dates when said motion picture should have been so exhibited hereunder, or if no feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited at such theatre during said ninety day period, then a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre during the period of thirty operating days immediately prior to the date or dates when such motion pictures should have been exhibited, or prior to the date of such failure or refusal to exhibit any of said motion pictures; provided that if the Exhibitor shall exhibit such motion pictures for less than the full number of days provided for in the Schedule, for each day less than said full number of days, the sum equal to such percentage shall be computed upon a sum equal to sixty-five (65%) of the gross receipts of said theatre during the last day of the exhibition thereat of such motion picture. A sworn statement of the said daily gross receipts shall be delivered by the Exhibitor to the Distributor upon demand therefor.

Ex. P-14, 1941 (R. 1867)

(b) Percentage Bookings. If the license fee for any of such motion pictures is to be determined either in whole or in part upon the admission receipts of said theatre, or any part thereof, the Exhibitor agrees to pay such license fee immediately after the last exhibition upon the last date of the exhibition of each such motion picture, or if requested by the Distributor, at the end of each day's exhibition. In each such case the Exhibitor shall deliver to the Distributor immediately after the last exhibition upon each date of exhibition of each such motion picture a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for admission thereto upon each such date. Such statement shall be signed by the Exhibitor or the Manager or Treasurer of said theatre and the Cashier thereof and shall include a statement of such facts and figures as may be provided in the Schedule to be furnished by the Exhibitor, and if requested by the Distributor, shall be made upon forms furnished by the Distributor. Upon the exhibition date or dates of each motion picture an authorized representative of the Distributor is hereby given the right to verify the sale of all tickets of admission to said theatre, and the receipts therefrom; and for such purpose shall have access to the theatre, including the box office, and also the right to examine all relevant entries relating to such gross receipts in all the Exhibitor's books and records, and if hereunder it is provided that the Exhibitor make certain expenditures or deductions, to examine all entries relating to such expenditures or deductions. It is further agreed that if the Exhibitor's operating expense is an element in the computation of the license fees payable to the Distributor hereunder, the right herein granted to the Distributor to audit the Exhibitor's books and records shall include the right to examine all of such books and records relating to the Exhibitor's operating expenses. Such right of access and examination of the Exhibitor's books and records limited as aforesaid, shall continue for a period of one (1) year after the receipt by the Distributor of each such statement. The Distributor agrees that any information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph will be treated as confidential, excepting in any arbitration proceedings or litigation in respect to this license. It is agreed that the acceptance by the Distributor of any sum tendered by the Exhibitor in full payment of any license fee payable hereunder, based upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre, shall not estop or prevent the Distributor from thereafter disputing the correctness of such payment. It is further agreed that any and all sums of money accruing to the Distributor hereunder as its share of the gross receipts during the exhibition of any motion picture hereunder, shall be held by the Exhibitor in trust for the Distributor until payment thereof to the Distributor as hereinbefore provided.

(c) Liquidated Damages—Failure to Exhibit. If the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to exhibit any of said motion pictures as provided herein, then and in such event, the Exhibitor shall pay as liquidated damages a sum equal to the fixed sum or sums herein specified as the license fee for each such motion picture, and if the license fee or any part thereof is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre, the Exhibitor shall pay the Distributor as liquidated damages for each day the Exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit such motion pictures, in addition to any fixed sums payable hereunder in respect of such motion pictures, a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre on each date any feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited thereat during the period of ninety (90) days prior to the date or dates when said motion picture should have been so exhibited hereunder, or if no feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited at such theatre during said ninety (90) day period, then a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre during the period of thirty (30) operating days immediately prior to the date or dates when such motion pictures should have been exhibited, or prior to the date of such failure or refusal to exhibit any of said motion pictures; provided that if the Exhibitor shall exhibit such motion pictures for less than the full number of days provided for in the Schedule, for each day less than said full number of days, the sum equal to such percentage shall be computed upon a sum equal to seventy-five (75%) percent, of the gross receipts of said theatre during the last day of the exhibition thereat of such motion picture. A sworn statement of the said daily gross receipts shall be delivered by the Exhibitor to the Distributor upon demand therefor.

Ex. P–15, 1942 (R. 1868)

(b) Percentage Bookings. If the license fee for any of such motion pictures is to be determined either in whole or in part upon the admission receipts of said theatre, or any part thereof, the Exhibitor agrees to pay such license fee immediately after the last exhibition upon the last date of the exhibition of each such motion picture, or if requested by the Distributor, at the end of each day's exhibition. In each such case the Exhibitor shall deliver to the Distributor immediately after the last exhibition upon each date of exhibition of each such motion picture a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for admission thereto upon each such date. Such statement shall be signed by the Exhibitor or the Manager or Treasurer of said theatre and the Cashier thereof and shall include a statement of such facts and figures as may be provided in the Schedule to be furnished by the Exhibitor, and if requested by the Distributor, shall be made upon forms furnished by the Distributor. Upon the exhibition date or dates of each motion picture an authorized representative of the Distributor is hereby given the right to verify the sale of all tickets of admission to said theatre, and the receipts therefrom; and at any time after the conclusion of the engagement of each such motion picture, the Distributor's authorized representative shall have the right to audit all of the Exhibitor's books and records pertaining to the exhibition of such motion picture, the admissions to said theatre and the receipts therefrom; and for such purpose the Distributor's authorized representative shall have access to the theatre, including the box office, and also the right to examine all relevant entries relating to such gross receipts in all the Exhibitor's books and records, and if hereunder it is provided that the Exhibitor make certain expenditures or deductions, to examine all entries relating to such expenditures or deductions. It is further agreed that if the Exhibitor's operating expense is an element in the computation of the license fees payable to the Distributor hereunder, the right herein granted to the Distributor to audit the Exhibitor's books and records shall include the right to examine all of such books and records relating to the Exhibitor's operating expenses. In computing the Exhibitor's operating expenses, all income payable to the Exhibitor, such as amounts from renting or sub-renting space in the theatre building or for screen advertising in the theatre, etc., during the engagement of any motion picture licensed hereunder, the license fee for which is based in whole or in part upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre, shall be deducted from the Exhibitor's operating expenses. The Distributor agrees that any information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph will be treated as confidential, excepting in any arbitration proceeding or litigation in respect to this license. It is agreed that the acceptance by the Distributor of any sum tendered by the Exhibitor in full payment of any license fee payable hereunder, based upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre, shall not estop or prevent the Distributor from thereafter disputing the correctness of such payment. It is further agreed that any and all sums of money accruing to the Distributor hereunder as its share of the gross receipts during the exhibition of any motion picture hereunder, shall be held by the Exhibitor in trust for the Distributor until payment thereof to the Distributor as hereinbefore provided.

(c) Liquidated Damages—Failure to Exhibit. If the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to exhibit any of said motion pictures as provided herein, then and in such event, the Exhibitor shall pay as liquidated damages a sum equal to the fixed sum or sums herein specified as the license fee for each such motion picture, and if the license fee or any part thereof is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre, the Exhibitor shall pay the Distributor as liquidated damages for each day the Exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit such motion picture, in addition to any fixed sums payable hereunder in respect of such motion picture, a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre on each date any feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited thereat during the period of ninety (90) days prior to the date or dates when said motion picture should have been so exhibited hereunder, or if no feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited at such theatre during said ninety (90) day period, then a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre during the period of thirty (30) operating days immediately prior to the date or dates when such motion picture should have been exhibited, or prior to the date of such failure or refusal to exhibit said motion picture; provided that if the Exhibitor shall exhibit said motion picture for less than the full number of days provided for in the Schedule, for each day less than said full number of days, the sum equal to such percentage shall be computed upon a sum equal to seventy-five (75%) percent of the gross receipts of said theatre during the last day of the exhibition thereat of said motion picture. A sworn statement of the said daily gross receipts shall be delivered by the Exhibitor to the Distributor upon demand therefor.

Ex. P–16, 1944 (R. 1868)

Same as Ex. P–15 (1942).

Ex. P–1, 1945 (R. 683)

(b). Percentage Bookings. If the license fee for any of said motion pictures is to be determined in whole or in part upon all or any part of the gross admission receipts (herein referred to as gross receipts) of said theatre, Exhibitor shall pay the percentage part of such license fee immediately after the last exhibition date of each such motion picture respectively, or if requested by Distributor, at the end of each day's exhibition. Exhibitor shall deliver to Distributor immediately after the last exhibition of each respective motion picture a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for each date of exhibition, upon forms furnished by the Distributor, signed by Exhibitor or the Manager or Treasurer and the Cashier of said theatre. The statement shall include such facts and figures as may be provided in the Schedule to be furnished by Exhibitor. Distributor is hereby given the right to verify, upon the exhibition date or dates of each motion picture, all admissions to said theatre, and the receipts therefrom; and at any time or times after the conclusion of the engagement of each motion picture Distributor shall have the right to audit all of Exhibitor's books, records and vouchers pertaining to the exhibition of such motion picture, the admissions to said theatre and the receipts therefrom, and pertaining to any expenditures or deductions provided hereunder to be made by Exhibitor, and if Exhibitor's operating expense is an element in computing the license fees payable hereunder, pertaining to such operating expenses. The right of verification and the right to audit may be exercised by Distributor through its authorized representatives. For said purposes Distributor and its authorized representatives shall have free access, on and after said exhibition dates, to the theatre, box office, ticket machines, tickets, stubs, books, records and vouchers. Distributor agrees that any information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph shall be treated as confidential excepting in any arbitration proceedings or litigation. Acceptance by Distributor of any sum tendered by Exhibitor in full or part payment of any license fee based upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre shall not estop or prevent Distributor from thereafter disputing the correctness of such payment.

(c) Liquidated Damages—Failure to Exhibit. If Exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit any of said motion pictures as provided herein, Exhibitor shall pay as liquidated damages a sum equal to the fixed sum herein specified as the license fee for each such motion picture, and if the license fee is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the gross receipts of said theatre, Exhibitor shall pay Distributor as liquidated damages for each day Exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit such motion picture, in addition to any fixed sums payable hereunder in respect of such motion picture, a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre on each date any feature motion picture distributed by Distributor was exhibited thereat during the period of ninety (90) days prior to the date or dates when said motion picture should have been so exhibited hereunder, or if no feature motion picture distributed by Distributor was exhibited at such theatre during said ninety (90) day period, then a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre during the period of thirty (30) operating days prior to the date or dates when such motion picture should have been exhibited. Upon demand therefor, Exhibitor shall deliver to Distributor a statement of said daily gross receipts, sworn by Exhibitor to be correct. If Exhibitor shall exhibit said motion picture for less than the full number of days provided for in the Schedule, for each day less than said full number of days, the sum equal to such percentage shall be computed upon a sum equal to seventy-five (75) percent of the gross receipts of said theatre during the last day of the exhibition thereat of said motion picture.

C. Examples of Licenses Used by Defendants in Dealing with Each Other

1. Paramount formula deal with Fox subsidiary, Evergreen Theatres Corporation (Ex. 241, R. 269).

Agreement made this 5th day of June 1944, by and between Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, hereinafter called the "Distributor," party of the first part, and Evergreen Theatres Corporation, as agent for the various motion picture exhibition companies affiliated or associated with said Evergreen Theatres Corporation and operating the various theatres listed in Schedule "A" annexed hereto, hereinafter called the "Exhibitor," party of the second part, witnesseth:

First. (a) Distributor, subject to the terms and conditions hereinafter specified, grants to the Exhibitor a license under the respective copyrights of the motion pictures (hereinafter called "photoplays") licensed hereunder, to exhibit in the theatres listed in the annexed Schedule "A," hereby made a part hereof, for the respective runs designated therein, the following photoplays.

Going My Way

The Exhibitor hereby accepts such license and agrees to fully and faithfully comply with all the terms and conditions hereof.

(b) It is the intention and agreement of the parties hereto that the license granted herein is for the exhibition of said photoplays in the theatres and on the runs specified in Schedule "A" for such playing time in each theatre as may be determined by the Exhibitor. Such license to the Exhibitor shall include, without limiting the generality of the foregoing the right to exhibit the said photplays at Midnight Shows, preview (not "Studio" previews) and on repeat engagements. In further reference to said Midnight Shows, previews and repeat engagements, it is understood and agreed that such privilege shall be granted only in such cases where the exhibition of the photoplay will not interfere with the clearance or run granted to any other Exhibitor on such photoplay. In further reference to repeat engagements, such exhibition shall be permitted only as the last run in the zone or territory in which the particular theatre is situated, provided that such Photoplay has not been withdrawn from release nationally, and provided further that a serviceable print is available at the Exchange serving the theatres under this Agreement.

(c) The Distributor agrees to deliver to the Exhibitor prints of each of the photoplays licensed hereunder sufficient in number to enable the Exhibitor to exhibit each such photoplay in each of the theatres listed in Schedule "A" on the fun set forth in such Schedule, on the date or dates of exhibition selected by the Exhibitor; except in those situations which have the right to exhibit the photoplays upon national release date, the Distributor agrees to assign to the Exchange the number of prints presently being served to that exchange, and the Distributor agrees to make available at least the same number of prints that were served to the Exhibitor for such situations for the motion picture season 1940–1941.

(d) For the purpose of this agreement, a photoplay shall be deemed to have been "generally released" after it has been publicly exhibited in ten (10) or more situations throughout the United States at admission prices usually charged for admission to the theatres where so exhibited, excluding roadshows and preview exhibitions, if any.

Second. For the license herein granted, the Exhibitor agrees to pay license fees for each of such motion pictures, as follows:

If the total license fees (including all amounts payable hereunder by the Exhibitor after final computation hereinafter explained) paid to the Distributor for license for the exhibition of each such photoplay in the United States (including Honolulu) during the first eighteen (18) months following the "general release" of each such photoplay shall be:

1. in excess of $1,250,000.00, the Exhibitor shall pay as a license fee for such photoplay 0.74778 percent of such total license fees;

2. equal to or in excess of $500,000.00, but not in excess of $1,250,000.00 the Exhibitor shall pay as a license fee for such photoplay 0.70115 percent of such total license fees;

3. less than $500,000.00, the Exhibitor shall pay as a license fee for such photoplay 0.65431 percent of such total license fees.

Such license fee shall be computed and paid in the following manner:

(a) Within seven (7) days after the date of general release as fixed by the Distributor in the United States of each such photoplay licensed hereunder, the Distributor shall estimate the total license fee (including amounts payable hereunder by the Exhibitor) expected to be paid to it for license for the exhibition of each such photoplay in the United States (including Honolulu) (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "first estimate"). The Exhibitor shall pay to the Distributor an amount equal to the proper percentage, as provided herein, of such estimated total license fees in equal weekly installments of One-Seventeenth (1/17) of such amount on the first business day of each consecutive week following the date of general release of each such photoplay, the first of which payments shall be made on the first business day of the second week of general release.

(b) During the sixteenth (16th) week following the date of general release of each such photoplay, the Distributor shall again estimate the total license fees (including amounts payable hereunder by the Exhibitor) expected to be paid to it for licenses for the exhibition of such photoplay in the United States (including Honolulu) (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "second estimate"). If the second estimate shall be greater than the first estimate, the Exhibitor shall pay simultaneously with the seventeenth (17th) installment payable hereunder, an amount representing the difference between the amount payable in accordance with the first estimate and the amount payable in accordance with the second estimate. If the second estimate shall be less than the first estimate, the Distributor shall forthwith refund to the Exhibitor such amount as shall represent the difference between the first and second estimate, or reduce the amount of the last installment, as the case may be.

(c) During the twentieth (20th) month following the date of general release of each such photoplay, the Distributor agrees to furnish the Exhibitor with a statement prepared by Price, Waterhouse and Company, its present auditor, or such public accounting firm as shall then be engaged by the Distributor for the preparation of its financial statements, which statement shall indicate the total license fees paid to the Distributor for licenses for the exhibition of each such photoplay in the United States (including Honolulu), and shall be certified by said Price, Waterhouse and Company, or its successor, to be correct (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "final computation"). Not later than thirty (30) days after such final computation the Exhibitor shall pay any additional sum required to be paid, or the Distributor shall refund to the Exhibitor any excess payment made by it, as the case may be in accordance with the aforesaid statement so rendered, so that the adjusted total payment made hereunder by the Exhibitor shall equal the proper percentage as provided herein of the said total license fees (including amount payable hereunder by the Exhibitor) as set forth in such final computation.

Third. The clearance and availability with respect to the theatres licensed hereunder shall be the same as are in effect at the date hereof unless otherwise noted on Schedule "A" attached hereto.

Fourth. Other terms and provisions of the license herein granted are set forth on Schedule "B" annexed hereto and made a part hereof, provided, however, that wherever the terms and provisions of said Schedule "B" are in conflict or inconsistent or at variance with the terms and provisions contained herein, then, and in such event, the provisions of this agreement shall govern and apply.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have signed and sealed this agreement the day and year first above written.

2. Franchise for Universal films in theatres of Paramount subsidiary, Interstate Circuit, Inc. (Ex. 261, R. 271).

Agreement Covering Universal Product Season 1941/42—1942/43—1943/44 Between Interstate Circuit, Inc.—Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., Dallas, Texas and Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., of New York, New York.

1. The following agreement is entered into between Interstate Circuit, Inc., Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., herewith called the Exhibitor and Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., of Dallas, Texas, herein called the Distributor, for Universal features, shorts, serials and News product for the seasons 1941/42, 1942/43, and 1943/44.

2. The Exhibitor as above set forth operating theatres in the towns listed on the attached sheet marked Exhibit "A" agrees to pay the Distributor the sum of $260,000.00 payable at the rate of $5,000.00 a week for 52 consecutive weeks commencing week ending September 4th, 1941. It is understood that these payments are for the following units of service which are to be distributed by Universal Pictures, Inc.

44 regularly released Universal Feature Pictures.
3 Frank Lloyd Productions.
7 action pictures (Foran-Devine).
7 Jack Mack Brown westerns.
1 2-reel special short.
69 reels short subjects.
2 serials in each situation (excluding 1st run Houston, substituting privilege four 1st run San Antonio) to be selected from Universal's total serial releases each year.
Universal News service as listed in Paragraph #4.

3: It is understood and agreed that the distributor shall deliver prior to October 30, 1942 the minimum of feature, serial, short and newsreel product listed above. Should the distributor deliver less than the total number of (44) regular features as designated above, the exhibitor is to be entitled to a credit of three thousand seven hundred fifty dollars ($3,750.00) for each regular feature not so delivered. In the event the three Frank Lloyd productions are not delivered, exhibitor is to be entitled to a credit of eight thousand dollars ($8,000.00) for each Lloyd production not so delivered. In the event a lesser number of Foran-Devine productions, western features, short subjects, newsreels or serials are not available for delivery, exhibitor is to be credited against commitment in an amount to be mutually agreed upon between exhibitor and distributor.

4. The distributor agrees to furnish Universal News in the following situations for fifty-two consecutive weeks starting week ending October 12th:

Theatre	Town	Number of issues
State	Austin	2
Kimo	Albuquerque	2
White	Dallas	2
Parkway	Fort Worth	2
Queen	Galveston	1
Gem	Brownwood	1
Arcadia	Ranger	1

7. The distributor agrees to furnish fourth run features as follows:

Town	Theatre	Number of features
Austin	Texas	18
Do	Cactus	30
Albuquerque	Mission-Mesa	18

8. Exhibitor has the right to exhibit any feature picture hereunder in each first run theatre at one so-called midnight preview or just before the opening of the regular engagement or not over ten days prior thereto.

9. It is expressly understood that the exhibitor is not obligated to actually play any pictures hereunder, but only to make the payments as above stipulated.

10. The current exhibition contracts now in use attached hereto and marked Exhibit "E" so far as not inconsistent with the terms hereof, shall be a part of this agreement.

11. The distributor agrees to hold available for exhibitor six prints of each major picture for thirty days after available date and four prints on ordinary releases, provided exhibitor completes the first run showing in such period for Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Ft. Worth, and Austin.

12. Playing arrangement: All first run product is to be dated and played within availability period, otherwise product will be considered automatically available for subsequent run bookings.

13. Second, Third, Fourth, and Subsequent run product is to be played "as available", otherwise product will be considered automatically available for subsequent run bookings. See clearance agreement marked Exhibit D herewith attached and made part of this agreement.

14. It is further understood that all Newsreels, Short Subjects, Serials, Westerns, and Action pictures, plus present flat buy second run and subsequent runs, are to be charged the same flat basis as last year, 1940-41.

15. It is understood that for the 1942/43 season, there will be a review and revision of the weekly payment by November 1, 1942. The purpose of this review and revision is to determine as to whether the $5,000.00 weekly payment plan shall be revised upward or downward.

16. It is also understood that for the 1943-44 season, there will be a review and revision of the weekly payment by November 1, 1943.

[Note: Initials R. J. M and E. R. O. written in pencil or ink opposite par. 15]

17. The Exhibitor agrees to play the product on substantially the nationally designated percentage terms set up by the Distributor, these designations to be mutually agreed upon, based on performance.

18. In the event that as a result of these designations on feature product, there is an excess sum of money accumulated beyond the $260,000.00 payment, then the Distributor shall participate to the extent of 50% of this excess.

Executed this 8th day of May 1941.

4. Master agreement for Paramount films in Loew theatres (Ex. 243, R. 269).

LOEW'S INCORPORATED

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURES

Office of
C. C. Moskowitz
Vice-President

LOEW BUILDING,
BROADWAY AT 45TH STREET,
New York 19, N. Y., May 17, 1945.

Mr. CHARLES REAGAN
Paramount Pictures Inc.,
1501 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

DEAR CHARLIE: The following confirms the settlement agreed upon between us.

FOR THE CIRCUIT

Season 1940–1941, as per contracts in existence with the three (3) lowest grossing pictures on the long-half as the reversion pictures.

Seasons 1941–1942, 1942–1943 and 1943–1944, the long-half film rentals are settled on the following formula:

Combination of two (2) pictures starting at 30% for the two (2) pictures and graduating up allowing the Exhibitor 25% of the film rental as profit at all times until the Distributor has 40% of the gross as film rental, the balance of the gross divided 50% to the Distributor and 50% to the Exhibitor.

Where the second feature is that of another Distributor, the same method was used and then the actual cost of the second feature deducted from the total film rental, except for TWO YANKS IN TRINIDAD, SINTOWN, BEAUTIFUL BUT BROKE, where the costs used are amounts agreed upon between us, the balance being Paramount film rental.

Where Screeno and Vaudeville were involved, the costs of these items were deducted from the gross before computing the film rental.

In the instances of Equal Billing Shows, these were computed as agreed upon and are shown on various schedules rendered.

In the instance of any "B" picture played with some other company's "A" picture, agreed film rental is $20,000, less $100.00 for the Century Theatre and $300.00 for the Ziegfeld Theatre, if played after these theatres were closed.

"C" Pictures—$8,000.00 except those played after the Century Theatre closed in which $50.00 was deducted for each picture.

STATE THEATRE

Season 1940-1941, as per contract in existence.

Seasons 1941–1942, 1942–1943 and 1943–1944 figured on the following basis:

Twenty-five (25%) Percent of the receipts after deducting the actual cost of the stage show, stage hands and musicians until such time as the Exhibitor has 50% of the film rental as profit, the balance of the gross divided 50% to the Distributor and 50% to the Exhibitor. If, however, at 25% the Exhibitor does not get 50% of the film rental as profit, in that case it reverts down to a point where the Exhibitor has 50% of the film rental as profit, but in no event does the Distributor receive less than 20% as film rental.

EMBASSY THEATRE

Season 1942–1943, at the agreed figure—$5,783.42.

ADVERTISING

Reimbursement of $19,397.22 for extra advertising.

By the foregoing, settlement is made for all prior years to and including 1943–1944, it being understood, however, that as to the years 1942–1943 and 1943–1944, the settlement is subject to your approval of the figure submitted for those two (2) years.

The summary sheet covering the four (4) years is attached hereto.

Upon receipt of your confirmation of this letter, we will promptly forward check for the amount due you.

Yours very truly,

MARCUS LOEW BOOKING AGENCY,

(Sgd.) By C. C. MOSKOWITZ,

Vice-President.

JUNE 5th, 1945.

Mr. C. C. MOSKOWITZ,
Loew's Incorporated,
1540 Broadway, New York, 19, New York.

DEAR CHARLIE: Except to note the fact that the recent settlement agreed upon between us was limited and confined to our 1940–41, 1941–42, 1942–43, 1943–44 feature product which played your Intown Circuit, I concur with all other details set forth in your letter of May 17th.

The summary sheet covering this 4-year period, attached to our letter, indicates that Loew owes Paramount $135,877.41. Won't you, therefore, please instruct your Accounting Department to forward check in that amount in order that we can bring our books into balance pending completion of the audit. Thanks.

Cordially yours,

[Signature illegible]

D. Government's Digests of Film Licensing Agreements in Evidence

EXHIBIT 172 (R. 244, 247)—PARAMOUNT PICTURES IN LOEW THEATRES

1. Parties: Contract between Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation (Paramount) and Marcus Loew Booking Agency (Loew).

2. Date of Agreement: June 25, 1927.

3. Duration: August 1, 1927, to July 31, 1937.

4. Coverage: For all purposes of this agreement, the following cities, towns, and/or other places are hereinafter collectively referred to as the "territory" and such cities, towns, and/or other places are hereinafter severally referred to as "localities." Each such locality shall include all territory included within the political or corporate limits of such locality and in addition thereto, such contiguous territory, if any, considered by distributors of feature photoplays as part of or embraced within each respective locality. Such territory is as follows: Akron, Ohio, Baltimore, Md., Cleveland, Ohio, Canton, Ohio, Evansville, Ind., Harrisburg, Pa., Norfolk, Va., Pittsburgh, Pa., Providence, R. I., Reading, Pa., Richmond, Va., Syracuse, N. Y., Washington, D. C., Roanoke, Va., Kansas City, Mo., Memphis, Tenn.; ordinary Westerns and certain other specified pictures excluded from the agreement.

5. Rental Terms: Paramount was to have the right to designate in each year six (6) "specials." As to such "specials," Loew was to pay to Paramount such fixed sums or percentages as should be agreed upon from time to time by the parties or through arbitration in case of failure to reach an agreement. As to other pictures, Loew was to pay such fixed sums or percentages as should be agreed upon between the parties, and the license fees so determined in any year should govern as to pictures released by Paramount in any subsequent year. Provisions were made for refusing license fees so determined and providing for arbitration. Where license fees were not agreed upon prior to availability of the pictures, Loew was to exhibit them and to pay the license fees as thereafter determined.

6. Other Terms: The agreement stated that the parties had agreed upon what pictures were to be played in each locality for the 1927–28 season.

It was agreed that before May 1st of each of the other years Paramount was to notify Loew of the approximate number of pictures it expected to release for the year, and before June 1st Loew was to notify Paramount of the proportion of such releases that Loew desired to exhibit in each locality.

Before July 1st of each year Paramount was to deliver to Loew a list of features it expected to release, and as to each locality where Loew should exhibit less than 70% of the pictures released by Paramount in such year, Paramount was to divide the pictures in the list into groups so that, as to each locality, each group should contain approximately the proportion of pictures Loew desired to exhibit in each locality. Within three weeks after receiving any such list, Loew was to select one of such groups for exhibition in each locality. As to any locality where Loew should desire to exhibit more than 50% of Paramount releases, Loew should exhibit at least 70% and have a right to select from all the pictures available. Loew was to exhibit at least 70% in Evansville, Indiana, and Cleveland, Ohio. In any locality where Loew exhibits at least 70% of Paramount releases in any year, Loew was to exhibit in such locality at least 50 of the pictures released by Paramount in such year.

"Loew shall exhibit the photoplays as aforesaid for exhibition hereunder at such of the theatres then operated by Loew, situated in each respective locality in the aforesaid territory, as Loew shall from time to time determine; provided, however, that in each locality where Loew shall then operate more than one theatre, Loew agrees to accord to the photoplays to be exhibited hereunder, the same relative preference as to desirability of theatres at which exhibited that Loew at the time being accords to photoplays released by any corporation with which Loew shall be affiliated, during the corresponding year, taking into consideration the quality of such photoplays."

Loew agreed not to reduce the admission prices of each theatre below the admission prices then customarily charged.

Paramount was to have access to Loew's records with respect to exhibition of Paramount pictures in Loew theatres.

Except as might be otherwise agreed upon from time to time, Paramount was not to exhibit or license any of the pictures licensed hereunder at any other theatres located in such respective localities until expiration of the respective protection periods existing at the date of the agreement in favor of the respective theatres in each locality.

It was provided that references in the agreement to theatres operated by Loew should include all theatres located in the territory which Loew might at the time own, lease, control, manage, or operate, or in respect to which it might have any management, participation, or similar contract.

EXHIBIT 173 (R. 247)—LOEW PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRES

1. Parties: Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation (Loew) and Balaban & Katz Corporation (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: September 21, 1934.

3. Duration: Three (3) years from August 1, 1934.

4. Coverage: Covers all theatres of Balaban & Katz' Chicago circuit. The Chicago United Artists, Roosevelt, Apollo and Garrick theatres are referred to as the "Loop Theatres." Balaban & Katz' other houses in Chicago, except the Oriental, were referred to as "Houses outside the Loop."

5. Rental Terms: Twelve pictures to be known as "run" pictures were to be designated by Metro and to be played at a run house. The run houses at the present time being the Roosevelt and United Artists theatres. Terms to be the same as the terms for run pictures of the 1933–34 season.

Eighteen pictures to be designated by Metro to play at the Chicago Theatre seven days at Five Thousand dollars ($5,000) per picture, plus score charge. Six pictures to play at Apollo at twenty percent (20%) of gross receipts. Six pictures to play at the Garrick at twenty percent (20%). At any time Balaban & Katz could substitute a house of equal kind and quality for any of the run houses.

Terms for features to be played in the Apollo and Garrick theatres during each subsequent 52-week period after the first 52-week period were to be thereafter negotiated.

The commitment of forty-two pictures for the Loop Houses was based upon the release of forty-eight pictures. If less than forty-eight were released, Balaban & Katz to use not less than seven-eighths. There is an involved formula as to commitments for the Chicago Theatre and Loop Houses depending upon the number of pictures released and the number of Class A pictures released. For each picture playing first run in either the United Artists, Roosevelt, or Chicago and repeating in the Apollo or Garrick, Metro to receive twenty percent (20%) of the repeat run. For each picture playing first run at the Apollo or Garrick and repeating in the Oriental, Metro to get One Thousand dollars ($1,000) for the repeat run for seven days, plus a score charge.

Commitment on features for each individual theatre outside the Loop to be the same as the commitment of 1933–34 features, and for the first 52-week period the same rental to be paid as for the 1933–34 features. Terms for features to be exhibited in each subsequent 52-week period to be thereafter negotiated.

As to theatres outside the Loop after receiving from Balaban & Katz as film rental for features shown during the first 52-week period an amount equal to the film rental contracted to be paid for all of the theatres for 1933–34 feature product, Metro was to supply for exhibition at said houses, without charge, not exceeding Twenty-five Thousand dollars ($25,000) worth of features to be selected from pictures released by Metro during the first 52-week period for exhibition in the Loop.

Foreign pictures and ordinary Westerns not to be included in this agreement.

6. Other terms: "No pictures playing first run in the Chicago, Roosevelt, or United Artists Theatre is to be played in the Oriental Theatre; it being understood and agreed that if we elect to sell for a second run in the Loop any pictures that play first run in the Chicago, Roosevelt or United Artists theatre such pictures shall be offered by us to you for exhibition at the Oriental Theatre second run before we offer them to any other exhibitor; and you are to have such pictures for the Oriental if terms are agreed upon, otherwise we are to be free to license same to others."

Clearance in effect at the time of execution of this agreement to apply. It was agreed that as long as Balaban & Katz maintained the minimum admission prices under the clearance now in effect or which might be adopted from time to time, Metro would not license any pictures exhibited first run at any of the theatres covered by this agreement for exhibition in any subsequent run theatre in Cook County charging less for night adult admission on a lower floor than 15¢. If Balaban & Katz reduced their adult evening admission price below 25¢ in such zone, Metro should be free to license pictures to theatres charging less than 15¢.

EXHIBIT 174 (R. 247)—PARAMOUNT PICTURES IN WARNER THEATRES

1. Parties: Paramount Pictures, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing, Inc., by Neal Agnew, Vice President and *Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., (Cal.), Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., (Del.), Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Pa.), Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (W. Va.), Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Ky.), Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. 2. Date of Agreement: October 28, 1936.

3. Duration: 2 years—August 1, 1936 to July 31, 1938.

4. Coverage: Covers all theatres owned or controlled by Warner Bros. Pictures, specific coverage being shown by Schedule A which is not attached to exhibit.

5. Rental Terms: Rental is based upon a percentage of the total gross box office receipts with no splits shown. Two releases are to play at 35%, 6 at 30%, 17 at 25% and 40 at 20% of total box office receipts. For the six releases to be played at 30% it is provided that if any two in theatres licensed gross substantially less than the gross receipts of all six, the terms of said two revert to 25%.

Concession is granted on the rental for photoplays played as part of a double bill. If in the first year any of the top 13 features is exhibited as part of double features, the cost of the second picture may be deducted from the gross; or if it is likewise a percentage picture, the Paramount percentage may be reduced by 5%.

6. Other Terms: Provision is also made for deduction where pictures are played with vaudeville.

Foreign pictures were excluded, as well as features not produced, financed or supervised by Paramount or its affiliates or subsidiaries nor made nor supervised by Paramount, its affiliates or subsidiaries.

EXHIBIT 175 (R. 247)—WARNER PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRES

1. Parties: Vitagraph Inc. (Warner) and United Detroit Theatre Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: June 8, 1936.

3. Duration: One year—1936–1937 season.

4. Coverage: The following theatres in Detroit, Michigan: Michigan, United Artists, and State.

5. Rental Terms: At the Michigan Theatre seventeen pictures (to be designated by the distributors) seven days each at fifteen percent (15%) of the box office receipts to $26,000 and fifty percent (50%) thereafter for each picture. If stage attraction costs more than $4,000 the additional cost of stage attraction to be added to the above split figure of $26,000.

In the United Artists Theatre (eight pictures to be designated by distributors) seven days each at twenty-five percent (25%) of box office receipts to $15,000 and fifty percent (50%) thereafter for each picture. Terms for any picture playing a second or additional week to be twenty-five percent (25%) of the box office receipts to $13,000 and fifty percent (50%) thereafter. If gross receipts are less than $10,000, terms to be twenty percent (20%) of box office receipts.

On such pictures as are nationally designated as "specials" and percentage pictures, terms are to be: on thirty-five percent (35%) pictures, thirty-five (35%) of box office receipts to $15,000 and fifty percent (50%) thereafter. On thirty percent (30%) pictures, thirty percent (30%) of box office receipts to $15,750 and fifty percent (50%) thereafter.

In the State Theatre rental is at a fixed percentage of box office receipts with no provision for a split.

6. Other Terms: Run and Clearance: First run. For the Michigan Theatre admission price to be not less than 35¢ matinee and 55¢ evenings. The admission prices are also fixed for United Artists theatre at 35¢ matinee and 50¢ evenings.

EXHIBIT 177 (R. 248)—RKO PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRES

1. Parties: RKO Distributing Corp., United Detroit Theatres Corp. (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: September 9, 1936.

3. Duration: 1935–1936, 1936–1937.

4. Coverage: Subsequent run at Varsity Theatre.

5. Rental Terms: 19 pictures to be selected by Exhibitor out of 62: 2 pictures, 4 days (Sun.), 35 %; 2 pictures, 3–4 days, $200; 4 pictures, 3–4 days, $175; 6 pictures, 3–4 days, $125; 5 pictures, 3–4 days, $100.

6. Other Terms: Minimum adult admisison prices, 25¢. No clearance specified in contract.

EXHIBIT 178 (R. 249)—PARAMOUNT PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: August 1, 1933, executed November 30, 1934.

3. Duration: 10 years, August 1, 1933 to July 31, 1943.

4. Coverage: 1st run in Liberty and Paramount Theatres in Portland, Oregon.

5. Rental Terms: Rental for the first year of this agreement as follows: At the Liberty Theatre the contract calls for a total of 25 weeks playing time as follows: 6 weeks at 30% to a split, 50% over the split; 14 weeks at 25% to a split, 50% over the split; 5 weeks at 20% to a split, 50% over the split. At the Paramount Theatre 16 pictures shall play at 20% to a split with 50% to the distributor over the split, 9 pictures at $500 for 7 days each, and the balance at $350 for 7 days each.

The exhibitor has the privilege of excluding 10% of the $350 pictures.

The "split figure" shall be deemed to mean that where the gross receipts of the theatre of each photoplay shall reach a figure which will allow the exhibitor to reimburse itself out of such gross receipts for its operating expenses and for the minimum license fee so paid and will allow the exhibitor as profit a further sum out of such gross receipts equal to the minimum license fee so paid and the exhibitor agrees to pay Paramount in addition to the minimum license fees specified above a sum equal to 50% of such gross receipts in excess of such split figure.

Article 6 (b) Page 6: With respect to the photoplays to be released during each of the remaining nine years the Exhibitor and Paramount shall agree as to the terms and conditions on or before July 1st of each year.

6. Other Terms: Clearances shall be "those which prevail in said zone."

Admission prices shall be comparable to those charged by theatres of similar character in cities of corresponding size.

Provision for including additional theatres which exhibitor might operate.

EXHIBIT 179 (R. 249)—PARAMOUNT PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., by Austin C. Keough, vice president, and Evergreen State Amusement Corporation (Del.), by W. C. Michel, vice president, and Fox West Coast Corporation by W. C. Michel, vice president.

2. Date of agreement: March 5, 1937.

3. Duration: 10 years and 5 months—March 7, 1937 to July 31, 1947.

4. Coverage: 1st run in the following theatres in Seattle, Washington: Fifth Avenue, Paramount, Coliseum and Orpheum.

5. Rental terms: The same terms as under old franchise. This relates to agreement between Paramount and Evergreen dated August 1, 1933 executed November 30, 1934, for 10 years, from August 1, 1933 to July 31, 1943.

The agreement dated March 5, 1937 also provides that the exhibitor and Paramount shall agree on or before July 1 of each year of the 10-year period after the 1936–1937 season as to the terms and conditions on which features, shorts, and news reels licensed for each year commencing August 1st next ensuing shall be exhibited.

The exhibitor and Paramount shall from time to time agree as to what constitutes "fair and reasonable" license fees and recording charges and a "fair and reasonable" number of one and two reel short features.

6. Other terms: Fox West Coast Corporation was made a party to this agreement because of the simultaneous execution and delivery of a sublease covering the Paramount Theatre in Seattle, Washington, between West Coast as sublessor and the exhibitor as sublessee. The sublease was for 10 years, from March 5, 1937 to July 31, 1947. The agreement reserves a right of assignment to Fox West Coast under certain contingencies.

The length of run is to be 7 days for features, shorts, and Paramount news reels.

Clearances are to be those which prevail in said zone both as to time and area.

Admission prices shall be comparable to those charged by theatres of similar character in cities of corresponding size, but obligation depends on Paramount giving the prevailing clearance.

Provision for inclusion of additional theatres of exhibitors.

EXHIBIT 180 (R. 254)—FOX PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRES

1. Parties: Fox Film Corporation, by John C. Clark, and United Theatre Enterprises, Inc. (Paramount), by Wm. K. Jenkins.

2. Date of Agreement: August 16, 1935.

3. Duration: Two years: 1935–36, 1936–37 seasons.

4. Coverage: 1st run in following theatres in Macon, Georgia: Rialto, Capitol and Ritz.

5. Rental Terms: The Exhibitor shall play during each season 6 features pictures, selected by Distributor, at 30% of gross, and, as additional rental 50% of gross receipts in excess of the accumulative split figure of $539 per day. These pictures shall be played at the Capitol Theatre for 3 days.

The Exhibitor will also play 12 pictures at 25% of gross receipts for two to three days at the Capitol, in which the remaining pictures will be played at 20% of gross for 2 to 3 days.

It is also provided that if the Exhibitor obtains control of any other first run theatres in Macon in lieu of, or in addition to those theatres mentioned, then this agreement shall extend to such theatres.

6. Other terms: Clearance as "usual" as set up by the Zoning and Clearance Committee. Such clearance is subject to any change made by the local Zoning and Clearance Board.

The Exhibitor agrees to charge the following admission prices: Rialto.—Evening: Adults, orchestra, 35¢; balcony, 15¢; children, orchestra, 10¢; balcony, 10¢.

Admission prices are also fixed for the Capitol and Ritz Theatres. It is further provided that if a first run competitor reduces his prices, the Exhibit may apply for reduction to meet competition. Such consent will not be given if it is against business policy. If comparable first run houses increase admission prices, distributor will give Exhibitor written notice of the increase and one month thereafter, unless Exhibitor disputes within 30 days, such new prices shall prevail. If parties fail to agree, the matter will be submitted to arbitration.

The Capitol Theatre is classified as the "A" theatre, the Rialto as the "B" theatre and the Ritz Theatre as the "C" theatre.

The Agreement is labeled a "Franchise."

EXHIBIT 181 (R. 375)—LOEW PICTURES IN WARNER THEATRES

1. Parties: Loew's Inc., by Rodgers, and Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Cal.); Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Del.); Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Pa.); Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (W. Va.); Warner

Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Ky.); Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Va.); The Connecticut Theatrical Corp.; Stanley Company of America; Massachusetts Amusement Corp.; Intrastate Theatre Corp.; Stanley-Mark Strand Corp.; General Theatre Co.; Warner's Midwest Theatres, Inc.; Regent State Corp.; Stanley, Davis, Clark Corp.; Mansfield Operating Corp.; Stanley-Shapiro Theatre Co.; Spiers Theatre Realty Co.; Lindy Amusement Co., Inc.

2. Date of Agreement: October 1, 1936.

3. Duration: 3 seasons—1936–1937, 1937–1938, 1938–1939. Each season beginning September 1 and ending August 31.

4. Coverage: 1st run unless otherwise specified in theatres in Warner circuit.

5. Rental Terms: National percentage terms: 30 Class "A" pictures to be designated as 40%, 35% or 30% and 50 to be designated as 25%. Balance Class "B" pictures at terms shown in deal sheets. Fixed rental terms: 4 at 35% to a split and 65% over the split to be determined from average gross receipt of "Mutiny on the Bounty," "China Seas" and "Rose Marie." The terms for the rest of the pictures in flat deal situation as indicated on deal sheets.

Terms for pictures played with vaudeville—the cost of vaudeville may be deducted from the gross before computing rental on 30 highest term pictures. Vaudeville may be played for only two days with said pictures. If vaudeville is to be played with the remaining cheaper pictures the terms may be revised by mutual agreement. The cost of added attractions, i. e. bank night, gift night, Screeno, etc. not to exceed $200 may be deducted from gross before computing percentage film rentals. Deduction allowed for feature playing on double bill.

6. Other Terms: Expressly excluded from the agreement were foreign and Western pictures distributed by Loew. Also, if more than 20% of the features of any season should be produced elsewhere than at a studio of Loew or Hal Roach, Inc. which was not a subsidiary or affiliate of Metro, Warner was not required to accept any such other features in excess of the 20%.

Evening adult admission prices not to be reduced without Loew's consent below 25% of present price and in no case less than 15¢.

Where Exhibitor has closed theatres, product is to play in open theatre. Where all Warner theatres closed in a situation, Warner to be bound to rental fees less what Loew may receive from another Exhibitor in the situation upon relicense. Upon 60 days notice before next season Warner may reclaim product for reopened theatre.

Clearance as indicated in deal sheets. Right of selection as indicated in deal sheets.

Special terms set up for Warner's first-run theatres in Philadelphia and the clearance set out. In general the rental terms varied from 20% to 50% depending upon the size of the gross receipts.

It is agreed that each feature is to be played not later than fourteen (14) days after national release; and conditioned upon the foregoing, clearance shall be as follows as to each of said Boyd, Stanton, Stanley, and Fox Theatres, same to be computed from the last date of exhibition, except in the case of continued first runs: Twenty-eight (28) days over all theatres in Greater Philadelphia and in Chester, Montgomery, Bucks, and Delaware Counties in Pennsylvania, and all theatres in Gloucester, Burlington, Camden, Cumberland, and Atlantic Counties (except Atlantic City) in New Jersey.

Except as follows:

Twenty-one (21) days over Arcadia Theatre, Philadelphia;

6. Other Terms: No admission prices specified. Clearance 30 days in Meriden, 7 days before Wallingford, after Hartford.

EXHIBIT 186 (R. 250)—RKO PICTURES IN LOEW THEATRES

1. Parties: RKO Distributing Corp. and Poli New England Theatres, Inc., by Joseph R. Vogel, vice pres., Loew's Inc., Waterbury, Conn.

2. Date of agreement: Nov. 23, 1936.

3. Duration: 1936–1937.

4. Coverage: Exclusive 1st run for 23 pictures in Poli Theatre, Waterbury, Conn.

5. Film rental: 1 Astaire, 4 days, 40% (single bill); 1 feature, 4 days, 35%; 3 features, 4 days, 30%. If any of above pictures excepting the Astaire play double feature RKO will give picture to play with it. If no picture is available at time $200 will be deducted from gross film rental for cost of it. 6 features, 3–4 days, 25%; 40% of 25% pictures to play 4 days. No more than 12 pictures to be designated to play on a percentage basis including Joe E. Brown's. 12 features 3–4 days, $200.00 flat rental. If and 25% group double featured, Exhibitor can deduct no more than $200 from the gross.

6. Other terms: Admission prices not fixed. Clearance: 30 days in Waterbury. 10 days ahead of Thomaston, Oakville, and Watertown. 14 days over Naugatuck.

EXHIBIT 187 (R. 250)—LOEW PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corp., by Al Lichtman, Vice President, and Fox West Coast Theatres Corp., by Spiro P. Skouras, Vice President, assigned by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to Loews, Inc.

2. Date of Agreement: August 31, 1936.

3. Duration: 9 years from September 1, 1936, to August 3, 1945.

4. Coverage: Exclusive 1st run. All of Los Angeles County except Pamona, California. and relates specifically to the following theatres in Los Angeles—Loew's State, United Artists, Four Star, and Grauman's Chinese.

5. Rental Terms: After first three years rental terms, playing time and clearance to be negotiated in advance of each release season. Special rental terms set up for first season's product. The rental for 22 features for the 1936–1937 season at the State and Chinese theatres is based on a sliding scale of the percentage of the gross running from 20% to 50%. For the 22 features to be played at Loew's State and Chinese Theatres on a percentage basis, the distributor is entitled to a maximum rental of 50% on 8 pictures to be designated. The maximum of the remaining percentage pictures should not be more than 40% of the gross receipts. There are special provisions for extended time and moveovers and double bills.

6. Other terms: Maximum number of features which may be road-shown by distributor after first year to be agreed upon. Westerns and foreigns excluded from obligation of exhibitor but must first be offered to exhibitor and if agreement on terms not effected, such pictures not to be licensed to other exhibitors in County of Los Angeles upon terms more favorable than Fox was willing to agree to. Exhibitor to charge not less than average admission prices charged by similar theatres in County. Reference is made to simultaneous execution of lease from Metro to Fox of Loew's State Theater at Los Angeles, with right of Metro to terminate this agreement upon termination of the lease by virtue of lessee's default. This exhibit contains the terms for pictures of the 1943–44 season, but which are made subject to further negotiations between W. E. Rodgers, of Loew, and Charles P. Skouras, of Fox West Coast Agency. This agreement permits a reduction in evening adult admission prices below those of 1940, within certain limits.

EXHIBIT 188 (R. 275)—LOEW PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: Fox Film Corp., by W. C. Michel, and Anchor Theatrical Corp. (Loew), by Leopold Friedman, Washington, D. C.

2. Date of Agreement: July 1, 1932.

3. Duration: 10 years.

4. Coverage: 1st run in Fox, Palace, Columbia theatres, Washington, D. C.

5. Film Rental: Fourth Provision of contract is partially quoted: "The terms of film rental to be paid by the Exhibitor to the Distributor shall be the same as the terms of film rental paid by the Exhibitor to M. G. M. Distributing Corp. for the photoplays furnished by said M. G. M. Distributing Corp. at the respective theatres." "Score charges to continue only so long as M. G. M. Distributing Corp. continues to impose score charges for films licensed by it and controlled by Distributor or its subsidiaries." "Prior to Sept. 1 of each season Exhibitor shall deliver to Distributor a certificate verified by its President or Vice President or Treasurer setting forth the terms of film rental for the ensuing year."

6. Other Terms: 40 features out of entire season's product to be selected by exhibitor, with reduced commitment if any of the theatres were closed. Road shows to be carried on in exhibitor's theatres; not more than 4 features to be road-shown. Same average clearance against all other theatres in Washington as is generally granted by all other distributors to theatres covered by this agreement. No provision as to admission prices.

EXHIBIT 189 (R. 252)—FOX PICTURES IN RKO THEATRES

1. Parties: 20th Century Fox and RKO by J. J. O'Connor.

2. Date of Agreement: October 16, 1936.

3. Duration: 1936-1937 season.

4. Coverage: 1st run in Keith Theatre in Boston, Mass.; 17 of 17 pictures.

5. Rental Terms: Two "A" pictures at $2,500 guarantee against 20% with a split of 50% over $22,000; 6 "B" pictures at $25,000 guarantee against 17½% with a split of 50% over $22,000.

If any picture does not earn the $25,000 guarantee at 20% or 17½%, the income received by the distributor on any second or subsequent weeks' engagement will be credited against such deficit until such time as the $2,500 guarantee has been earned. However, on the 8 above pictures the exhibitor guarantees the distributor a minimum of $20,000. On the second and subsequent weeks' engagement of any picture, the percentage is to be the same as the first week without guarantee.

Five "C" pictures are to be played at a guarantee of $1,000 against 20% if Boston without vaudeville or at $1,000 flat if Boston with vaudeville, at a guarantee of $1,000 against 17½% if at Keith and 50% over $22,000. Four "D" pictures at $750 flat at Boston. If any pictures in Group "C" are played on percentage as a double bill without vaudeville, the exhibitor can deduct the cost of the second feature. The above is based on a ⅓ even split of distributor's product. From time to time, distributor will make 3 equal splits of available pictures not previously split. These spilts will be submitted to M. & P. Theatres which have first run of ⅔ of distributor's production in Boston and they will select one of the equal splits. RKO will have second choice and the remaining split will go to M. & P. Theatres.

6. Other Terms: Admission prices not specified. There is a long clearance schedule, the last paragraph of which provides as follows:

"In the city of Boston proper six weeks' clearance after completion of run on the Globe and Bijou Theatres. 60 days' clearance after completion of run of picture over Park, Stuart, Washington, Strand, Olympia, Palace and Rialto Theatres, as long as such theatres charge admission price of not less than 40¢ for the entire orchestra at night performance. With reference to such subsequent run theatres that may charge less than 40¢ and more than or less than 25¢, clearance shall be the minimum clearance maintained by all other companies servicing these theatres."

EXHIBIT 190 (R. 252)—RKO PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: RKO Distributing Corporation, Del., by Fred E. Depinet and Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, Del. (Fox), by S. P. Skouras.

2. Date of Agreement: August 20, 1936.

3. Duration: One year—1936–1937 season.

4. Coverage: 1st run unless otherwise specified in deal sheets in exhibitor's theatres in Washington and Oregon. If any theatre fails to exhibit all features in its commitment the shortage may be offset against any overage of any theatre in the same exchange territory. Spot booking or optional deal where no different commitment is specified shall not be considered as overage.

5. Rental Terms: Straight percentage and flat rental without split. Three features at 35% of gross with reversion to 30% as hereafter provided; 3 at 35% of gross with reversion to 30% as hereafter provided; 3 at 30% of gross with reversion to 25% as hereafter provided; 8 at 25%. Balance at flat rental.

With 35 and 30% feature, if after deducting the percentage from gross box office receipts the balance remaining does not equal the house expense designated for such theatre in schedule "B" plus an amount equal to ½ of the film rental, then the license fee shall be 30 and 25% respectively. The house expenses shall be secured by multiplying the tenths or twelfths by the number of days of exhibition allowing 1/10 for each week, 2/10 for Saturday and 3/10 for Sunday, while weeks having a holiday shall be computed in twelfths allowing 1/12 for each weekday, 2/12 for Saturday, 3/12 for Sunday and 3/12 for the holiday.

Except on the 6 highest percentage features where there is a stage show or vaudeville the percentage shall be 15%. Where the 6 highest percentage features are shown with a stage show or vaudeville, the cost of same shall be deducted from the gross box office receipts before computing the distributor's percentage. If 35% or 30% features are shown as part of a double feature program, the percentage paid the distributor shall be reduced 5%. If 25% features are shown as part of a double feature program the percentage paid the distributor shall be reduced to 15%. In no event shall the percentage paid the distributor on any percentage feature be less than 15%. Exhibitor may make a reduction of film rental of 5% from gross receipts for bank night before computing percentage terms payable to distributor.

Deductions are made for extended and moveover playing time and for bank nights.

The exhibitor's maximum commitment is for 48 features, each theatre commitment to be fixed on deal sheets. Commitment to be reduced if 2 features not released starring Fred Astaire, in one of which Ginger Rogers also to be starred.

"If any theatre operating for a full week, changes its policy to operate only part of the week with a less number of program changes per week, the number remaining photoplays becoming available that such theatre is obligated to play shall be reduced in proportion to the lesser number of changes corresponding to the changes in policy upon which the theatre operates."

Eliminations from lowest classification varies according to amount of commitment from 6 to 2.

Overage and underage provided for.

Provision is made for exonerating the exhibitor from its commitment as to theatres which are kept closed and reinstating the agreement as to such of the closed theatres which reopen.

6. Other terms: If distributor "road shows" any feature covered in this agreement, exhibitor shall have the prior right to exhibit this picture as a road show. Clearance shall be mutually agreed upon and should not be less favorable than preceding season. If distributor fails to accord the clearance granted, then the exhibitor may eliminate its obligation to play or pay for any feature on which the clearance is not given.

No admission prices specified.

Contract excludes outside producers except in two specified instances, foreign productions and program Westerns, but exhibitor is given a right to elect to take foreign feature after produced.

EXHIBIT 191 (R. 252)—WARNER PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: Vitagraph, Inc. (Warner Bros.), by G. L. Sears, and Fox West Coast Agency Corp., Fox West Coast Theatres Corp., by Spyros Skouras.

2. Date of Agreement: June 8, 1936.

3. Duration: 1936–1937.

4. Coverage: 1st run in theatres in California, Arizona and Montana.

5. Film Rental: Unless otherwise specified in deal sheets: 2—35% of gross with reversion to 30% as provided; 5—30%; 18—25%; Bal. flat rental.

Reversion schedule on 35% features. If after deducting 35%, the balance remaining shall not equal the house expense as provided in schedule "A" plus an amount equal to ½ of the house expense, then the percentage will be reduced to 30%. House expense is computed taking a figure opposite the name of a theatre and multiplying it by the total number of "tenths." "Tenths" are represented by the number of days each such photoplay is actually exhibited—1/10 for a weekday, 2/10 for Saturday, 3/10 for Sunday.

Additional playing time—Flat rentals.

Article Fourth. If in any situation flat rental photoplays shall be exhibited for a longer consecutive period than the number of days indicated on deal sheets, then the Exhibitor shall pay as license fee for each day of additional playing time 50% of the pro rata daily film rental.

Score charges for additional days on the 50% basis.

Deductions for stage shows and vaudeville.

Double Bills.

Percentage pictures on double bill for 5% less of the box office receipts.

Additional playing time on percentage pictures.

Article Twenty-fourth.

This article permits a reduction in the percentage of the 35% pictures after they have reverted to 30% on the following basis:

If any of these pictures have reverted to 30% and are then carried for additional playing time, the percentage for the additional time shall be reduced to 25% if the designated house expense as it is provided in Schedule A plus an equal amount is less than 30% of the gross.

6. Other Terms: Number of features as set forth in deal sheets for each theatre.

Agreement excludes foreign pictures and program Westerns.

Elimination privilege of 4 pictures out of 52 altogether or as to particular runs.

Overage and underage provided for.

Exoneration of commitment with respect to closed theatres provided for, with right of reinstatement prospectively of agreement as to reopened theatres.

EXHIBIT 192 (R. 253)—FOX PICTURES IN WARNER THEATRES

1. Parties: 20th Century Fox Film Corporation, By W. C. Michael, Executive Vice President and Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, by Joseph Bernhard, President.

2. Date of Agreement: July 28, 1936.

3. Duration: 3 years—1936–1937; 1937–1938; 1938–1939 seasons.

4. Coverage: 1st run unless otherwise indicated in deal sheets in theatres in the circuit. Commitments to be specified on the deal sheets.

5. Rental Terms: Two pictures at 35%. 4 pictures at 30%. 16 pictures in the 1936–1937 season at 25%; 18 in 1937–1938 and 1938–1939 seasons at 25%; 30 at 20% or at flat rentals for the 1937–1938 and 1938–1939 seasons. 25% and 20% pictures to be reduced to 20% and 15% respectively if shown as part of double billings. 35% and 30% pictures are reduced to 22½%, and 25% and 20% pictures are reduced to 15% if shown with regular vaudeville. When an occasional act is shown, the cost not to exceed $100, may be deducted from the gross before the percentage is computed.

Flat rentals as specified in deal sheets for 1936–1937. For subsequent years flat rentals to depend upon a comparison of gross receipts for a group of percentage pictures for the two preceding seasons. Considerable flexibility is allowed as to the number of pictures allocable to any classification in a particular season even though the total number in each classification for the three years remained fixed.

The contract covers only such features of outside producers as (a) cost to produce not less than One hundred fifty ($150,000) Thousand Dollars, and (b) that the distribution agreement between Producer and such other producer shall have been made prior to the commencement of production of such picture and Producer shall have notified Exhibitor of such distribution agreement within seven (7) days after the execution thereof, and (c) that such picture shall be based upon a well-known story, book or play or feature a well-known motion picture star or be directed by a well-known director, and (d) that the Producer is not bound by contract with such other producer to obtain such other producer's consent or approval to the terms and conditions of licensing the exhibition thereof.

6. Other Terms: Deal sheets and schedule A to specify terms, playing time and commitment for particular theatres.

It is agreed that the Clearance to be granted to the Exhibitor as to the various theatres, cities, towns, or zones covered by this agreement, shall be in accordance with the Clearance Schedule hereto annexed and hereby made a part hereof and designated as Schedule "B." The clearance of photoplays in the Exhibitor's theatres over other theatres in a particular zone, city, or situation shall be applicable to any new theatres which may be opened or erected during the term of this agreement.

Where commitment for a theatre is less than 75% of features, distributor may sell excess to exhibitor's opposition subject to exhibitor's right to make selection from entire product. Where minimum commitment is for more than 75% no right is reserved to distributor to sell exhibitor's opposition.

Exoneration of commitment is allowed with respect to closed theatres, with right of contract reinstatement as to reopened theatres.

When commitment is for all features and average license fee is not more than $250, 10% exclusion privilege given.

Admission prices not specified.

EXHIBIT 194 (R. 253)—RKO PICTURES IN WARNER THEATRES

1. Parties: RKO Distributing Corp., by Jules Levy, General Sales Manager, and Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corp., by Joseph Bernhard, President.

4. Coverage: 1st run in theatres in Circuit.

5. Rental Terms: With some specified exceptions a percentage of the total gross box office receipts and split. 3 pictures at 30% with reversion to 35% if the theatre profit equals or exceeds ½ of the film rental at 35%. 3 pictures at 25% with reversion to 30% if the theatre profit equals or exceeds ½ of the film rental at 30%. 7 pictures at 25%. Balance at terms indicated on the deal sheets. Any percentage pictures shown with regular vaudeville has its film rental reduced to 15% except the 3 top pictures which shall be 20% to a 50% split giving the theatre a profit equal to ½ of the film rental. Occasional acts, the cost thereof not to exceed $100, may be deducted from the gross receipts before film rental percentages are computed.

Specified terms and playing for each theatre to be set forth on deal sheets.

6. Other Terms: Clearance to be in accordance with clearance schedule designated Schedule "B".

Foreign made pictures and program, Westerns excluded.

Overage and underage provided for.

Distributor to limit road-shows in cities where exhibitor's theatres are located to 2 pictures, and exhibitor to have right to exhibit road-show in its theatres upon its election to do so after a prior screening of the picture at several designated local offices.

Exoneration of commitment with respect to closed theatres provided with right of contract reinstatement as to reopened theatres.

Selection provided for on deal sheets.

Admission prices not specified.

1. Parties: United Artists Corporation, L. J. Schlaifer, and Evergreen Theatres Corporation, S. P. Skouras (Fox).

2. Date of agreement: November 7, 1938.

3. Duration: 1938–1939.

4. Coverage: Special provisions and general remarks: Identical contracts were made by United Artists with the Fox West Coast Agency Corporation, the Fox Mid West Amusement Corporation, the Fox Inter-Mountain Amusement Corporation the Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corporation, and as part of this series of contracts the Fox theatres within the Los Angeles Exchange District, San Francisco Exchange District, Seattle Exchange District, Denver Exchange District, Salt Lake City Exchange District, Kansas City Exchange District, Milwaukee Exchange District, St. Louis Exchange District, and Omaha Exchange District are listed along with the particular run and rental terms allocated for each theatre.

Samuel Goldwyn Productions, David O. Selznick Productions, Walter Wanger Productions, Hal Roach Productions, Edward Small Productions.

Additional features excluding foreign features released by United Artists are to be offered the exhibitor.

5. Rental Terms: Pictures are divided into three classifications. Under the first classification in the theatres licensed on a percentage basis, 30% to equal the split figure as indicated for a particular theatre on a deal sheet, and in addition 25% of such part of the gross receipts as equals the split figure for the additional exhibition period as indicated on the deal sheets, and in addition 50% of that part of the gross receipts for each theatre as shall be in excess of such split figures for the cumulative period of exhibition.

On the second class of pictures, 25% of the gross as equals the split figures as indicated for the particular theatre on a deal sheet and in addition, 50% of such part of the gross receipts for each theatre as shall be in excess of the split figure.

On the third class, 25% of the gross box office receipts if a single bill basis, 20% of the gross box receipts on a double bill basis. With respect to moveovers on a percentage basis, there is to be reduction of five percent of the gross box receipts and in flat rental situations additional playing time is to be paid for on the basis of 50% of the pro rata daily rental required.

6. Other Terms: Where pictures are licensed on a percentage rental basis, the scale of admission prices is to be not less than the scale of admission prices charged to view pictures of comparable quality exhibited by the exhibitor and distributed by distributors other than United Artists.

Clearance is to be mutually agreed upon but not to be less favorable to exhibitor than previous season's clearance, and unless otherwise specified all runs are to be deemed first run in each town, situation, or zone.

On the deal sheets where a subsequent run is indicated, exhibitor has right to eliminate such subsequent run if the theatre has played a prior run.

There is a special provision with respect to double-bill programs, reducing the rental fees in such case, and there is a provision for revision of rental fee terms in the case where there is played a stage show or where there is a vaudeville policy. Fox is given the privilege of exhibiting pictures which have already been exhibited on a regular run in any theatre at a special matinee or morning performance for children without charge to the exhibitor. The exhibitor is permitted to hold previews or midnight shows.

If a theatre closes for a period of 8 weeks or longer, the obligations under this contract with respect to that theatre are to be canceled subject to renewal if the theatre reopens.

Deductions are to be allowed for bank nights.

Percentage features to be exploited and advertised by exhibitor to the same extent as comparable pictures of other distributors exhibited by exhibitor.

Extended playing time and moveover privileges given exhibitor at reduced film rentals.

If distributor road-shows picture in a situation where exhibitor has agreed to show all or part of distributor's product, exhibitor to have prior right to exhibit road-show.

EXHIBIT 242 (R. 269)—PARAMOUNT PICTURES IN WARNER THEATRES

1. Parties: Paramount Pictures, Inc., and Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: Various dates in 1943 and 1944.

3. Duration: One year, 1943–1944 season.

4. Coverage: Warner theatres in Washington, D. C. First and subsequent runs.

5. Rental Terms: Some pictures on 25%, some on 30%, some on a 35%, some on a 40% sliding scale; some on a 35% to 40% sliding scale. Special terms for "Dr. Wassel." "Going My Way" sold to Apollo Theatre at 70% over expenses. Some pictures at flat rentals. On double features on 35% and 30% pictures deduct cost of second feature not exceeding highest flat rental paid Paramount in each situation. On 25% pictures to be 20%. The Earle which plays vaudeville was sold several top pictures at 20% to $22,500 and 50/50 over; and the "Miracle of Morgan's Creek" for the second week at 15%. The Metropolitan, following the Earle, was sold this picture at 25% to $8,000 and 50/50 over.

The fourth block of pictures was sold to Warner's on the following terms:

"The Hour Before Dawn" Percentage Situations—30%, the picture may go as high as 32½% or drop to 27½%, depending on your theatres in the percentage situations in the Washington Exchange territory making an over-all profit of 35% of the film rental paid us.

Flat Rental Situations—Same flat rental to be paid us as generally paid for 30% pictures such as Palm Beach Story or Happy Go Lucky.

"Navy Way"—22½% or same flat rental as paid for Aerial Gunner.

"You Can't Ration Love"—20% or low flat rental. Usual clearance to apply.

In those percentage situations where we customarily allow you percentage terms less than the regular deal, you are to receive the same consideration on the pictures above. The fifth and sixth blocks were sold on somewhat similar terms.

6. Other terms: First run in the City of Washington with 21 days clearance after last play date over all theatres in the City of Washington, including colored theatres, with the following clearance over towns adjacent to the City of Washington: Rockville, 21 days; Laurel, 14 days; Silver Spring, 21 days; Alexandria, 14 days; Clarendon, 21 days; Cherrydale, 21 days; Falls Church, 21 days; Gaithersburg, Mt. Rainier, Capitol Heights, Bethesda, Hyattsville.

Mt. Clemens is specifically eliminated from the above; clearance on Mt. Clemens shall be two (2) weeks after our last playdate and that such production or productions shall not be announced nor advertised for showing until one (1) week after our last playdate of the Detroit engagement.

Radius 22 Miles to 60 Miles: Until one (1) week after our last playdate, including Detroit, Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti, Monroe, Trenton, Pontiac, and Port Huron, and not to be announced nor advertised for showing until after our last playdate of this engagement.

EXHIBIT 245 (R. 270)—WARNER PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation and Fox West Coast Agency Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: Various dates during 1943–44 season.

3. Coverage: 1943–44 Warner features. Separate contracts for various groups. Specified theatres in San Francisco and eighteen towns in San Francisco exchange area.

4. Rental Terms: Certain of the pictures are listed on flat rental terms and certain on a sliding scale percentage. Typical of the agreements for the various blocks is this provision: "With respect to the flat rental terms listed on the Schedule 'A' attached [illegible] and made a part of our License Agreement and Supplement, dated September 14th, 1943, it is understood and agreed that the flat rentals listed therein shall be paid by us to you. When this photoplay has completed its engagements in all of the situations or runs on Schedule 'A' wherein it is licensed to us for exhibition at flat rental, the box office receipts realized from the flat rental situations as described below shall be compared with the average box office receipts realized from the exhibition of the following photoplays at flat rental in the same flat rental situations:

They Died With Their Boots On Kings Row
Captain of the Clouds
The Gay Sisters

and if the sum total of the box office receipts realized from the engagement of Watch On the Rhine exceeds the average of the sum total of the box office receipts of the four pictures listed, the box office receipts percentage increase shall be determined and all of the flat rental prices on Schedule 'A' shall be increased in the same proportion."

With respect to percentage terms the various contracts provide as follows: "With respect to the situations listed herein, wherein a photoplay has been licensed at a percentage of the box office receipts terms, the photoplay, unless otherwise provided herein, based upon box office results shall receive from twenty percent (20%) to forty percent (40%) single bill, based upon the one percent (1%) sliding scale figures attached to, and made part of, this agreement, plus a sum equal to fifty percent (50%) of the amount by which the box office receipts exceed the forty percent (40%) sliding scale figure multiplied by the number of units of play time given to the photoplay."

5. Others Terms: "The exhibitor is hereby granted the same number of days of clearance and the same availability for each of its situations on runs as are in effect at the date hereof. All runs are to be deemed first run in each town, situation or zone unless otherwise indicated in writing." No minimum admission prices fixed.

EXHIBIT 246 (R. 270)—WARNER PICTURES IN RKO THEATRES, NEW YORK CITY CIRCUIT

1. Parties: Vitagraph, Inc. (Warner) With Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation (RKO).

2. Date: Various dates in 1943 and 1944.

3. Duration: 1943–44 seasons.

4. Coverage: Subsequent run in RKO's metropolitan New York theatres.

5. Rental Terms: For the most part pictures were sold on a sliding scale percentage basis starting at 20%, graduating up by ½ percent steps to 25%, each step except the last being based upon an increase of 5,200 over the preceding split figure. After the 25% splitting figure was reached the distributor was to get a certain flat bonus sum plus 50% of the gross receipts in excess of the splitting figure. Generally pictures were sold on a 5- to 7-day playing-time basis and the above terms were for the 1st five days. A substantial discount was allowed for pictures played on the 6th and 7th days. Special terms for Midway Theatre in Forest Hills. Some pictures were sold on a total film rental basis for specified theatres; some pictures were sold at varying flat rentals to different theatres.

6. Other Terms: Most of the contracts which are part of this exhibit incorporate by reference paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 of an agreement of November 5, 1942. This latter agreement is part of this exhibit. The paragraphs referred to provide for first showing 7 days after downtown Manhattan and certain downtown Brooklyn theatres. Except as a few specified exceptions, 7 days' clearance, over all theatres in the counties where RKO's theatres are, and in Nassau county, is given RKO theatres listed on Schedule A. Minimum admission prices fixed.

EXHIBIT 247 (R. 270)—LOEW PICTURES IN WARNER THEATRES

1. Parties: Loew's, Incorporated, and Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corp.

2. Date of Agreement: Noyember 2, 1943.

3. Duration: 1943–44.

4. Coverage: Warner subsequent-run theatres in Washington, D. C.

5. Rental Terms: The distributor shall designate the classification for each picture at each theatre on one of the following classifications: Classification I: 40% sliding scale; Classification II: 35% sliding scale; Classification III: 30% sliding scale; Classification IV: 25% or flat; Classification V: 20% or flat. The sliding scale is set upon a basis of what the picture does in certain test situations—specified Warner theatres in designated towns—taking into consideration a number of listed factors such as units of playing time. Depending upon whether the picture grosses an amount equal to test figure the ultimate percentage may be above or below the sliding scale percentage. Provision made for flat rental and straight percentage sales on some pictures. Deductions for double features and where occasional vaudeville.

6. Other Terms: Minimum admission prices not specified. Some clearances shown on deal sheets.

EXHIBIT 248 (R. 270)—LOEW PICTURES IN RKO THEATRES

EXHIBIT 259 (R. 271)—UNIVERSAL PICTURES IN WARNER THEATRES

1. Parties: Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp. and Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.

2. Date of Agreement: Various dates in 1941, 1942 and 1943.

3. Duration: 1941–42, 1942–43,1943–44 season.

4. Coverage: Warner's first-run Philadelphia theatres.

5. Rental Terms: For each of the three seasons Universal was to receive as the basic formula the following:

5 pictures at 35%, 2½% off for double bill.

5 pictures at 30%, 2½% off for double bill.

5 pictures at 25%, 5% off for double bill.

Balance of commitment, 20% (if d. b. 15%) or flat rental.

The deal sheet dated Dec. 1, 1941, contains the following provisions:

30 pictures; selection out of 43.

Boyd or Stanley or Fox

(5) pictures: If gross is $8,000 or less, 20%; If gross is $15,000 or less, 25%; If gross is in excess of $15,000, 30%; If gross is in excess of $20,000, 32½%; If gross is in excess of $25,000, 35%.

Aldine or Stanton or Capitol or Karlton or Keiths

If Aldine, terms to be agreed upon when booking is made.

(30): (10) pictures, 25% of gross; (15) pictures, 20% of gross.

For any picture playing a second week or any part thereof, terms to be five percent less than earned first week with a minimum of 20%. If gross same as first week, same terms as first week.

Any picture that Warner deems not suitable for showing first run Philadelphia may be eliminated without charge.

The deal sheet for the 1941–42, 1942–43, 1943–44 seasons covering carry-over first run at Karlton or provides that rental shall be 20% to $2,500, thereafter 50% split.

Deal sheet dated Oct. 26, 1943, for "Fired Wife" at the Earle which provides for a 6-day run at $1,750.

The agreement also contained the following provision:

"Revision of national allocations in the three top brackets may be obtained by Warner submitting to Universal sufficient evidence of failure of any picture to gross, in the percentage situations, a total amount comparable to grosses of previous pictures of the distributor which have warranted 35%, 30% and 25% allocations."

6. Other Terms: The following items were to be negotiated and agreed upon between Mr. William A. Scully and their zone managers:

A. Total commitments each situation.

B. Break-down of commitments against theatres in each situation.

C. Total number percentage pictures to be played in each situation.

D. Flat rental situations and prices for each bracket.

E. Clearance.

The following provision is included in the agreement:

"The total number of pictures in the three top brackets is to be cumulative over the three-year period; that is, neither party is obligated to allocate five pictures in each of the three brackets each year but may allocate more or less as the Universal production schedule may justify from year to year. If, by July 1st, 1943, Universal has allocated and Warner has accepted more than ten (10) pictures in any of the three top brackets, then the number of pictures in such brackets to be delivered for the season 1943–44 is to be subject to renegotiation."

Overage and underage to remain the same as in 1940–41 master agreement with following modification:

Film rentals payable for extended playing time on the top 10 pictures beyond playing time contracted for in the deal sheets shall not count as overage.

Clearance provided for in connection with each specific situation.

EXHIBIT 261 (R. 271)—UNIVERSAL PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRES

1. Parties: Agreement between Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Interstate Circuit, Inc. (Paramount), and Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., of Dallas, Tex. (Paramount).

2. Date of agreement: May 8, 1941.

3. Duration: 1941–42, 1942–43, 1943–44 seasons.

4. Coverage: Showing of Universal features, 1st and number of subsequent runs, shorts, serials, and news product for the seasons referred to above in certain specified theatres located in New Mexico and Texas.

5. Rental terms: Universal was to receive the sum of $260,000, payable at the rate of $5,000 per week for 52 consecutive weeks, commencing September 4, 1941. The contract provided that these payments were for certain units of service as specified. It was also provided that certain credits would be allowed if Universal should deliver less product than specified.

6. Other terms: The exhibitor had the right to exhibit any feature picture governed by the agreement in each first-run theatre at one midnight preview. Universal further agreed to hold available for the exhibitor six prints of each major picture for 30 days after available date and four prints on ordinary releases, provided exhibitor completes the first-run showing in such period for Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Fort Worth, and Austin.

The agreement also provided that for the 1942–43 season there would be a review and revision of the weekly payment by November 1, 1942. The contract stated that the purpose of this review and revision was to determine whether the $5,000 weekly payment plan shall be revised upward or downward. A similar arrangement was made for the 1943–44 season.

The exhibitor agreed to play product on substantially nationally designated percentage terms, set up by the distributor; these designations to be mutually agreed upon, based on performance; and if as a result of these designations on feature product there is an excess sum of money accumulated beyond the $260,000 payment, then Universal shall participate to the extent of 50% of this excess.

Exhibitor is not obligated to play any picture contracted for.

Subsequent run availabilities set out.

EXHIBIT 262 (R. 271)—UNIVERSAL PICTURES IN LOEW THEATRES

1. Parties: Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Poli-New England Theatres, Inc. (Loew's).

5. Rental Terms: Five at 20% to 40% plus 50% in excess of 40% sliding scale; 2½% reduction for double bills but minimum is 20%. Five at 20% to 40% in excess of 40% sliding scale, same double bill deductions. Six at 40% to 20%, if double bill, 5% reduction, but 20% minimum. Five outside producers releases at first or second group terms. Two at $550; the rest at $385. These flat-rental pictures could play day and date at 2 out of 3 of the following theatres: Tower, Uptown, and Esquire. Except as to 7 flat-rental pictures contracted for, if they played Esquire or Uptown, $220. If additional pictures used: $275 at the Tower; $220 at the Uptown or Esquire; $137.50 if at Plaza for 3/4 days.
6. Other Terms: Commitment: 31 if less than 50 released; 32 if 50 released; 33 if 51 or more released. Playing time is 7 days. Vaudeville terms on percent pictures to be agreed upon. This exhibit is a single deal sheet. It states that its terms are subject to a Master Agreement dated 9/30/41 and a Special Letter Agreement dated 2/23/44. Neither of these two last-mentioned agreements was furnished the Government. The deal sheet also states that percentage formula figures that apply to each theatre are set forth on Schedule B dated September 4, 1943. This schedule was not furnished the Government.

EXHIBIT 264 (R. 271)—COLUMBIA PICTURES IN THEATRES OF POLI-NEW ENGLAND THEATRES, INC. (LOEW'S), IN BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT

1. Parties: Columbia Pictures Corporation and Poli-New England Theatres, Inc.
2. Date: June 1, 1942.
3. Duration: 1943–1944 season.
4. Coverage: Poli and Majestic Theatres, Bridgeport, Conn.
5. Rental Terms: Sliding scale with the Exhibitor having the selection of "34 pictures out of 44." 8 to play

Poli only on sliding scale. If on double bill, terms reduced to 2½%. 4 to play Poli only on sliding scale. If on double bill, 2½% reduction. 22 at $300 each. With respect to the 12 top percentage pictures the distribution is to receive a minimum of 20%. "Sliding Scale" annexed to exhibit. Run and Clearance: Exclusive first run, Bridgeport. 30 days in Bridgeport, [illegible] days before Fairfield, Stratford, Westport, and Walnut Beach.

EXHIBIT 265 (R. 271)—COLUMBIA PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: Columbia Pictures Corp. and Affiliated Theatres Corp. (Fox).

2. Date of Agreement: November 23, 1942.

3. Duration: Three years—Sept. 1, 1942–Sept. 30, 1943; Sept. 1, 1943–Sept. 30, 1944; Sept. 1, 1944–Sept. 30, 1945.

4. Coverage: Washington and Oregon. Thirty to forty photoplays to be released by the distributor each season.

5. Rental Terms: Eight pictures on a percentage basis from 50% to 20% minimum of the net box office receipts computed in relation to the one percent sliding scale or reversion figures as specified on the deal sheets. Eight pictures on a percentage basis from 40% to 20% minimum computed on the same basis. The balance on a flat rental basis. The percentage is reduced 2½% on the first eight and 5% on the second eight when the feature is exhibited on a double feature program; computation is based upon 10ths and 12ths relating to the days of exhibition. When exhibited with a stage show or vaudeville a fair and reasonable percentage shall be agreed upon or arbitrated. For flat rental photoplays held over, the rental is 50% of the flat rental figure computed on a daily basis; and for percentage pictures the hold-over may revert to 15% computed on the same basis as for the original showing. A similar provision applies to move-overs.

6. Other Terms: Pictures exhibited in the one or two seasons immediately preceeding may be shown without cost in conjunction with another photoplay of the exhibitor.

The designations of the distributor of those plays to be agreed upon in the first 16 on a percentage basis may be arbitrated.

Photoplays released by the distributor in excess of 40 shall first be offered to the exhibitor.

Eliminations by the exhibitor shall be made only from the percentage and highest flat rental classifications in theatres where the exhibitor has agreed to exhibit part of the product only. In theatres where the exhibitor has to exhibit the entire product he may eliminate four photoplays from those included in the lowest flat rental classification only.

A shortage of commitment in any single theatre may be offset by an overage in another theatre in the same exchange territory.

In the event any theatre closes for a period of 8 days the contract is cancelled as of the first day the theatre closed and in the event of sale, if the distributor is not willing to transfer the contract to the purchaser the agreement is also cancelled.

Runs are specified on deal sheets which are not annexed to the exhibit.

The cost of give-aways may be deducted from the rental.

In a letter dated November 23, 1942, it is stated that the deal sheets do not contain the clearance but that the understanding is that the clearance to be specified in no event would be less favorable than that granted to each theatre for the motion picture season 1941–42.

3. Duration: Part of 1943–44 season.

4. Coverage: Theatres in New York City in Loew's Greater New York Theatre Circuit.—For "Johnny Come Lately."

5. Rental Terms: "Johnny Come Lately" is to play as the "A" picture for the so-called long half playing time in all of the theatres of the Loew Greater New York Theatre Circuit, on the following terms and conditions:

Twenty-five Percent (25%) of the gross receipts until such time as the combined gross for that production of all of the so-called Loew Metropolitan Theatres (excluding the State Theatre, New York City), shall equal the operating expenses of those theatres (such operating cost to include cost of second feature), plus the twenty-five percent (25%) film rental, plus a profit to the Exhibitor equal to Fifty Percent (50%) of the said twenty-five percent (25%) film rental. Thereafter, the gross receipts shall be divided Fifty Percent (50%) to the Distributor and Fifty Percent (50%) to the Exhibitor.

As to the State Theatre, New York City, the film rental for that production shall be computed entirely separate and apart from the computations of the film rental for the balance of the so-called Loew Metropolitan Circuit of Theatres, in the following manner:

There shall first be deducted from the gross receipts the actual cost of the stage show, musicians and stagehands, the cost of the stage show is Seven Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-Five Dollars ($7,785). Then the Distributor is to receive Twenty-Five Percent (25%) of the remaining gross receipts until such time as the theatre receives an amount equal to one-half of the said Twenty-Five (25%) film rental as profit. Thereafter, the gross receipts shall be divided Fifty Percent (50%) to the Distributor and Fifty Percent (50%) to the Exhibitor.

See page 15, Par. 6a. Butterfield agrees to cause to be executed and delivered to the new company, leases on a number of specified theatres in a number of designated towns for the term of 25 years.

Page 17: Butterfield agreed to turn over certain other theatres and theatre sites to new company.

Page 17: Butterfield owns a stock interest in the Garden Theatre, Battle Creek, Michigan, and the Regent Theatre at Battle Creek, Michigan, and agreed to lease this stock to the new company and to subsequently acquire balance of stock on behalf of new company.

Page 19: Butterfield and Kunsky and Trendle own 52% of the stock of Consolidated Theatres, Inc., operating theatres in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Butterfield agreed to buy out Kunsky and Trendle and arranged to have the new company take over the payment of the cost of the theatres as well as his original interest.

Page 20: The new company acquired control of 5 theatres (See Schedule H), Bay City, Michigan, through 100% ownership of Southern Enterprises, Inc., which owned 50% of the operating company Wenonah Theatre Co.

Schedule H, Page 95

F. P. L. owns 100% Southern Enterprises, Inc., which in turn owns 50% of Wenonah Theatre Co., which owns, leases or operates the following theatres in Bay City, Michigan: Regent, State, Columbus, Washington, Wenonah.

Page 22: B & K acts in capacity of guarantor for subsidiary, Saginaw Theatre Co., a subsidiary of B & K certain theatres in Saginaw, Michigan, as follows: (a) A theatre to be erected and leased from Elf Khurafeh Temple Association in Saginaw, Michigan; (b) The Mecca Theatre, Saginaw, Michigan. The new company is to assume the two above leases.

Page 23: F. P. L., Keith, and Butterfield agree to cause the new company to enter into an employment contract with W. S. Butterfield for five years beginning 1/2/27 for his service as president of the new company at $1,000 per week.

Page 24: Refers to Schedule "K" on page 144. An employment contract for five years beginning 1/2/27 between F. P. L., Keith, and Butterfield with Edward C. Beatty to be general manager of the new company.

Page 27 and 28: F. P. L., Butterfield, and Keith agree, 1/2/27, that Publix as agent shall for twenty-five years purchase all motion pictures to be exhibited in the theatres of new company and for any theatres subsequently acquired.

Page 31, Par. 19: A twenty-five year franchise, dated from 1/2/27, for F. P. L. pictures to be made by new company.

Page 34, Par. 19 (e): When the new company cannot exhibit all of F. P. L. products in a city—of the new company or its subsidiaries and any other theatres in such places * * *."

"* * * FPL shall have the right to make a division of such available pictures of FPL between the theatres.

* * * Provided always, however, that in the event that: (1) at any time Famous Players shall find that it cannot obtain exhibition for all of its pictures distributed by it in such place, unless it licenses all of such pictures to a theatre or theatres other than those of the new company or of its subsidiaries in such place, or (2) if FPL finds that it is unable to obtain exhibition for such of the pictures distributed by it as the new company or its subsidiaries shall fail to take. * * * then FPL shall have the right, during the continuance of such conditions in such place, to dispose of any or all of its pictures to theatres other than those of the new company * * *; and provided further, that FP shall in no event make contracts with respect to other theatres in such places for more than one year's releases at a time, unless with the written consent of the new company."

Page 36: The provisions of Par. (e), page 34, apply in Grand Rapids, Michigan, even though the best theatre of the new company has 400 seats less than the best theatre of the opposition.

Page 37 (h): The new company shall not reduce or maintain prices below the level of admission prices charged for like classes of theatres in cities, towns, and villages having comparable operating conditions to the end that all things being relatively equal FPL shall receive as favorable film rentals for the exhibition of its pictures * * * by the new company * * * as it receives elsewhere in the U. S. under comparable conditions.

Page 38 (i): All FPL features shall receive first run in the new company houses which have a first-run policy. Pictures of FPL shall not be exhibited for a first run in any theatre of the new company having a second-run policy without the consent of FPL in each instance.

Page 40, Article 20: "F. P. L. and Butterfield severally agree to cause the new company promptly following its organization to agree with Keith that Publix will, as agent for the new company and its subsidiaries, contract from time to time and from year to year, wherever demanded by Keith for first-run exhibitors in each of the cities, towns, and villages in which the new company or its subsidaries have one or more theatres, from time to time during the term of this agreement, of a number of feature motion pictures of P. D. (or any corporation producing or distributing feature motion pictures substituted by Keith for said P. D. C. * * *)."

(P. D. C.—Producers Distributing Corporation.)

The price of motion pictures of PDC shall be determined by mutual agreement between PDC and Publix. If an agreement cannot be reached, the matter will be arbitrated as in the case of arbitration for pictures of F. P. L.

Page 43, Par. 21: Pictures shall play even though the film rental terms are in dispute and shall thereafter be arbitrated.

Page 44, Par 24: The new company shall pay Publix $5 per week for each theatre of new company served by Publix under said contract from time to time. This fee may be adjusted. Such fee shall represent fair compensation to Publix for its services under said contract.

Page 44, Par. 25: Publix will be compensated for exploitation of any pictures by the new company, all or a substantial part of which shall be exhibited in theatres of the new company.

Page 45, Par. 26: This contract as provided for in Article 18 may be assigned by Publix to F. P. L. or to any corporation which may be owned or controlled by F. P. L.

Page 46, Par. 28: Butterfield, F. P. L., and Keith agree to incorporate promptly a corporation to be named Butterfield Michigan Company or such other available name hereafter referred to as "second company." This stock shall be subscribed and paid for in cash at $10.00 a share. Butterfield buying the A stock, FPL buying the B stock, Keith buying the C stock.

Page 47: The purpose of the "second company" is to acquire theatres during the term of the contract outside the areas of Detroit or Grand Rapids, Michigan, in a circle having a 10-mile radius. The agreement however, provides that either the "new company" or the "second company" may make the acquisition of any additional theatre.

Pages 47–48, Par. 30: Provision was made for addition of new theatres to the list covered by the contract.

Par. 31: The provisions of this contract to apply to the second companies, with certain exceptions.

Par. 32: Butterfield, FPL, and Keith shall cause the new company and the second company to enter into a contract with each other providing that during the term of the agreement the new company shall devote and the second company shall engage, the services of the new company in the administration of the affairs of the second company.

EXHIBIT 395 (R. 2165)—FOX PICTURES IN RKO THEATRES

1. Parties: Fox Film Corporation, as Distributor; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, by its Agent; RKO Film Booking Corporation; RKO Proctor Corporation, by its Agent; RKO Film Booking Corporation, as Exhibitors.

2. Date of Agreement: January 2, 1935.

3. Duration: 3 years—August 1, 1934 to July 31, 1935; August 1, 1935, to July 31, 1936; August 1, 1936, to July 31, 1937.

4. Coverage: Greater New York and includes all feature motion pictures released by distributor during each of the specified motion picture seasons.

5. Rental Terms 25% of the gross for the second and fourth pictures featuring Shirley Temple, with a reduction to 17½% for double feature showing with vaudeville. $31,700 for the first and third pictures featuring Shirley Temple. $2,300 for each of four feature pictures designated by the distributor to be exhibited in not more than 14 of said theatres. The balance of said pictures shall pay an average of $12,400 per picture to be allocated to the respective pictures by mutual agreement.

For the second and third seasons the parties mutually agree upon the playing time to be afforded the pictures and the license fees to be paid by the exhibitor, and in the event of failure to agree, the matter to be arbitrated.

6. Other Terms: The distributor has the right during the first season to sell the Kingsway or Avalon Theatres to play Fox pictures day and date with the RKO major Brooklyn circuit. If during the second and third seasons the exhibitor shall provide a theatre of similar size and caliber in the general location of the Kingsway and Avalon, then the distributor shall sell its pictures to the theatre so provided by the exhibitor at prices to be mutually agreed upon or determined by arbitration.

In respect to the theatres covered and located in New York, Bronx, and Westchester Counties, the protection granted over any other runs in those counties shall be 7 days from the last day of exhibition. The same protection is granted to theatres located in Kings, Queens, and Nassau Counties.

The admission prices now being charged at said theatres shall not be reduced during the exhibition of any picture the film rental for which is based on a percentage of the gross receipts without the consent of the distributor.

By letter dated January 2, 1935, the Riverside and Nemo Theatres were included in the franchise agreement; and by letter dated January 2, 1935, confirmation is made of existing franchise agreements in effect betwen Fox Film Corporation and Skouras Theatre Corporation and the Randforce Amusement Corporation, dated respectively November 2, 1931, and December 16, 1931, which agreements granted to various theatres mentioned therein first subsequent run in Greater New York and other Metropolitan districts.

By letter dated May 1, 1936, the exhibitor was granted permission to substitute a theatre on the Grand Opera House site, 23d Street, New York City, in place of the present 23d Street theatre.

EXHIBIT 399 (R. 2185)—PARAMOUNT PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRES

1. Parties: Paramount Pictures, Inc., and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, as Distributor and [Paramount Parties] as Exhibitors.

2. Date of Agreement: Undated.

3. Duration: September 25, 1942, to September 23, 1943.

4. Coverage: Specified theatres in certain cities in Arkansas, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, New Mexico, Indiana, Texas, Virginia, Idaho, Utah, West Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Mississippi, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Massachusetts, Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Arizona, New York, Ohio, Louisiana, Alabama, Pennsylvania, Michigan, all feature plays released by the distributor for exhibition during the 1942–43 season.

5. Rental Terms: A percent is allocated to each theatre licensed based upon the total revenue derived from exhibition of the features in the United States after deduction of the amount of revenue derived from Paramount's affiliated theatres. An estimate is made within seven days after the date of general release of the feature photoplay and the exhibitor shall pay his proper percentage of such estimate in equal weekly installments of 1/17 of such total estimate. During the 16th week, a revised estimate of the national total should be made and adjustments made between the parties to compensate for any over or under payment.

6. Other Terms: Runs are specified for each theatre.

EXHIBIT 419a (R. 2460)—RKO PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRES

1. Parties: Letter agreement between RKO Radio Pictures Inc. and Theatres Service Corp. (Paramount).
2. Date of Agreement: June 1, 1944.

from date of agreement and paid in weekly installments as specified; with subsequent estimated payments and final adjustment on basis of actual fees earned.

6. Other Terms: Clearance and availability to be the same as were in effect on date of agreement.

EXHIBIT 471 (R. 2474)—COLUMBIA PICTURES IN LOEW THEATRES

1. Parties: Columbia Pictures Corporation and Marcus Loew Booking Agency.

2. Date: Feb. 7, 1945.

3. Duration: 1944–45, 1945–46 seasons.

4. Coverage: Loew's New York Metropolitan Circuit and State Theatre 44 pictures annually. Foreign pictures excluded.

5. Rental Terms: 14 pictures at a sliding scale percentage of total gross. 6 control figures are set up. 20% up to a certain control figure, with a maximum increase of 1% when succeeding control figure is reached until last control figure when terms to be 25% plus 66⅔% of additional gross receipts.

The control figures reflect the operating expenses of the circuit and the estimated Loew profit at each control figure. Weekly operating expense for each house is set out in a schedule. Control figures subject to variance in case of double featuring where cost of second feature is more or less than $18,000, which figure was included in the computation of the control figure.

Without Columbia's consent second feature cost of Columbia or Universal's second features not to exceed $18,000 and $19,500 for other distributors' second feature. If any of the 30 pictures play as a second feature in one or two specified theatres, Loew to pay $500 for each of the two theatres it plays.

The 14 percentage pictures are to play at 5 specified theatres at 15%.

30 pictures at $9,475 each.

The 14 top pictures licensed to Loew for its Broadway State Theatre at $2,500 each.

6. Other Terms: Loew has right to exhibit each of the 30 flat rental pictures for such playing time as it deems desirable and may show each picture in any or all of its theatres in the circuit.

Loew's circuit theatre to have 1st run circuit showing (7 days after Broadway run) in all boroughs, except Brooklyn, where 7 days after downtown Brooklyn 1st run; in Westchester County (except in Peekskill) and Long Island.

13 specified theatres given a zone clearance respectively over a large number of theatres respectively. Schedule "D" provides: "In addition to the foregoing named theatres over which clearance is given to the aforesaid Loew Theatres, and any other theatre or theatres now or hereafter located within a radius measured by the distance from the exhibitor's theatre and the theatres mentioned in the above list, located farthest away from the exhibitor's theatre 7 days clearance after conclusion of showing."

EXHIBIT 472 (R. 2475)—COLUMBIA PICTURES IN FOX THEATRES

1. Parties: Columbia Pictures Corp. and Fox Inter-Mountain Amusement Corp.

2. Date of agreement: November 23, 1942.

3. Duration: Three years—Sept. 1, 1942–Sept. 30, 1943; Sept. 1, 1943–Sept. 30, 1944; Sept. 1, 1944–Sept. 30, 1945.

4. Coverage: Colorado, Wyoming, Nebraska, Utah, Idaho, Montana and New Mexico. 30 to 40 photoplays released by the distributor during each of the three seasons.

5. Rental terms: Eight pictures on a percentage basis from 50% to 20% minimum of the net box office receipts computed in relation to the one percent sliding scale or reversion figures as specified on the deal sheets.

Eight pictures on a percentage basis from 40% to 20% minimum computed on the same basis. The balance on a flat rental basis. The percentage is reduced 2½% on the first eight and 5% on the second eight when the feature is exhibited on a double feature program computation is based upon 10ths and 12ths relating to the days of exhibition. When exhibited with a stage show or vaudeville a fair and reasonable percentage shall be agreed upon or arbitrated. For flat rental photoplays held over, the rental is 50% of the flat rental figure computed on a daily basis, and for percentage pictures the hold-over may revert to 15% computed on the same basis as for the original showing. A similar provision applies to move-overs.

6. Other terms: Pictures exhibited in the one or two seasons immediately preceding may be shown without cost in conjunction with another photoplay of the exhibitor.

The designations of the distributor of these plays to be agreed upon in the first 16 on a percentage basis may be arbitrated.

Photoplays released by the distributor in excess of 40 shall first be offered to the exhibitor.

Eliminations by the exhibitor shall be made only from the percentage and highest flat rental classifications in theatres where the exhibitor has agreed to exhibit part of the product only. In theatres where the exhibitor has to exhibit the entire product he may eliminate four photoplays from these included in the lowest flat rental classification only.

A shortage of commitment in any single theatre may be offset by an overage in another theatre in the same exchange territory.

In the event any theatre closes for a period of 8 days the contract is cancelled as of the first day the theatre closed and in the event of sale, if the distributor is not willing to transfer the contract to the purchaser the agreement is also cancelled.

Runs are specified on deal sheets which are not annexed to the exhibit.

The cost of give-aways may be deducted from the rental.

In a letter dated November 23, 1942, it is stated that the deal sheets do not contain the clearance but that the understanding is that the clearance to be specified in no event would be less favorable than that granted to each theatre for the motion picture season 1941–42.

EXHIBIT 473 (R. 2475)—UNIVERSAL PICTURES IN RKO THEATRES

1. Parties: Universal Film Exchanges and B. F. Keith Corporation (RKO).

2. Date of Agreement: Sept. 1, 1941 but actually executed January 16, 1942.

3. Duration: 1941–42, 1942–43.

4. Coverage: Specified RKO Theatres in 15 cities. First run unless otherwise specified in deal sheets.* Expressly excluded are foreign made pictures, pictures produced by an outside producer, Westerns and action pictures of cheap variety.

* The agreement refers to attached deal sheets. The photostat of the agreement furnished by Universal to the Government did not contain deal sheets.

5. Rental Terms: For 1941–42 season where RKO licensed all pictures, 6 plus 3 Frank Lloyd productions at 35%; 6 at 30%, 8 at 25%, flat rental for 23. Same terms, but proportionate decrease in number of features in each classification, where RKO sold a split (Providence and in 1 out of 3 RKO theatres in New Brunswick). Prior to July 1942, parties to agree on rental terms for 1942–43 product.

As to pictures in first two brackets played on a double bill RKO could deduct actual cost of second feature before computing Universal's share in gross receipts. As to feaures in third bracket, double billed, 5% allowance. Deductions allowed on percentage pictures played with a stage show or added attractions. On holdovers and moveovers of percentage pictures in first and second bracket, 25% less cost of second feature if any, in third bracket, 20% if single, 15% if part of double bill. On holdovers of flat rental pictures, 50% of original rental pro rated to one day, except as to top bracket pictures where all were sold on flat rental basis.

6. Other Terms: Midnight shows and previews allowed exhibitor at reduced rentals; Universal may discontinue authorization for previews if it deems itself adversely affected.

Universal to designate the classification of its pictures, but if RKO disputes classification, matter to be subject to arbitration.

Clearance and availability to be same as provided for the 1940–41 season unless otherwise indicated on deal sheets.

If any theatre hereof is closed permanently, or its interest in the operation of any theatre hereof is discontinued by RKO, the contract insofar as it affects such theatre may be cancelled by RKO as of the date of such permanent closing or discontinuance.

If any theatre hereof is closed temporarily, that is, for a period of not less than eight (8) weeks, then RKO shall have the right as to such theatre to cancel pictures becoming available during the time the theatre is so closed.

If the policy of any theatre changes permanently, the terms and commitments for such theatre shall be subject to review and revision.

All road shows to be first offered RKO.

As part of the consideration for RKO's entering into this agreement Universal agreed to release RKO from unplayed commitments and monies due for periods prior to 1941–42 season on Universal product.

EXHIBIT 474 (R. 2475)—PARAMOUNT PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRE, LOS ANGELES

1. Parties: Paramount Pictures, Inc., and Partmar Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: August 30, 1939.

3. Duration: September 1, 1939–August 31, 1949.

4. Coverage: Paramount features, shorts and newsreels in Paramount Theatre,* Los Angeles, California.

5. Rental Terms: If theatre has a stage show policy, rental terms for first year are as follows:

As to Class "A" feature: For 1st week 30% to $20,000 then 50/50; for 2nd and 3rd weeks 25% to $17,000 then 50/50. If 3rd week's gross receipts less than $18,000 terms to be 15%. Except as to the 15% terms, in computing the license fee, cost of stage show up to $4,500 to be deducted.

As to Class "B" pictures 25% of weekly gross to $17,000 then 50/50—cost of stage show up to $4,500 first deductible from weekly gross; as to 4 Class "B" pictures may revert to 15% if weekly gross less than $18,000.

For Class "C" features 15% of weekly gross up to $21,500 then 50/50.

For each Class "D" features, $1,050.

On a straight feature policy, terms for first year as follows:

Class "A" minimum fee, 35% until gross receipts reach a split figure which will allow exhibitor to recover operating expenses and minimum license fee paid plus 50% of such minimum fee; and in addition to such minimum fee 50% in excess of gross receipts.

---

*In neither Paramount's subsidiary corporation list of 1939 (Exhibit 62, R. 187) nor of 1945 (Ex. 64, R. 187) is this corporation listed. The Paramount Theatre appears upon Paramount's theatre list of 1945 (Ex. 161, R. 242) as a theatre in which Paramount is interested. Exhibit 376 (R. 888) which is a list of Paramount franchises prepared by Paramount for this trial lists the operator as an independent and states the theatre is leased on a flat rental basis. The agreement, however, provides in some detail for the internal control of the exhibitor.

Class "B" features: Same terms as for Class "A."
Class "C" features: 30%.
Class "D" features: 25%.
Class "E" features: $1,050 each.

If any of the above features is shown on a double bill, license fee of second feature to be first deducted from gross receipts but not over $1,050.

6. Other Terms: Paramount, in each of the 10 years, and regardless of the number of features released by it in each of these years and regardless of the classification thereof made by it in licensing other theatres, is to classify from time to time the features licensed to this theatre. For the first year, if theatre operated on a stage show policy, the classification was to be 1 Class "A" feature, 20 Class "B" features, 16 Class "C" features, the rest Class "D" features. If on straight feature policy, for first year classification to be 1 in Class "A," 5 in Class "B," 12 in Class "C," 12 in Class "D," the rest in Class "E."

The Exhibitor agrees to exhibit at the Paramount Theatre during each year of the ten (10) year period of this agreement such number of feature photoplays licensed hereunder as shall be necessary to consume not less than forty-six (46) weeks of playing time at the Paramount Theatre during each such year and to pay the license fees for not less than such number of feature photoplays.

If during the remaining six (6) weeks of any yearly period of the term of this agreement the Exhibitor shall not exhibit any feature photoplays licensed hereunder, and shall exhibit feature photoplays not released by or through Paramount, then and in such event the Exhibitor agrees to pay to Paramount for each such week the sum of One Thousand Fifty Dollars ($1,050.00) on the first business day of each such week. The Exhibitor agrees that it will not exhibit such other feature photoplays not licensed hereunder for more than two (2) consecutive weeks during any month of any yearly period hereof.

Each feature, newsreel and short licensed to be exhibited at least 1 week and Class "A" features at least 3 weeks. The exhibitor is given an extended run privilege on features. Stage shows for the purpose of the agreement are such stage shows as should cost the exhibitor at least $4,500 a week. Stage shows are to be first class De Lux shows. Stage show policy is one where stage shows as defined are part of the program. Straight feature policy is a policy of showing only motion pictures or motion pictures and stage shows of lesser cost than $4,500 a week or consuming less than 30 minutes.

Paramount and exhibitor to endeavor to agree each year after first year as to terms, including classifications of features, clearances, and minimum admission prices.

Subject to otherwise agreeing, clearances to commence from conclusion of exhibition and to be same as for 1939–1940 season.

Minimum admission prices for first year fixed.

If the lease covering the theatre, simultaneously entered into between Paramount Pictures Inc. and Partmar Corporation, is terminated or if Paramount is divested of its interest in the theatre, Paramount may cancel the agreement but not if exhibitor continues in lawful possession and operates the theatre. There is an agreement as to the ownership of the stock of the exhibitor, and Paramount is given right to cancel franchise if certain changes in stock or management of the exhibitor occurs.

EXHIBIT 475 (R. 2485)—UNITED ARTISTS PICTURES IN PARAMOUNT THEATRES

1. Parties: United Artists Corporation and Minnesota Amusement Company.

2. Date of Agreement: Sept. 20, 1944.

3 & 4. Duration and Coverage: United Artists Corporation made a contract with the Minnesota Amusement Company for the picture "Abroad With Two Yanks." Three contracts were made at the same time, one covering first runs in situations outside of Minneapolis and St. Paul, one covering first run in those two cities, and the third contract covering subsequent run.

It was provided that the picture was to play first run in the following situation in the "A" theatres on a preferred change playing time: Aberdeen, South Dakota, Austin, Minnesota, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, Duluth, Minnesota, Fargo, North Dakota, Glen Forks, North Dakota, Hibbing, Minnesota, Huron, South Dakota, La Crosse, Wisconsin, Madison, South Dakota, Minot, North Dakota, Mitchell, South Dakota. Rochester, Minnesota, St. Cloud, Minnesota, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, Superior, Wisconsin, Virginia, Minnesota, Watertown, South Daktota, Winona, Minnesota.

The picture was to play second run in a number of specified towns and theatres.

5. Rental Terms: The first run contract, outside of Minneapolis and St. Paul, provided for 35% of the gross which could revert to 25% by 2½% steps based on a cumulative split figure. All reversion figures to be based upon house expense, film rentals, and one-half of the film rental as profit. La Crosse, Wisconsin, not to be included in a cumulative split figure.

Midnight shows were to be 5% less than the regular terms.

The subsequent run contract was made on a basis of 25% of gross playing time to be agreed upon.

The contract for Minneapolis and St. Paul provided for 30% of the gross but if that failed to equal house expense, film rental, and 50% of the film rental as profit, terms to revert to 27½%. If at 27½% the gross failed to equal house expense, film rental, and 50% of film rental as profit, terms to revert to 25%. Contract covered the Orpheum theatre for 7 day minimum and Orpheum theatre in St. Paul, 7 day minimum. It provided that holdovers and moveover terms were to be negotiated. Midnight shows at terms 5% less than regular terms.

6. Other terms: Minimum admission prices and clearance not specified.

Winston Salem, N. C., Carolina or State or Forsyth or Colonial.
Bluefield, W. Va., Granada or State.
Danville, Va., Capitol or Rialto or Dan.

The agreement sets out the maximum playing for each of the above cities.

The agreement also covers 2nd run for many of the above cities.

5. Rental terms: If picture grosses $40,000 or over—over the complete circuit the terms are to be 35% of the gross receipts.

If picture grosses $30,000 or over—but less than $40,000—terms to be 30% of the gross receipts.

If picture grosses less than $30,000—terms to be 25% of the gross receipts.

Theatres and playing time to be mutually agreed upon.

Gross receipts as set forth in this contract means receipts from admissions from any theatre herein involved after deducting all taxes on admissions.

If picture is exhibited at Midnight Shows or Kiddie Shows or Late Shows, the receipts of these shows are not to be included in the receipts of the regular run, and exhibitor agrees to pay for such shows, terms of 5% less than designated terms.

Holdovers in the same theatre are to be 5% less than designated terms. Pictures may be moved to another house for a special engagement not to be considered a run, at same rental terms as regular run. Moveovers to play at 25%.

When this subject plays a Give-Away Day, the amount of the addition to the Give-Away may be deducted from the gross before figuring the Distributor's share.

Second run is licensed for 1 to 3 days. In each situation alternative flat rentals are set up. The average top figure is less than $30; the average low figure is less than $25. The choice of alternatives depends upon whether the picture grosses enough on first run to place it in the 35% bracket. Exhibitor has privilege of late show at no additional charges.

6. Other Terms: Clearance 90 days A house, and 60 days B house, within a radius of 5 miles of city limits. High Point, N. C. 14 days over Thomasville, N. C. and Wilmington, N. C. 14 days over Carolina Beach, N. C. Bluefield, W. Va. 30 days ahead of Princeton, Bramwell, W. Va. and Bluefield, Va. 14 days ahead of Matoake, McComas, Pocahontas, and Tazewell, Va. Danville as determined by American Arbitration Board. Clearance for second run for each of the cities sold was 30 days over a third run within a radius of 5 miles of city limits.

II—Theatre Operating Agreements

A. Examples of Theatre Operating Agreements Between Defendants (printed in full):

1. Pooling Agreement Between Paramount subsidiary, Minnesota Amusement Company, and RKO subsidiary, St. Paul Theatres Company (Ex. 205, R. 257).

May 28, 1936.

Minnesota Amusement Company,
17 North 6th Street,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Sirs: You have advised the undersigned that you are in possession of, and in control of the operations of, the Paramount, Riviera, and Tower theatres located in St. Paul, Minnesota, and have represented that you will continue in such possession and control for the term of the Agreement hereinafter referred to.

The undersigned is in possession of, and in control of the operations of, the Palace Orpheum Theatre, St. Paul, Minnesota, and represents that it will be in such possession and control for said term.

You and the undersigned desire to enter into an agreement providing for the cooperative operation of said theatres, all on the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth.

In consideration of the premises and of the mutual agreements hereinafter contained, it is hereby agreed, subject to your confirmation hereof and the approval of your Board of Directors and of the Board of Directors of the undersigned, that on or before June 26, 1936, or the nearest ending thereto of a theatrical week, you and the undersigned will enter into an agreement (hereinafter called the Agreement) containing substantially the following provisions with such additions and modifications as may be mutually agreed upon between you and the undersigned:

I. TERM

The term of the Agreement shall begin at 12:01 o'clock A. M., June 26, 1936, and shall end at 12:00 o'clock midnight August 31, 1941, or the nearest ending thereto of a theatrical week as determined by the Operating Committee hereinafter referred to; provided, however,

(a) that the Agreement shall terminate as of 12:00 o'clock midnight August 31, 1938, or any subsequent August 31 in the event that the net earnings (as hereinafter defined) paid to you for the year e ding on the preceding June 26 have not equalled $82,000 and that you have given notice to the undersigned not later than the June 1 immediately preceding such August 31 that you desire to cancel the Agreement as of such August 31 if such earnings do not equal $82,000; and

(b) that the Agreement shall terminate as of 12:00 o'clock midnight August 31, 1938, or any subsequent August 31 in the event that the net earnings (as hereinafter defined) paid to the undersigned for the year ending on the preceding June 26 have not equalled $39,500 and that the undersigned has given you notice not later than the Ju[illegible] immediately preceding such August 31 that the undersigned desires to cancel the Agreement as of such August 31 if such earnings do not equal $39,500.

II. OPERATIONS

There will be created and maintained during the term of the Agreement a committee to be known as, and which is hereinafter called, "the Operating Committee" consisting of two (2) mem[illegible]rs, each of which members shall from time to time desi[illegible] an alternate to act as a member of the Operating Committee in his absence or inability to act. One member of the Operating Committee shall at all times be the representative of and shall be designated by the undersigned; and the other member of the Operating Committee shall at all times be the representative of and shall be designated by you. Either party to the Agreement may at any time, upon written notice to the other, substitute a new member of the Operating Committee for its representative on the Operating Committee. It is contemplated that the Operating Committee shall meet in New York City.

The Operating Committee shall have power and authority, from time to time, to direct the entertainment policy which shall be followed at the aforesaid theatres, the motion pictures which shall be obtained for exhibition in such theatres and the prices to be paid therefor, and may delegate such of its powers as it desires to a committee to be known as, and which is hereinafter called, "the Local Operating Committee," the membership of which shall be designated in the same manner as the membership of the Operating Committee. It is contemplated that the Local Operating Committee shall meet in Minneapolis. Neither the Operating Committee nor the Local Operating Committee shall have power to take any action without the concurrence of both its members.

The product of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., shall be acquired through the undersigned for use in the aforesaid theatres on the same terms as such product shall be acquired by other companies affiliated with RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; subject, however, in the case of each specific commitment, to the approval of the Operating Committee.

The product of Paramount Pictures, Inc., shall be acquired through you for use in the aforesaid theatres on the same terms as such product shall be acquired by other companies affiliated with Paramount Pictures Inc.; subject, however, in the case of each specific commitment, to the approval of the Operating Committee.

The contracts in respect of the product of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. shall be signed by the undersigned, and the contracts in respect of the product of Paramount Pictures Inc. shall be signed by you.

Upon the termination of the Agreement for any cause the undersigned shall have the right to assume and acquire any outstanding contracts for the exhibition in the aforesaid theatres of the product of any of the following companies: RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Pictures Corporation and Vitagraph, Inc., or any successor corporation to any of said corporations, and you have a similar option in respect of contracts for the product of any other motion picture producing or distributing companies.

If either the Operating Committee or the Local Operating Committee shall at any time determine that it is advisable to exhibit vaudeville, stage shows or similar attractions in any of the aforesaid theatres, such vaudeville, stage shows or similar attractions shall be contracted for through Orpheum Circuit Booking Corporation or Radio-Keith-Orpheum Western Vaudeville Exchange or Artist Booking Offices, Inc., and Orpheum Circuit Booking Corporation or Radio-Keith-Orpheum Western Vaudeville Exchange or Artist Booking Office, Inc., as the case may be, shall be entitled to its customary booking fees in respect thereof; provided, however, that all fees so collected shall be divided into two (2) equal parts one of which shall be paid to Artist Booking Office, Inc., and the other to Orpheum Circuit Booking Corporation and Radio-Keith-Orpheum Western Vaudeville Exchange jointly.

III. POOLING AND DIVISION OF GROSS RECEIPTS

The gross receipts derived from the operation of the aforesaid theatres shall be applied, under the direction of the Operating Committee, as follows:

(a) to the payment of the operating expenses of the aforesaid theatres (which term shall not be deemed to include rent, taxes, interest, property insurance and other fixed charges) including all sums paid on account of salaries of house staffs, service fees for sound equipment, fees payable to American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers, all costs of entertainment, governmental license fees, costs of electricity, fuel, water, gas, telegrams, telephone calls and postage, public liability, burglarly and similar insurance, and costs (which shall not be amortized) of ordinary incidental repairs and maintenance.

(b) in the event that the agreement referred to in Section IV hereof shall be entered into with Orpheum Theater and Realty Co., Ltd. in respect of the President Theatre, St. Paul, to the payment of all sums payable to Orpheum Theater and Realty Co., Ltd. in respect thereof.

(c) to the payment to you of $2,650 per annum in respect of the steam supplied to you under your lease of the Paramount Theatre, and the balance, if any, remaining after such application (which balance is herein called "net earnings") shall be divided as follows:

At the end of each theatrical accounting month (which shall consist of such periods of four and five weeks as the parties may determine) 67½% thereof shall be paid to you and 32½% thereof shall be paid to the undersigned until such time as you shall have received in the calendar year beginning on the preceding June 26 $109,350 and thereafter for the balance of such calendar year in the ratio of 60% to you and 40% to the undersigned.

Appropriate provisions shall be made for prorating the earnings of any fractional portion of a year at the termination of the Agreement so as to provide for a division in a similar ratio as if the Agreement had terminated on a June 25.

You and the undersigned will each be supplied (a) with daily statements of box office receipts of each of the aforesaid theatres, and (b) with weekly statements of gross receipts and operating expenses within seven (7) days after the end of each theatre week.

Any of the aforesaid theatres may be closed at any time whether or not due to casualty without affecting the division of net earnings between you and the undersigned; provided, however, that the Palace Orpheum Theatre shall not be closed at such times or for such periods as will constitute a default by the undersigned under the existing lease thereof.

IV. PRESIDENT THEATRE, ST. PAUL

You and the undersigned will endeavor to enter into an agreement (either directly or through a nominee designated for the purpose) with Orpheum Theater and Realty Co., Ltd., the owner of the President Theatre, St. Paul, Minnesota, providing:

(a) that during the term of the Agreement the President Theatre shall be operated by a nominee of you and the undersigned, or by you and the undersigned, or by either you or the undersigned, as you and the undersigned may determine (which party is hereinafter in this article called the Tenant),

(b) that the Tenant will pay as rent for the President Theatre a fixed rent of $2,000 a year gross to the landlord, and a contingent rent equal to the amount by which 25% of the annual net earnings derived from the operation of the President Theatre exceeds $2,000, and

(c) that Orpheum Theater and Realty Co., Ltd., may cancel said agreement at any time on condition that it shall agree that the President Theatre shall not be used for theatrical purposes at any time during the remainder of the term of the Agreement.

Upon the making of such agreement with Orpheum Theatre and Realty Co., Ltd., appropriate instruments will be executed to provide that the operation of the President Theatre shall be controlled by the Operating Committee; that all expenses of the Tenant, including the rent payable by it to Orpheum Theater and Realty Co., Ltd., shall be paid out of the gross earnings under the Agreement and shall be treated as expenses in determining net earnings under the Agreement and any profits obtained by the Tenant shall be treated as earnings under the Agreement.

V. TERMINATION

The Agreement shall terminate in the event of the insolvency of you or the undersigned or in the event that you shall lose possession and control of the Paramount, Riviera, and Tower theatres or any one of them or in the event the undersigned shall lose possession and control of the Palace Orpheum Theatre.

VI.

During the term of the Agreement neither you nor the undersigned nor any company affiliated with you or the undersigned shall at any time become interested in the operation of any theatre located in downtown St. Paul or of any theatre which may be considered to compete with the Paramount, Riviera, Tower, and Palace Orpheum Theatres, or any one of them.

You may continue the operation of the Cameo Theatre, St. Paul, provided such operation is conducted on a basis which shall be noncompetitive with any of the aforesaid theatres. At any time at your request the Cameo Theatre may be subjected to the cooperative control of the Operating Committee provided that in that event (a) the distribution of the net earnings under the Agreement shall not be changed; (b) there shall be paid to you as part of the operating expenses, annually, the sum of $2,000 or 25% of the net profits derived from the operation of the Cameo Theatre, whichever shall be the greater; and (c) you may withdraw the Cameo Theatre from such cooperative control at any time by covenanting with the undersigned that it will not be used for theatrical purposes during the remainder of the term of the Agreement.

VII. ASSIGNMENT

The Agreement shall not be assigned by either you or the undersigned without the written consent of the other party first had and obtained.

Very truly yours,

ST. PAUL THEATRES COMPANY,
By N. J. BLUMBERG, Vice President.

2. Pooling Agreement Between Paramount subsidiary, Quaker Theatres Corporation, and Warner subsidiary, Stanley Company of America (Ex. 221, R. 264).

Agreement entered into this 27th day of August, 1936, by and between Stanley Company of America, a Delaware corporation, hereinafter referred to as "Stanley" and Quaker Theatres Corporation, a Delaware corporation, hereinafter referred to as "The Company",

Witnesseth:

Whereas Stanley represents that it leases and operates the Circle, State and 69th Street Theatres, in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, which leases are for a period extending beyond the term of this agreement and which leases are valid and in full force and effect, and

Whereas The Company represents that it leases and operates the Tower, Roosevelt, Nixon and Frankford Theatres, in the City of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, which leases are for a period extending beyond the term of this agreement and which leases are valid and in full force and effect, and

Whereas Stanley is a skilled and experienced theatre operating organization, capable of rendering valuable services in the supervision and operation of all of the theatres above named and in the leasing and booking of motion pictures, entertainments and attractions therein and in the keeping of books of account in the operation thereof, and

Whereas economy of operation can best be achieved by vesting Stanley with the sole right of operating and managing all of the theatres covered hereby,

Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the sum of One Dollar, lawful money of the United States, by each party to the other in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and of the mutual covenants and agreements herein contained, it is hereby mutually agreed and covenanted by and between the parties hereto as follows:

1. The Company, as to the Tower, Roosevelt, Nixon and Frankford Theatres, hereby vests in Stanley, except as herein otherwise reserved, the management thereof and Stanley agrees, subject to the terms and conditions hereinafter enumerated, to manage and operate the said theatres heretofore leased and operated by The Company and also agrees to manage and operate the State, Circle and 69th Street Theatres heretofore operated by it, for the joint benefit of Stanley and The Company.

2. Stanley accepts the management of the theatres leased by The Company and heretofore operated by it and agrees to devote the best efforts of its organization to the management of the said theatres and to the management of the Circle, State and 69th Street Theatres so that all of the theatres covered hereby shall during the term of this agreement be operated for the joint benefit of Stanley and The Company.

Stanley shall have the exclusive right and authority to book all motion pictures licensed for the theatres covered hereby and to procure all entertainments and attractions for said theatres.

The parties hereto agree during the term of this agreement to continue to use their best efforts to obtain licenses of such photoplays as each of the said parties have heretofore licensed from various distributors. Such license agreements shall provide that the photoplays covered by said agreements shall be available for exhibition in all of the said theatres covered by this agreement. All existing film license agreements held by either of the parties covering the exhibition of photoplays in any of the theatres covered hereby shall be modified so as to permit the exhibition of said photoplays in all of said theatres. All agreements licensing the exhibition of Paramount and Warner-First National pictures shall be on the average for substantially the same rental terms per picture and shall be for substantially the same proportion of pictures released by Paramount and Warner-First National respectively and said agreements shall be subject to the approval of the members of the Operating Committee. It is also agreed that the same number of Paramount and Warner-First National pictures, or as near as may be, shall be exhibited in the "A" theatres hereunder and that Stanley will accord to the pictures of Paramount and Warner-First National the same length and preference of playing time as near as may be practicable. The Company agrees, during the term of this agreement, to contract for the exhibition of Paramount news in the Company's theatres covered by this agreement.

This provision shall be effective with the commencement date of this agreement.

3. Stanley, as to the premises in which the State, Circle and 69th Street Theatres are located, and the Company, as to the premises in which the Tower, Roosevelt, Nixon and Frankfort Theatres are located, agree to pay on the due date thereof all rent, real estate and personal property taxes, insurance (except as hereinafter otherwise provided) and interest applicable thereto, as well as to make and pay for all repairs (except as hereinafter otherwise provided) in and to each of the said premises.

Stanley agrees out of the gross receipts received from the operation of all of the theatres covered hereby, to pay all expenses necessary and expedient for the operation of said theatres, (sometimes hereinafter referred to as "Operating expenses") other than said rents, real and personal property taxes, insurance, interest and cost of repairs.

4. The gross and net income received from the operation of said theatres shall be collected and distributed as follows:

A. Stanley shall collect the gross income of all of the theatres covered by this agreement and shall deposit such gross income in a special and separate bank account containing only such funds, in its own name or in the name of its affiliated company, which may act as its disbursing agent.

B. From the funds so deposited, Stanley shall pay all operating expenses of the theatres promptly when due.

For the purpose of this agreement the term "week" shall mean the theatre week, whether or not the same shall conincide with the calendar week as shall be fixed by the Operating policy of the theatres adopted from time to time by the Operating Committee; the term "accounting period" shall be deemed the period of time commencing with the last Saturday in one calendar month and ending on the last Saturday of the succeeding calendar month; the term "gross income" shall mean the aggregate of and shall include all moneys received by such theatres for admissions thereto, including moneys received from and during benefit and/or midnight performance given thereat, less the amount of admission taxes, if any, imposed upon admissions by any lawful governmental authority and shall also include such additional sums as may be received in the theatres from various concessions, such as weighing scales, candy vending machines, advertising curtains and with respect to any benefit performances at said theatres, only the net amount of moneys received by such theatres for admission during such benefit performances, shall be included in the gross receipts thereof, and there shall not be included therein the amount of any rebate, overcharge or other amount paid to or received by the society or association giving or sponsoring said benefit performances; the term "operating expenses" shall have the meaning ordinarily attributed thereto in proper accounting practice applicable to the motion picture business, but shall be exclusive of the items of, real estate and personal property taxes, rent, insurance, interest and repairs specified in paragraph "3" as being directly chargeable to "Stanley" and "The Company" with respect to their respective theatres.

"Operating expenses" shall include, without limitation of the generality of the foregoing, the following items:

(a) Film rentals.

(b) Salaries of performers, musicians and stage hands.

(c) Cost of acts and productions.

(d) Salaries of all persons actually employed in the theatres, such as managers, cashiers, doormen, engineers, ushers, cleaners, projection and sound men and any overtime and extra salaries paid to said employees.

(e) Newspaper and other advertising, including lobby displays, cost of promotions, contests, car cards, etc. scenery, cost of rental of stage props and equipment.

(f) Telegraph, telephone and postage expended in the actual conduct and operation of each theatre, cost of supplies consumed in the theatres, cost of uniforms and cleaning.

(g) License fees charged by any governmental authority for the privilege of doing business, and such fees as may be charged for inspection of the theatres by any governmental bureau or department.

(h) Fees payable to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

(i) Cost of electricity, heat, fuel, water, ventilation, refrigeration and gas consumed in the theatres, as well as the cost of burglar alarm and fire prevention and safety device service employed in the theatres.

(j) Workmen's compensation, fidelity, safe, burglary and hold-up insurance.

(k) Arbitration expenses, if any,

(l) The cost of repairs as provided in paragraph "6" hereof.

(m) Cost of audits as provided in paragraph "7" hereof.

No home office expenses of either party shall be charged as an expense or operation of the theatres, nor shall any item of Social Security Taxes be charged as an expense of operation but each party hereto shall bear and pay such item individually with respect to the employees in its respective theatres.

Any rebates, allowances, or refunds allowed or obtained on any item of expense shall be applied to and deducted from such item so as to reduce the same by the amount thereof.

Public liability insurance shall be maintained by Stanley and The Company covering their respective theatres in amounts of not less than $50,000 for injury to or death of any one person and not less than $800,000 for injury to or death of more than one person arising out of any one calamity, and each party shall bear and pay the premiums for the insurance so carried and such premiums shall not be charged as an operating expense against the theatres covered hereby. The insurance policies so carried by Stanley and The Company with respect to the theatres covered by this agreement shall indemnify Stanley, The Company and such other companies or individuals as Stanley and The Company may from time to time designate, as their respective interests may appear.

No charge shall be made by Stanley or The Company for the booking of talent in any of the theatres covered hereby. Any vaudeville, stage shows or similar attractions which may be used in any of the theatres covered by this agreement will be acquired through either Artists Booking Office, Inc. or Warner Bros., Artists Bureau, Inc.; any booking fees so received by either of them shall be divided equally between the said companies.

C. The balance of the gross income for each accounting period as herein set forth remaining after the payment of operating expenses for said accounting period shall be termed "net receipts." The net receipts shall be allowed to accumulate in said special bank acount up to but not exceeding $10,000.00, which amount shall constitute a working fund for use in the operation of the theatres. In the event that said working fund shall at any time be used up or dissipated in whole or in part, it shall be replenished forthwith in the manner in which it was created from subsequent receipts

D. Net receipts, if any, in excess of the sum of $10,000 derived from the operation of the theatres covered hereby during the first year of the term of this agreement, shall be distributed within fifteen (15) days after the last Saturday of each calendar month during the term of this agreement (which day is hereby defined as meaning the "accounting day") in the proportion of 57% to Stanley and 43% to The Company until the sum of $431,000 of net receipts during such year of the term of this agreement, shall have been distributed; thereafter all net receipts in excess of $431,000 during such year of the term of this agreement shall be distributed in the proportion of 50% to Stanley and 50% to The Company. During the second year, the net receipts shall be divided in the proportion of 57% to Stanley and 43% to The Company until the sum of $441,000 of net receipts during such year shall have been distributed and thereafter all net receipts in excess of $441,000 during the second year of the term of this agreement shall be distributed in the proportion of 50% to Stanley and 50% to The Company. Any amount remaining in the working fund at the termination of this agreement shall be distributed in the proportion of 57% to Stanley and 43% to The Company.

If, for any reason, the Operating expenses shall for the period between one accounting day and the subsequent accounting day during the term of this agreement, exceed an amount equal to the sum of the gross income for said period and any amount remaining in the working fund, Stanley shall notify the Company of such fact and of the amount of such excess; within five (5) days of the giving of such notice Stanley agrees to deposit in the working fund 57% of the amount of such excess and The Company agrees to pay to Stanley for deposit in the working fund 43% of such excess, if such excess shall occur during any accounting period during any year of this agreement, prior to the distribution of $441,000 of net receipts. And such contribution shall be in the proportion of 50% by Stanley and 50% by The Company, if such excess shall occur during any accounting period during any year after the sum of $441,000 in net receipts shall have been distributed between Stanley and The Company.

In the event of the failure of either Stanley or The Company to make their respective payments to the working fund within said period, the party which shall not be in default, in addition to all other rights and remedies herein provided, shall have the right to terminate this agreement by notice to the defaulting party.

5. In the event of the failure of either Stanley or The Company to make good its share of the excess of the operating expenses over and above the gross receipts and the amount remaining in the working fund during any particular accounting period, the other party not in default, shall have the right to advance the sum which the defaulting party shall be obligated to pay, whereupon the party which shall not be in default shall be entitled to receive 100% of the net income until the said non-defaulting party shall be reimbursed for the entire amount which it shall have advanced for the defaulting party, together with interest at the rate of 6% thereon. But in addition to said remedies herein and in the foregoing paragraphs provided, the non-defaulting party shall have the right to proceed by any appropriate action to recover the amount which the said defaulting party shall have been obligated to contribute as hereinbefore provided.

6. Stanley shall not make any repairs in or to any of said theatres leased by The Company except with the written consent of The Company first had and obtained, which consent shall specify the manner in which payment for said repairs shall be made; Stanley may, in its unlimited discretion, make repairs and replacements of a temporary nature which shall not exceed the sum of $25.00 for each item to any of the theatres covered hereby and such items of temporary repairs and replacements shall be deemed and be included as an operating expense. Stanley agrees to keep said theatres in good condition as to such ordinary and temporary repairs without discrimination.

7. Full, complete and accurate books, records, accounts, data and vouchers shall be kept and maintained by Stanley as respects the theatres, the supervision and/or management of same and shall not be destroyed until both Stanley and The Company agree thereto, and shall be audited annually by Price, Waterhouse & Co. or some other firm of accountants of like standing. All disputes with respect to accounting shall be determined by Price, Waterhouse & Co. or some other accountants of like standing and the decision of such accountancy firm shall be conclusive and binding upon the parties hereto, and the expense shall be charged against the operation of the theatres.

All of said books, records, accounts, data and vouchers shall at all reasonable times be available for inspection by The Company at the office of Stanley at No. 321 West 44th Street, New York City, New York, and The Company shall at all reasonable times have the right to make copies thereof or abstracts therefrom.

Stanley shall furnish or cause to be furnished to The Company daily statements of box office receipts in connection with the operation of said theatres, as well as statements of receipts and expenses in connection therewith for each show week, as well as for each accounting period as herein defined.

8. This agreement shall apply only to the theatres themselves; all rents receivable by Stanley or The Company from sub-tenants in the buildings in which their respective theatres are located, shall be collected by Stanley and The Company respectively and shall not in any way be a part of, or subject to, any of the terms of this agreement.

9. Each of the parties hereto shall appoint a representative who together upon the date of this agreement becomes effective, shall make an inventory of the property located in the theatres leased by The Company, which inventory shall be signed by the representatives of both of the parties hereto. At the termination of this agreement, Stanley shall account for and turn back to The Company the property located in the theatres leased by The Company in the same condition as received, ordinary wear and tear, damage by fire, the elements, acts of God and any other casualty excepted.

10. Any existing theatre license fees, service charges, supplies and other operating charges and expenses which may have been paid by either party at a time prior to the execution of this agreement and which shall cover a period extending beyond the commencement date of this agreement, shall be adjusted and apportioned and such amount as represents that proportion chargeable for a period after the commencement of this agreement shall be repaid to that party hereto which shall have paid the same; and the amount representing such payment to either party shall be charged as an expense of operation. Likewise, upon the termination of this agreement that proportion of such items as shall have been paid for a period extending beyond the date of the term of this agreement, shall not be deemed an operating expense but shall be repaid by the party leasing and operating the theatre for which said expense shall have been incurred.

11. It is understood and agreed that the initial operating policy of the theatres covered by this agreement shall be as follows:

In the locality in which the Circle and Roosevelt Theatres are located, the Circle shall be the "A" house, operating either on a full week policy or on a split week policy of four (4) and three (3) days with Friday opening; and the Roosevelt Theatre shall be the "B" theatre operating on a full week policy or with a split week policy of three (3) and four (4) days and with Saturday opening.

In the locality in which the State and Nixon Theatres are located, the State Theatre shall be the "A" theatre, operating on a full week policy or on a split week policy of four (4) and three (3) days, with Friday opening and the Nixon Theatre shall be operated as the "B" theatre, operating on a full week policy or on a split week policy of three (3) and four (4) days, with a Saturday opening.

In the locality in which the Tower and 69th Street Theatres are located, the Tower Theatre shall be operated as the "A" theatre on a full week policy or on a split week policy of four (4) and three (3) days, with a Friday opening and the 69th Street Theatre shall be operated as the "B" theatre on a full week policy or on a split week policy of three (3) and four (4) days with a Saturday opening.

The present policy in admission prices prevailing at the Frankford Theatre shall continue, but if "tab" shows are added on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays, increased prices will be charged for said days as long as the said policy continues.

All theatres are to run continuously on Saturdays and Sundays and an increase in price shall be made for admission after 6 P. M. on Saturdays.

Stanley agrees that it will not close any theatre covered hereby except for repairs or renovations and except by reason of strikes, epidemics, orders of any duly constituted authority, fire, earthquake, acts of God or inevitable casualty or except with the consent of the Operating Committee.

12. Within ten (10) days after the execution hereof, the parties hereto agree to the appointment of an Operating Committee consisting of two members, one of whom shall be designated by Stanley and the other of whom shall be designated by the Company. Either party hereto may at any time upon written notice to the other, substitute a new member of the Operating Committee (either permanent or temporary) instead and in place of the one previously designated by it.

Subject to all of the provisions and limitations contained in this agreement and to the provisions of the respective leases covering the theatres herein named, the duties, powers and functions of said committees shall be as follows:

A. It shall have the sole power and authority from time to time to designate and change the entertainment policy and specify the admission prices to the theatres covered by this agreement.

B. It shall have the power to determine any dispute arising between Stanley and The Company under this agreement, except accountancy disputes as hereinbefore provided.

C. It shall prepare a budget for the operation of the theatres; it shall have full budgetary control over all operating expenses as herein enumerated. No person shall be employed in the operation of any of the theatres whose salary shall be in excess of $100.00 per week without the consent and approval of the Operating Committee. No contract extending beyond the expiration date of this agreement shall be entered into without the written consent of the parties hereto.

D. It shall meet regularly in New York City during the term of this agreement and it shall keep a written record of all action had or taken at said meetings. The presence of both members of the Committee shall be necessary to constitute a quorum and a unanimous vote and in lieu thereof the unanimous consent in writing of both members of the Committee shall be required to transact any business hereunder. Any decision made by the Operating Committee with respect to any matter or thing within its jurisdiction, shall be final and binding but it shall have no authority to amend the provisions of this agreement or to transact any business not within the general scope and not in furtherance of the general purposes of this agreement.

E. In the event that there shall be a dispute between the members of the Operating Committee with respect to any matter or thing with reference to the supervision and operation and management of the theatres covered by this agreement, or in the event that the members of the Operating Committee are unable to agree upon any matter or thing involving the management and scope of this agreement, then said dispute or controversy shall be referred for determination by arbitration as hereinafter provided.

13. In controversy under this agreement shall arise between Stanley and The Company, which controversy or dispute cannot be decided by the Operating Committee to be appointed pursuant to the provisions of this agreement, it shall be settled by arbitration law of the State of New York, in the following manner:

Either party may by notice in writing served on the other, appoint one arbitrator and call upon the other to appoint a second arbitrator within five (5) days after the receipt of such notice; and each party agrees that upon receiving any such notice it will so appoint an arbitrator.

The two arbitrators thus appointed shall, within five (5) days after the appointment of the one last appointed, jointly appoint a third arbitrator. The controversy shall be submitted to the three arbitrators in such manner as they shall direct and their decision, or the decision of a majority of them, rendered in writing, shall be final, conclusive and binding upon the parties. In the event that a second arbitrator shall not be appointed as provided, or the two arbitrators first appointed shall fail to appoint a third, application maybe made by either party to the Supreme Court of the State of New York, or to a Judge thereof, to designate and appoint an arbitrator or arbitrators as the case may require, as provided by the Arbitration Law of the State of New York. Each party shall pay its own expenses in connection with the arbitration, but the compensation and expenses of the arbitrators shall be borne in such manner as may be specified in their decision in writing.

Any board of arbitration created as herein provided shall be vested with absolute discretion as to the manner and method of making its determination and decision.

In the event of any arbitration as herein provided, each of the parties hereto shall cooperate with the other and with the Board of Arbitration and in particular each party shall furnish to any such board of arbitration any and all data and/or information in its possession that may be called for by said board of arbitration.

14. If any theatre covered hereby shall be damaged or destroyed by fire or other casualty so that the parties hereto shall be unable to operate the same, the remaining theatres shall continue in operation and the gross income and net receipts of the remaining theatres shall be applied and divided as herein set forth. If such damage or destruction however, shall result in the cancellation or termination of the lease covering said theatre, and the party hereto which shall lose said theatre shall be unable to enter into a new lease for the same within sixty (60) days after the occurrence of such damage or destruction, then this agreement shall ipso facto terminate and come to an end as of the date of such damage or destruction. If any theatre covered hereby shall be so damaged or destroyed so that it cannot be repaired or rebuilt within six (6) months after the date of such damage or destruction, then either party may cancel this agreement as of the date when it shall be determined that the said theatre cannot be repaired or rebuilt within the said period of six (6) months after such damage or destruction. Notwithstanding anything herein contained to the contrary, it is specifically understood and agreed that this agreement shall in no wise be affected if the lease on the Frankford Theatre covered hereby shall be lost or if the said theatre shall be damaged or destroyed.

15. This agreement may not be assigned or transferred by Stanley or by The Company without the written consent of the other, except to their respective parent companies or a 100% subsidiary thereof.

16. This agreement shall be for a period commencing September 4, 1936 at 8 A. M. and ending August 31st, 1939, at the close of business.

17. Wherever in this agreement it is provided that notice shall or may be given by one party to the other, such notice shall be in writing and shall be personally delivered or sent by registered mail, if to Stanley at No. 321 West 44th Street, New York City, New York, or if to The Company at No. 1501 Broadway, New York City, New York. Such notice shall be deemed to have been given upon its delivery, if delivered, or upon its receipt, if sent by registered mail. Either party may at any time alter its address by giving written notice to the other party.

18. Should Stanley or The Company default in any of the terms, covenants or conditions hereof, or should a permanent receiver or trustee in insolvency proceedings or re-organization proceedings be appointed of either of them, or should either of them petition for a re-organization of its business, or should Stanley lose possession of either the Circle, State or 69th Street Theatres, or should The Company lose possession of either the Tower, Nixon or Roosevelt Theatres, or should Stanley or The Company fail to contribute any sums herein provided to be paid by them at specified times, thereupon the party hereto which shall not be in default in the performance of the terms, covenants and conditions hereof, shall, in addition to the other rights and remedies herein provided in such event or events, have the right to cancel this agreement by sending notice of cancellation at least five (5) days prior to the date as of which this agreement shall be cancelled, whereupon on the date designated in said notice this agreement shall be deemed cancelled and terminated and of no further force and effect. In addition to said remedy, the party which shall not be in default shall have the right to proceed by appropriate action or actions to recover the amount which said defaulting party shall become obligated to pay pursuant to the terms hereof, and in addition thereto the said party which shall not be in default shall have the right to proceed by appropriate action to collect such damages as it may have sustained by reason of the breach of this agreement by said defaulting party.

19. Stanley agrees that it will not engage anyone in connection with the operation of the theatres covered hereby whose salary shall be charged as an expense of operation of the theatres covered by this agreement unless said employee shall devote all of his time and attention to the theatres covered hereby.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto caused these presents to be executed by their duly authorized officers and their respective corporate seals to be affixed the day and year first above written.

B. Government's Digests of Theatre Operating Agreements in Evidence

EXHIBIT 200 (R. 257)

1. Parties: Agreement between B. F. Keith Corporation, and Skouras Theatres Corp., Broadway and Ninety-Sixth Street Realty Company.

2. Date of Agreement: April 29, 1938.

3. Duration: Period covering Sept. 1, 1939, and ending Aug. 31, 1952.

4. Coverage: Colonial Theatre, New York City; Riverside Theatre, New York City; 81st St. Theatre, New York City; unnamed theatres may be substituted.

5. Rental Terms: Parties agree that Skouras Theatre and Colonial Theatre (referred to as Keith Theatre) shall run day and date and have same entertainment policy subject to change only by the Advisory Committee, appointed pursuant to the terms of the agreement.

Keith to have exclusive agency for buying and booking for both theatres (except newsreels) and is to have authority to execute such licenses as may be necessary.

Keith agrees to use its best efforts to obtain agreements licensing the Skouras and Keith (Colonial) theatres for 1st run exhibition in the operating area, day and date with their first exhibition in any of the theatres in the RKO major circuit (as defined in Schedule A), the same features and shorts as are licensed under such agreements for 1st neighborhood run in ¾ of the Class A theatres in the RKO major circuit. Keith agrees that if it cannot obtain for exhibition in Skouras 1st run in the operating area and day and date with 1st exhibition in the RKO major circuit in Manhattan and the Bronx, such feature shall not be exhibited 1st run in any theatre controlled by Keith except the Nemo Theatre or Hamilton Theatre. The agreement defines "Class A theatres" and the amount of license fee to be paid by Skouras is to be determined "by the then current method of allocation employed by Keith." The agreement further provides that Keith "shall deliver to Skouras a statement showing the theatre admissions in the aggregate in the various quoted counties owned, operated or booked for by Keith, together with film rentals in the aggregate payable by such theatres, exclusive of road shows and theatres in Times Square and Albee Square areas, and in addition, Skouras to be given copies or digests of license agreements pertaining to the two theatres. Film rentals for Skouras and Keith theatres are to be in proportion on such aggregate film rentals with total theatre admission, and total film rental "ratio" to be considered.

6. Other Terms: The agreement provides for the establishment of an Advisory Committee of four with the power among others to determine entertainment and operating policy, to direct that both theatres be closed and to determine disputes.

The net receipts and/or net losses of both theatres are to be distributed as follows:

Up to $270,000 for any year: 65% to and by Keith; 35% to and by Skouras.

Over $270,000 for any year: 50% to or by Keith; 50% to or by Skouras.

Keith retains the right to substitute certain theatres in place of Colonial and both parties agree that they will not aid any other persons to obtain pictures for exhibition in the defined "operating area."

If any theatre operating under this agreement is closed by direction of Advisory Committee the agreement is to continue and division between the parties "shall continue . . . as though both theatres were open and operated" (page 31); if a theatre is closed for other reasons substitution of "a comparable theatre" may be made.

On expiration of agreement Keith to get the product it had secured for the theatres except Fox, which was to go to Skouras.

Supplementary letter dated Sept. 1, 1939, from B. F. Keith Corporation to Skouras Theatres Corporation, substitutes the 81st St. Theatre for the Colonial Theatre.

Amendatory Agreement: Between Eighty-First St. Theatre Corporation and B. F. Keith Corporation dated Sept. 1, 1939. Formal agreement substituting 81st St. Theatre for Colonial Theatre, with 81st St. Theatre Corp. assuming terms and conditions of agreement dated April 29, 1938.

Letter dated Aug. 22, 1941, between parties, excludes newsreels from computations in connection with "film adjustment formulae."

Exhibit "P": Letter from Fox-Film Corporation to Randforce Amusement Corporation dated June 26, 1935.

1. Fox extends franchise for additional four years.
2. Certain runs waived in favor of Kingsway and Avalon.
3. Recites agreement of same date between United Artists Circuit, Inc. and Keith Albee Orpheum Corporation.

Letter dated Sept. 21, 1939 from Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. to B. F. Keith wherein former consents to playing of features at Riviera instead of Savoy.

Letter dated July 23, 1941 extending agreement to Aug. 15, 1941.

EXHIBIT 201 (R. 257)

1. Parties: Contract between RKO and Skouras.
2. Date of Agreement: January 2, 1935.
3. Duration: Various dates as hereinafter specified.

4. Coverage Rental Terms, etc.: This exhibit is in three parts and consists of a series of agreements dealing with the pooling of the operation of RKO and Skouras theatres in the greater New York and suburban area, the transfer of management of certain theatres, and the fixing of playing time and sequence of runs among various theatres owned by the parties.

Part I

Part 1 of the exhibit consists of a series of interrelated agreements all executed on January 2nd, 1935, to take effect as of July 31, 1934. The first agreement provides for the pooling of the operation of the Skouras' Academy of Music Theatre and RKO's Jefferson theatre both on 14th Street, New York City, for a period of 3 years ending July 31, 1937. The agreement provides that RKO is to do the booking for the theatres and the Academy is to have first choice of pictures available to the RKO Major Circuit and the Jefferson is to have second choice of pictures and each theatre, subject to modification by a jointly constituted advisory committee, agrees to maintain admission prices as set forth in an annexed schedule. It is agreed that neither party will acquire any interest in any theatre south of 33rd Street, New York, without giving the other party an option to acquire a 50% participation in such interest. The profits and losses of the combined operation of the Academy and Jefferson theatres are to be shared equally by the parties.

In addition to pooling the operations of the Academy and Jefferson, the series of agreements provides for the exclusive booking by RKO of pictures for Skouras theatres, the availability of pictures licensed by Skouras for exhibition in RKO theatres, priority of exhibition among theatres operated by the parties, the admission prices to be changed in certain theatres, and the transfer by RKO to Skouras of an interest in the operation of theatres of RKO. These agreements were extended to July 31, 1948.

Part II

This consists of an agreement pooling the operation of RKO's 81st Street Theatre and Skouras' Riverside theatre in New York City for a period from March 31, 1938, to August 31, 1939. The two theatres are to have the same operating policies and RKO agrees to make available for exhibition in the Skouras theatres pictures licensed for the RKO Major Circuit simultaneously with their exhibition in the RKO theatres and Skouras agrees not to book pictures except through RKO and to pay the proportionate amount of the rental payable by RKO for the entire circuit. Skouras agrees to make pictures licensed from Fox available to the RKO theatre. The combined profits and losses are to be shared 65% by RKO and 35% by Skouras. RKO and Skouras agree that they will not, without the other's consent, obtain the same pictures for exhibition in any theatre day and date with the Skouras and RKO theatres in the "operating area" (a described portion of the upper west side of Manhattan) except the Nemo theatre, nor without the direction of a joint operating committee permit their exhibition in the operating area within seven days after their exhibition in the RKO and Skouras theatres.

Part III

This is an agreement between Skouras and RKO relating to the operation of Skouras' Nemo theatre on upper Broadway, New York City, for a period from March 31, 1938 to August 31, 1952. RKO is appointed sole booking agent for the theatre and RKO agrees to obtain for the Nemo theatre the same pictures as are licensed for the 81st Street and Riverside theatres (see Part II of this Exhibit). Skouras agrees to pay the proportionate rental on films licensed by the RKO Major Circuit. The theatre is to be managed by an operating committee representing each of the parties and the profits after a designated figure, are to be shared equally, any loss to be borne by Skouras. The agreement contains the same provisions as the agreement covering the Riverside and 81st Street theatres (Part II of this Exhibit) limiting the exhibition of pictures licensed for the Nemo in the operating area.

Exhibit 202 (R. 257)

1. Parties: Randforce Amusement Corporation and B. F. Keith Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: May 26, 1937.

3. Duration: From period beginning Sept. 3, 1937 and expiring Aug. 31, 1944.

4. Coverage: Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

5. Terms: Randforce agrees to permit Keith to manage, operate and book for its Republic Theatre and to direct all its policies, including the fixing of admission prices. Keith paid $20,000 upon execution of the contract and agreed that the policy and admission prices at the Republic be the same as maintained at Keith's RKO Greenpoint and RKO Bushwick. Randforce agrees to cooperate with Keith and to exhibit features at its Republic, day and date with features exhibited in RKO Greenpoint and RKO Bushwick. Film rentals to be determined by formula then in use by Keith for determining film rentals in its own theatres. Full accounting by each party to the other, with Keith paying $7,988.52 to Randforce as rent, with Keith receiving 2% of the cash receipts as its compensation plus 50% of amount by which cash receipts exceed cash disbursements.

Letter dated May 26, 1937 from RKO Film Booking Corporation Agent for Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Proctor Corporation to Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, (marked "accepted" by W. C. Michel) as follows:

"Referring to our Franchise Agreement made as of August 1, 1934, but actually executed January 2, 1935, as amended and extended, this will confirm our understanding as follows:

"(1) Effective September 3, 1937, you will recognize and accept the Republic Theatre, located at Grand and Keap Streets, Brooklyn, New York, as a first run RKO theatre under said Franchise Agreement, as amended and extended, for the balance of the term thereof with the same rights and privileges to which the theatres listed in Schedule A attached to said Franchise Agreement are entitled, provided, however, that in case you receive from the undersigned written notice of the termination of an agreement dated the 26th day of May 1937, between Randforce Amusement Corporation and B. F. Keith Corporation with respect to said Republic Theatre, you shall thereafter cease to so recognize and accept such Republic Theatre.

"(2) Except as herein expressly provided, said Franchise Agreement, as amended and extended, shall remain in full force and effect."

Letter dated Dec. 28, 1943 from Randforce Amusement Corporation to B. F. Keith Corporation extends term of required contract to Aug. 31, 1954.

1. Parties: Agreement between Savridge Realty Corporation (Randforce) and B. F. Keith Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: July 31, 1934.

3. Duration: July 31, 1934, to July 31, 1937.

4. Coverage: Savoy Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

5. Terms: Savridge, owner of Savoy, engages Keith to manage and operate said theatre and to supply it with feature pictures to be exhibited first run day and date with the exhibitions of such motion pictures in RKO Brooklyn major circuit of ten theatres therein designated. Savridge agrees not to reduce present admission prices but to adhere to a Schedule "A" as annexed thereto. The parties agree that any change in admission prices shall be by mutual consent. Film rentals to be determined by formula with allocation to each theatre in accordance with respective gross receipts of such theatres. Agreement may be cancelled if franchise agreement between Fox Film Corporation and RKO is cancelled.

Extended to Aug. 31, 1941, by agreement dated June 26, 1935.

* * * * *

1. Parties: Agreement between Randforce Amusement Corporation and B. F. Keith Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: July 31, 1934.

3. Duration: July 31, 1934, to Aug. 31, 1941.

4. Coverage: Stone, Stadium & Embassy Theatres, Brooklyn.

5. Terms: Randforce enters into booking agreement with Keith whereby latter agrees to book for above named theatres in conjunction with its booking for RKO's Brooklyn major circuit—Stone, Stadium and Embassy are to exhibit day and date first run with theatres in RKO Brooklyn major circuit and Randforce agrees not to reduce present admission prices (set forth in annexed Schedule "A") without written consent of RKO.

In the event that the franchise agreement between Fox Film Corporation and RKO shall be cancelled, this contract may likewise be cancelled by either party on appropriate notice. Annexed are:

Schedule "A": lists admission prices for Embassy, Stone and Stadium.

Schedule "B": lists theatres in RKO New York major circuit.

Exhibit "C": Agreement between B. F. Keith Corp. and Randforce Amusement Corp. dated June 26, 1935, whereby "booking agreement" dated July 31, 1934, is extended to Aug. 31, 1941.

EXHIBIT 203 (R. 257)

1. Parties: Agreement between RKO Proctor Corporation and Skouras Theatres Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: September 22, 1939.

3. Duration: Period commencing September 1, 1939, and ending August 31, 1952, with provision for extensive renewals.

4. Coverage: Proctor Theatre in Newark, N. J.

5. Terms: Provides for the organization of a corporation under the name of Proctor-Skouras Newark Theatre Corporation of which the shares are to be purchased by RKO and Skouras. The new company is to lease the building in which the Proctor Theatre is situated at a rental of $60,000 per annum for a term of thirteen years commencing September 1, 1939, and ending August 31, 1952, and in turn agrees to sublease the theatre property to RKO at an annual rental of $61,000. RKO and Skouras are to share equally in the capitalization of the new corporation. RKO is to manage and operate the theatre unless the operation of the theatre and commercial property shall have resulted in a net loss for two consecutive years when the management will be transferred to Skouras. If the operation of the combined property shows a loss under Skouras for a period of two years, the management and operation then revert to RKO. Neither RKO nor Skouras is to acquire, operate, or have any interest in any other theatre in Newark unless RKO or Skouras first offers the other party the right to participate equally in any such venture through the organization of a corporation in which RKO and Skouras shall have an equal stock interest. RKO is to buy for exhibition first run at the theatre upon the best available terms all feature pictures released by RKO, and if RKO is unable to procure such pictures, then Skouras is to have the right to suspend the agreements. Skouras agrees to procure 20th Century-Fox films for exhibition first run in the theatre, and in case Skouras is unable to procure such pictures, RKO has the right to suspend the agreement.

The agreement provides for an advisory committee of four members, composed of two representatives of each party. The committee was given final power as to the operating policy of the theatre; as to the making of substantial repairs; and as to the approval of agreements for the purchase of pictures for exhibition at the theatre.

Part 2 of the exhibit consists of the lease from RKO Proctor Corporation to Proctor-Skouras Newark Theatre Corporation dated September 22, 1939. This lease is for a term of thirteen years commencing September 1, 1939, ending August 31, 1952, and refers to the agreement between RKO and Skouras executed contemporaneously with the lease and provides that if that agreement is terminated, the lease is to be terminated as of the date of the termination of the agreement.

EXHIBIT 204 (2 PARTS) (R. 257)

1. Parties: RKO Proctor Corporation and Fast Theatres, Inc.

2. Date of Agreement: January 1, 1935.

3. Coverage: Provides for lease or sublease to Fast Theatres, Inc. (S. H. Fabian, Pres.), of Proctor's Grand, and Palace Theatres, at Albany, New York; Proctor's and Plaza Theatres at Schenectedy, New York; and Proctor's Theatre at Troy, New York. (See Ex. 229 pooling Warner theatres in Albany with Fast Theatres, Inc.)

4. Terms: Agreement leases or subleases above-named theatres for a twenty-one year period expiring August 26, 1956, for a guaranteed annual rental, graduated from $205,000 to $216,000 per year plus a share of the net profits varying from 27½ to 50%, depending upon profits earned, after deduction of management and booking fees paid to lessee.

By Article XXXI, p. 61, the lessee agrees during the term of the lease that "it will not extend its business outside the cities of Albany, Schenectedy, and Troy, N. Y., nor will it become financially interested in any manner in any theatre outside of said cities." The lessee further agreed not to make any agreements for operating these theatres in conjunction with theatres located outside these three cities. The lessor agreed in the same article

(p. 62), not to acquire any other theatre interests in these cities.

At pp. 67–68 it appears that a twenty-one-year franchise for the exhibition of RKO pictures in the leased theatres was made simultaneously with the lease and termination of the lease is provided for if the franchise is terminated prior to its expiration date.

A separate document labeled "Film Buying Agreement", bearing the same date as the lease is attached, under which Fast appoints Proctor as its agent to buy films for the leased theatres for 1% of its gross receipts. According to a letter of December 9, 1937, film buying was taken over by Fast beginning with the 1936–37 season, but the obligation to pay the 1% fee was unaffected. A "Vaudeville Booking Agreement" of the same date is also attached.

Part two of this exhibit consists of a series of amendatory letters modifying the basic agreements in respects not material for purposes of this case.

EXHIBIT 205 (R. 257)

1. Parties: Agreement between Minnesota Amusement Company (Paramount) and St. Paul Theatres Company (RKO).

2. Date of Agreement: May 28, 1936.

3. Duration: Period covering June 26, 1937 to August 31, 1941.

4. Coverage: Paramount Theatre, St. Paul, Minn.; Riviera Theatre, St. Paul, Minn.; Tower Theatre, St. Paul, Minn.; Palace Orpheum Theatre, St. Paul, Minn.

5. Terms: Agreement effected cooperative operation. It set up an operating committee of two, composed of representatives of the two companies which was to meet in New York. It also provided for a local operating committee. It provided for about a two to one division of net earnings.

Provision was made in the agreement for bringing the President Theatre into the deal and it was provided that:

During the term of the Agreement neither you nor the undersigned nor any company affiliated with you or the undersigned shall at any time become interested in the operation of any theatre located in downtown St. Paul or of any theatre which may be considered to compete with the Paramount, Riviera, Tower and Palace Orpheum Theatres, or any one of them.

You may continue the operation of the Cameo Theatre, St. Paul, provided such operation is conducted on a basis which shall be non-competitive with any of the aforesaid theatres. At any time at your request the Cameo Theatre may be subjected to the cooperative control of the Operating Committee provided that in that event (a) the distribution of the net earnings under the Agreement shall not be changed; (b) there shall be paid to you as part of the operating expenses, annually, the sum of $2,000 or 25% of the net profits derived from the operation of the Cameo Theatre, whichever shall be the greater; and (c) you may withdraw the Cameo Theatre from such cooperative control at any time by covenanting with the undersigned that it will not be used for theatrical purposes during the remainder of the term of the Agreement.

With respect to film product, the contract provided:

The product of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. shall be acquired through the undersigned for use in the aforesaid theatres on the same terms as such product shall be acquired by other companies affiliated with RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; subject, however, in the case of each specific commitment, to the approval of the Operating Committee.

The product of Paramount Pictures, Inc., shall be acquired through you for use in the aforesaid theatres on the same terms as such product shall be acquired by other companies affiliated with Paramount Pictures Inc.; subject, however, in the case of each specific commitment, to the approval of the Operating Committee.

Upon the termination of the Agreement for any cause the undersigned shall have the right to assume and acquire any outstanding contracts for the exhibition in the aforesaid theatres of the product of any of the following companies: RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Pictures Corporation and Vitagraph, Inc. or any successor corporation to any of said corporations, and you have a similar option in respect of contracts for the product of any other motion picture producing or distributing companies.

EXHIBIT 206 (R. 258)

1. Parties: Agreement between Singer Minneapolis Corporation (RKO) and Minnesota Amusement Company (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: December 11, 1936.

3. Duration: Period covering September 25, 1936 to September 2, 1937.

4. Coverage: Minnesota Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., State Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.; Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.; Astor Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.; Orpheum Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.

5. Terms: A partnership operation was created under the agreement and an operating committee of four persons was established. Each party was entitled to two members on the committee. Receipts were to be shared in approximately 3 to 1 ratio.

This agreement provided that while Minnesota Amusement Company should be in possession and control of the Grand Theatre and the Unique Theatre in Minnesota, which theatres were not being operated, they were not to be included in the agreement and it was agreed that Minnesota would not operate Grand or Unique unless they were first offered to be included in this agreement.

It was provided that neither party nor any company affiliated with either party should become interested in the operation of any first or subsequent run theatres in downtown Minneapolis unless they were first offered to be included under the agreement.

The contract provided that the parties should submit to each other at this time complete information as to all motion-picture product which has been contracted for exhibition in the aforesaid theatres during the 1936–37 playing season ending August 31, 1937, and the terms and conditions of all agreements with respect to same.

"The product of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., shall be acquired through the undersigned for use in the aforesaid theatres on the same terms as such product shall be acquired by other companies affiliated with RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., subject, however, in the case of each specific commitment, to the approval of the Operating Committee. The product of Paramount Pictures, Inc., shall be acquired through you for use in the aforesaid theatres on the same terms as such product shall be acquired by companies affiliated through so-called 'partnership deals' with Paramount Pictures . . . .

A series of agreements made a few changes with respect to the theatres covered and extended the basic agreement to August 31, 1944.

EXHIBIT 207 (R. 258)

1. Parties: Lease from Straham Theatres Corporation (Paramount) to RKO-Proctor Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: July 23, 1937.

3. Duration: Period covering July 23, 1937, to August 30, 1947.

4. Coverage: Strand Theatre, Yonkers, N. Y.

5. Terms: The rent was to equal 40% of the combined net receipts of the Strand, RKO-Proctor and Central Theatres in Yonkers. The lessee agreed to make available for the three theatres first run RKO product for the 1937–1938 to 1946–1947 seasons and the lessor agreed to make available to these three theatres one-half of Paramount features and shorts for that period.

An agreement of July 31, 1939, between the parties refers to the cancellation of a lease on Central Theatre and eliminates provisions to the agreement with reference to the Central Theatre.

An agreement of May 1, 1942, between the parties refers to the lessee subleasing the Parkhill Theatre, and brings it within the agreement, but by agreement of November 20, 1942, this theatre was taken out of the agreement.

EXHIBIT 208 (R. 258)

1. Parties: Agreement between Publix Theatres Corporation (Paramount) and 45 West Randolph Theatre Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: April 1, 1929.

3. Duration: Period covering 10 years.

4. Coverage: United Artists Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

5. Terms: Randolph engages Publix to manage, operate, etc., the United Artists Theatre for ten years beginning April 1, 1929, conforming to agreement between Famous Players Laskey Corporation and United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., dated March 23, 1929.

(a) Publix to manage and operate, subject to orders of Board of Directors of Randolph;

(b) Publix to select and exhibit features;

(1) As to United Artists features: pursuant to contract between United Artists Corporation and United Artists Theatre Company, dated June 22, 1926, or renewals thereof;

(2) As to Famous Players: pursuant to contract between Famous Players Laskey Corporation and United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., dated March 23, 1929;

(3) As to all other features: to be selected by alternate lot by representatives of Publix and Randolph; theatre to be operated as first-run theatre and in accordance with existing contracts between distributors and Publix Theatres Corp.

$500 per week to Publix for operation; with $15,000 to be retained as reserve. Publix reserves the right to appoint Balaban and Katz as its agent.

1. Parties: Contract between United Artists Theatre Company and United Detroit Theatre Corporation (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: January 3, 1937.

3. Duration: For period ending August 31, 1941.

4. Coverage: United Artists Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

5. Terms: Michigan Company engaged United Detroit to manage and operate United Artists Theatre, subject to right of cancellation if franchise agreement dated September 1, 1936, between MGM Distributing Corporation and Detroit Corporation is terminated. Detroit Corporation to have complete management of theatre subject to existing MGM franchise of September 1, 1936.

Detroit Corporation to receive 40% of aggregate of all admission receipts and other income resulting from operation of the theatre.

EXHIBIT 209 (R. 259)

1. Parties: Agreement between B. F. Keith Corporation (RKO) and Monroe Amusements, Inc. (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: May 1, 1934, but actually executed and delivered June 18, 1937.

3. Duration: Period covering seven years.

4. Coverage: Palace, Temple, Century, Regent, and Capitol Theatres, Rochester, N. Y.

5. Terms: Agreement covered the pooling of operation of theatres leased by Keith and Monroe. By letter agreement dated July 31, 1940, the agreement was modified in certain respects and extended until 1946.

Agreement provides for the appointment of an operating committee consisting of one member to be appointed by Keith and two members to be appointed by Monroe with power to:

1. Determine and change entertainment policies and admission prices at any of the pooled theatres.

2. Supervise the buying and booking for the pooled theatres.

3. Direct the closing of any of the theatres for any periods of time the committee deems advisable.

4. Approve the allowance of operating expenses for any of the theatres.

The combined net receipts or operating losses are to be divided between the parties according to a formula.

Keith has the right to discontinue operation of the Temple Theatre and Monroe to discontinue operation of the Capitol Theatre without the consent of the other. If the theatre premises are thereafter operated as a place of public theatrical or motion-picture entertainment by anyone other than the party who formerly operated it, the other party shall have the right to terminate the agreement.

EXHIBIT 211 (R. 261)

1. Parties: Agreement between International Vaudeville Company (Loew); Skouras Theatres Corporation; Ardstodd Inc.; Olthea Inc.; Metropolitan Play House, Inc.; Ninety Seventh Street & Broadway Realty Company and William A. White.

2. Date of Agreement: March 14, 1939.

4. Coverage: Olympia, Stoddard, 83rd St., Riviera, and Lincoln Square Theatres, New York, N. Y.

5. Terms: Agreement recites that Ardstodd and Olthea are New York corporations; that by agreement dated September 2, 1937, Latona Holding Corporation assigned to Ardstodd all its interest in a lease between Unum Real Estate Corporation and Latona dated November 22, 1933, covering Stoddard Theatre, New York City. Said lease after modifications expires September 30, 1945.

On September 2, 1937, by assignment from 2770 Broadway Corporation, Olthea got rights under existing lease between Breller Realty Corporation and 2770 Broadway Corporation dated May 15, 1930, for premises for the Olympia Theatre, New York City. Said lease as modified expires September 30, 1951. Olthea being in possession of Olympia and Ardstodd in possession of Stoddard "agree that Skouras, Metropolitan and White are to assume the debts, liabilities, etc., of Olthea and Ardstodd." The agreement further recites that the Olympia Theatre has been closed from December 7, 1938, to the date of subject contract. The International Vaudeville Company purchases one-half of the interests of Skouras, Metropolitan and White in Olthea and Ardstodd. International Vaudeville also buys certain promissory notes from Skouras, Metropolitan and White, Olthea to give Skouras a non-negotiable note in part payment of advances.

Paragraph 2 (f) provides that Ardstodd and the 97th Street & Broadway Realty Company will enter into an agreement (Exhibit "D") whereby the Realty Company agrees that in operating its Riviera Theatre it will not exhibit any picture previously shown at Stoddard until at least seven (7) days after completion of Stoddard's run, that the Stoddard be operated as second run theatre, playing day and date with the Lincoln Square Theatre and ahead of the Realty's Riviera Theatre. Under "D" the Realty Co. is to be paid $1,666.67 per month while the terms of the agreement are carried out. The original agreement contains guaranty provisions for reimbursement to Skouras for any amounts he may be required to pay to Unum Real Estate Corporation. Exhibit "C" of this exhibit contains list of "contracts covering the Olympia and Stoddard Theatres." Contract further provides 2 (g), a management agreement will be entered into between Olthea and Marcus Loew Booking Agency in the form designated as attached Exhibit "E" and Skouras and Ardstodd shall enter into a management agreement in a form designated as attached Exhibit "F".

Exhibit E

This is an agreement wherein Olthea hires Marcus Loew Booking Agency to manage and book for the Olympia. It is recited that the Agency manages the 83rd and Lincoln Square Theatres. Loew agrees that it will provide pictures for the Olympia with the same availability as it secures for the 83rd Street Theatre, with no pictures playing the 83rd Street Theatre ahead of the Olympia.

Exhibit F—Agreement Between Ardstodd, Inc. and Skouras Theatres Corporation

Ardstodd employs Skouras Theatres Corporation to book, manage, and direct for the Stoddard Theatre; Skouras agreeing that it will provide pictures for the Stoddard with such availability that Stoddard will play at least seven (7) days ahead of any other theatre, which Skouras or any affiliated or subsidiary company owns, leases, books, or operates directly or indirectly, playing such pictures between 57th Street and 120th Street except Loew's 83rd Street Theatre, the Olympia Theatre and the Lincoln Square Theatre "it being understood that as long as the operators of the Lincoln Square permit, the Stoddard may have the same availability as the Lincoln Square." Skouras receives as compensation 3% of the gross receipts of the Stoddard.

EXHIBIT 212 (R. 262)

1. Parties: Agreements between Fox Metropolitan Playhouses Inc., Randforce Amusement Corporation, and Loew.

2. Coverage: Certain theatres in New York City.

3. Terms: (1) Lease of October 11, 1929, between The Radfield Corporation and Fox Metropolitan Playhouses Inc. for period from October 11, 1929 to October 11, 1954. Fox leased for $35,000 a year premises in Brooklyn.

(2) Agreement of May 21, 1936, between Palace Brooklyn Corporation, assignee of Radfield, Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., and Randforce Amusement Corporation.

Recites sublease from Fox Metropolitan to Randforce to February 1945, that Metropolitan now assumes obligations of original lease and Randforce assumes obligation of lease of October 11, 1929. Covers Alba Theatre.

(3) Letter of August 8, 1945, from Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., to Lowe's Inc. advising extension of Randforce's lease on Alba Theatre to August 31, 1945.

(4) Leases between Astoria Theatre Corporation (Loew), Maso Amusement Corporation, Randforce

Amusement Corporation and Number One Theatre Inc. June 12, 1944, resulting in sublease of Alhambra Theatre to Randforce.

EXHIBIT 213 (R. 262)

1. Parties: Agreement between Loew, Skouras, and Cinema, Inc.

2. Date of agreement: January 3, 1936.

3. Duration: Period covering January 3, 1936, to August 31, 1945.

4. Coverage: Triboro, Astoria, Grand, and Steinway Theatres, New York, N. Y.

5. Terms: The Triboro and Astoria are affiliated with Loew's, the Grand and Steinway operated by Skouras, and the Broadway operated by Cinema. The agreement provides for an operating committee of two members; one designated by the Loew theatres, and the other designated by Skouras and Cinema. The duties and powers of the committee are as follows:

1. To designate and change the policy and the number of program changes of the pooled theatres; it being agreed that the Triboro and Astoria are to be operated as first-run theatres for the term of the agreement.

2. To determine which of the pictures available to all of the parties are first class pictures which shall be exhibited first run at the Triboro and Astoria Theatres, and the booking of the remaining pictures.

3. The committee is to have no power to establish admission prices which are to be established by the individual parties to the agreement, and except as power is specifically given to the operating committee the operation and management of the various theatres remains with the parties.

4. Skouras agrees that it will not exhibit any motion pictures at the Crescent Theatre until at least seven days after the exhibition of such motion pictures at the other theatres.

5. The agreement provides for the payment out of the combined net receipts of fixed amounts to each of the parties and the excess is to be in the proportion of 50% to the Loew theatres and 50% jointly to Skouras and Cinema.

The second agreement is dated November 5, 1940, and modifies and extends the 1936 agreement until August 31, 1955. By the terms of this agreement the Astoria Theatre is leased to Skouras from November 19, 1940, until August 31, 1955, at an annual rental of $69,402.53. It provides that the Triboro and Astoria Theatres shall be operated as first run theatres during the term of the agreement, and that pictures shall be exhibited at the Broadway and Grand Theatres not earlier than seven days after the conclusion of exhibition at the Triboro and Astoria Theatres, and if such pictures are not exhibited at the Triboro and Astoria Theatres they shall be exhibited not earlier than seven days after the conclusion of exhibition at Loew's Plaza Theatre, Corona. The 1936 agreement is further modified to provide that the operating committee is to fix the admission prices at the Astoria Theatre.

EXHIBIT 214 (2 AGREEMENTS) (R. 262)

1. Parties: Loew's Incorporated and United Artists Theatres Circuit, Inc.

2. Date of Agreements: February 15, 1927.

3. Coverage: Provides for joint ownership of Penn-Federal Corporation, owner of Penn Theatres at Pittsburgh, Penn., and first run exhibition of Loew and United Artists films there. See Ex. 220, which pools this theatre with 2 Warner theatres in Pittsburgh.

4. Terms: A holding corporation is to be organized with two classes of stock, A and B, each class to elect half of the directors, to which Loew will transfer common stock of Penn-Federal Corporation. A stock of holding company will then be issued to United Artists Theatre Circuit for $100,000. Agreement refers to 10 year franchise dated June 22, 1926, between United Artists Theatre Circuit and United Artists Corporation, giving theatres of former first run privilege where it operates theatres and provides that terms of franchise agreement shall apply to exhibition in the Penn-Federal Corporation theatre in Pittsburgh with a modification as to computation of operating costs to provide for dividends on preferred stock of Penn-Federal. If either party decides to sell interest in holding company, other shall have preemptive purchase right.

1. Parties: Loew-United Artists Columbus Corporation and the Chapel-State Theatre Company.

2. Date of Agreement: September 1, 1939.

3. Coverage: Provides for joint operation of Ohio and Broad Theatres at Columbus, Ohio.

4. Terms: Marcus Loew Booking Agency to make film contract for $100 per week and net profits from both theatres to be divided 50–50.

(Although Exhibit 164 lists Penn-Federal Enterprises, Inc., as a corporation, 50% owned by United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., it is interested in the Century, Valencia, and Parkway Theatres at Baltimore, the Ohio and Broad Theatres at Columbus, the State Theatre at Louisville, and the Penn at Pittsburgh, all listed as managed by Marcus Loew Booking Agency, Loew's counsel have advised plaintiff that the foregoing two agreements are the only written agreements in effect with respect to these theatres. They state that the three Baltimore theatres and the State at Louisville are managed by Marcus Loew Booking Agency under an oral arrangement for a percentage of the receipts.)

EXHIBIT 216 (R. 268)

1. Parties: Agreement between Stanley Company of America (Warner) and Loew's Theatre & Realty Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: September 8, 1941.

3. Duration: Period covering 10 years, commencing September 26, 1941.

4. Coverage: Aldine Theatre, Wilmington, Delaware.

5. Terms: This lease provides for a guaranteed minimum rental of $30,000 per year, plus 15% of the amount by which the annual gross box-office receipts exceed the sum of $200,000, but not to exceed $4,000. The lease recites that the parties are contemporaneously executing a lease for the Loew's Parkway Theatre at Wilmington, wherein the tenant in this lease is landlord and the landlord herein is tenant (Exhibit 217), and it is provided that any default by either party to that lease shall give the other party the right to terminate its lease of the Aldine Theatre.

EXHIBIT 217 (R. 263)

1. Parties: Loew's Theatre & Realty Corporation and The Stanley Company of America (Warner).

2. Date of Agreement: September 8, 1941.

3. Duration: Covering a period of ten years commencing September 26, 1941.

4. Coverage: Loew's Parkway Theatre, Wilmington, Delaware.

5. Terms: This lease was executed simultaneously with the lease from Stanley to Loew's of the Aldine Theatre (Exhibit 216) and it is provided that if either party to that lease defaults, the other party at its option may terminate the lease to the Parkway Theatre. Lease provides for a rental of $10,000 per annum.

EXHIBIT 218 (R. 264)

1. Parties: Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc., Parmond Theatre Corporation (Paramount) and Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: March 19, 1936.

3. Duration: March 1, 1936, to February 25, 1941.

4. Coverage: Parthenon, Hammond, Indiana; Orpheum, Hammond, Indiana; Paramount, Hammond, Indiana.

5. Terms: This is a management agreement under the terms of which Warner, operating the Parthenon and Orpheum theatres, Hammond, Ind., and Parmond operating the Paramount Theatre in Hammond, Ind., pooled their operation, management, and product under license in Warner Management Corporation. Latter is authorized to select and book all motion pictures for said theatres; all agreements licensing the exhibition of Paramount and Warner First-National pictures shall be on substantially the same rentals per picture and shall be for substantially the same proportion of pictures released by Paramount and Warner-First National, respectively; that the same number of Paramount and Warner First-National pictures shall be exhibited in the "A" theatre mentioned therein (Parthenon) with Management taking over any unplayed licenses. All existing film agreements of Warner and Parmond are assigned to Warner Management with Warner undertaking to obtain licenses for all Warner First-National pictures and Parmond undertaking to obtain licenses for the exhibition of all Paramount pictures, with such agreements to be entered into in the name of Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation. Warner Bros. Circuit Management is to receive $150.00 weekly for such operation and the net receipts (i. e., gross receipts less operating expenses), were to be distributed 65% to Warner and 35% to Parmond. The agreement further defined the operating policy of the theatres enumerated:

(a) Parthenon to exhibit "first choice" pictures available to the parties;

(b) Paramount under "combination policy," i. e., exhibition of pictures after Management Corporation has assigned first choice of pictures to Parthenon;

(c) Orpheum to be operated as a "sluff" or subsequent run house.

The present scale of admission prices for all theatres were to be maintained, nor can Management Corporation make any material change in the operating policy of the theatre except with the consent of Warner and Parmond.

On termination of the agreement Warner was to assume all unplayed first-run pictures under film agreements from MGM, Warner First-National, Columbia, United Artists, and RKO and all unplayed second-run pictures from MGM, Universal, Warner First-National, Columbia, RKO, 20th Century, and United Artists, in Hammond. Parmond on termination was to assume all contracts for unplayed first-run pictures from Paramount, Fox-20th Century and Universal.

Letter

From: Parmond Theatre Corporation (Paramount).

To: Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation and Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc.

Date: May 7, 1940.

Extending term of March 19, 1936, to February 28, 1946.

Assignment

1. Parties: Parmond Theatre Corporation (Paramount) Hohman-Clinton Realty Corporation (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: June 1, 1940.

3. Terms: Parmond assigns all its right, title and interest in and to the March 19, 1936 agreement to Hohman-Clinton and Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc. consents thereto in writing dated June 20, 1940.

Extension Agreement

1. Parties: Among Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc., Hohman-Clinton Realty Corporation (Paramount) and Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: October 5, 1943.

3. Duration: Term extended to August 31, 1953.

4. Coverage: Parthenon, Hammond, Ind.; Orpheum, Hammond, Ind.; Paramount, Hammond, Ind.

5. Terms: This extension agreement recites the March 19, 1936 agreement and the memorandum of May 7, 1940 and extends the term to August 31, 1953. The agreement is made conditional upon the leases which Warner holds on the Parthenon and Orpheum and which are to be extended. If said leases terminate, either party shall have the right to cancel this agreement.

EXHIBIT 219 (R. 264)

1. Parties: Agreement between Keith Ohio Corporation (RKO) and Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc.

2. Date of Agreement: August 27, 1937.

3. Duration: Covers period from August 27, 1937, to August 31, 1943.

4. Coverage: Palace, 105th Street, Hippodrome, Lake, Uptown, and Allen Theatres, Cleveland, Ohio.

5. Terms: Agreement provides for the pooling of the operation of the Palace, Hippodrome, Allen, and Lake Theatres under one management and control to be exercised by an operating committee consisting of four members, two appointed by each of the parties. The committee had the sole power and authority to designate and change the entertainment policy and specify the admission prices at the various theatres subject to the provisions of any of the leases covering the said theatres.

It is agreed that the Hippodrome Theatre, during the term of the agreement, shall have first choice of pictures available to either Warner or Keith for first run exhibition. The Palace shall have second choice of such pictures.

Warner agrees to procure all Warner Bros. pictures and Keith agrees to procure all RKO pictures for presentation at the Palace, Hippodrome, Allen, and Lake Theatres, and each party agrees to indemnify the other party to the extent of one-half of any obligation it incurs in licensing pictures of other producers. It is further agreed that during the time the Lake Theatre shall be closed Warner is to receive from the income derived from the operation of the Palace, Allen, and Hippodrome the sum of $12,000, and Warner agrees that it will not sublet the Lake Theatre or permit it to be used for theatrical purposes as long as Warner is in possession thereof.

The agreement also provides that after Warner and Keith have exercised their choices of pictures for exhibition in the Hippodrome and Palace Theatres, the remaining pictures available for exhibition first run in the downtown section of Cleveland shall be delivered to the operating committee for exhibition in the Allen Theatre. It is also agreed that they will not engage in the operation of any theatre within a radius of one mile from either the Palace, Hippodrome, Allen, or Lake Theatres which may be competitive with said theatres.

By agreement dated February 24, 1943, the 1937 agreement is extended to August 31, 1950. By the terms of this agreement Warner and RKO agree to make any pictures, except those road-shown, licensed to either of them, available for exhibition in the pooled theatres before exhibiting or permitting them to be exhibited in any other theatre in the Cleveland area. Each party agrees not to waive any of the clearances of any of the pooled theatres in favor of any theatre in which that party is interested without the consent of the other party, and Warner consents that the 105th Street Theatre shall retain its preferred second run.

EXHIBIT 220 (R. 268)

1. Parties; Stanley Company of America (Warner) and Penn-Federal Corporation (Loew's-United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.).

2. Date of Agreement: July 5, 1938.

3. Coverage: Stanley Theatre, Pittsburgh; Warner Theatre, Pittsburgh; Penn Theatre, Pittsburgh.

4. Duration: From July 5, 1938, to August 31, 1940.

5. Terms: This agreement provides for the management and operation of the Stanley Theatre, Warner Theatre, and Penn Theatre, Pittsburgh, and recites the existing film license agreements entered into by Stanley with Vitagraph covering Warner and First National features (annexed as Exhibit A) and film license agreement entered into by Penn with Loew's covering exhibition at the Stanley, Penn, or Warner (annexed as Exhibit B) for the purpose of: * * * effecting a more economical policy of operation by adopting a mutually satisfactory arrangement with respect to the operating policies of the said theatres * * *.

The agreement provides for the appointment of an operating committee with the power to: (a) Designate and change the entertainment policy and specify admission prices, "but not with respect to the Warner Theatre which shall be operated as a first run theatre under the sole management and control of Stanley"; (b) to determine disputes; (c) to prepare an operating budget for the theatres and maintain full budgetary control.

The agreement provides also that the Penn Theatre be operated as a first-run theatre and shall have the first choice of all pictures available to both Penn and Stanley and that the Stanley Theatre be operated as a "first-run theatre on a combination policy," i. e., vaudeville, with one feature per week. If vaudeville is presented at the Penn, same must also be presented at the Stanley Theatre with the Stanley Theatre having second choice of all pictures available. The Warner is to be operated as "a first-run theatre on a straight motion-picture policy after a choice has been exercised of the pictures for exhibition in the Penn and Stanley theatres."

The agreement also provides that the clearance shall not be increased or reduced over subsequent runs during its term and fixes clearance as follows:

Exclusive first-run in the city of Pittsburgh with twenty-eight (28) days clearance over Pittsburgh; 28 days over all theatres within 15 miles from Pittsburgh city limits; 14 days over all theatres 15 to 25 miles from Pittsburgh city limits and 7 days over all theatres 25 to 35 miles from Pittsburgh city limits.

The availability of pictures for subsequent runs after the Penn, Stanley, and Warner theatres shall remain as at present.

The parties further agree that none of the pictures available to them for first-run exhibition in any of the theatres covered shall be made available for first-run exhibition in any other theatre in Pittsburgh unless approved by the Committee.

The Committee is to determine which pictures available in first-run Pittsburgh are first choice, and those not so selected for the Penn shall be available for the Stanley as second choice. All remaining pictures shall be available for the Warner.

The parties also agree to operate the theatres as first-run theatres without change except by consent of Stanley and Penn.

The net receipts of the Penn and Stanley theatres are to be divided equally between the parties and out of the net receipts of the Warner Theatres, Warner was to receive the first $40,000 with remaining net receipts to be divided equally between Penn and Stanley.

In the event that a loss is incurred in the operations of the Stanley and Penn, such losses shall be borne equally by the parties.

Each party agrees to abide by the terms of the film licenses, copies of which are annexed to the agreement.

Representations were made in the agreement (par. 22) that Penn had available under the license first-run features released by Loew's, United Artists, and one-half of the product of Paramount Pictures Corp.; that Stanley had under license for first-run exhibition all features produced or released by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., First National, RKO, and one-half of product of Paramount Pictures.

Agreement

1. Parties: Stanley Company of America (Warner), Penn-Federal Corporation (Loew's-United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.).
2. Date: June 19, 1942.
3. Duration: Extends term of agreement to August 31, 1947.
4. Coverage: Stanley, Warner, and Penn Theatres.

Letter

From: Warner Circuit Management Corporation.
To: Penn-Federal Corporation (Loew's-United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.).
Date: June 19, 1942.

Defines "operating expense" and other items.

1. Parties: Stanley Company of America (Warner) and Penn-Federal Corporation (Loew's-United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.).
2. Date of Agreement: June 19, 1942.
3. Duration: Extends term to August 31, 1947.
4. Coverage: Stanley, Warner, Penn, and Ritz, Pittsburgh.
5. Terms: Modifies July 5, 1938, agreement and extension thereof dated April 10, 1940, to include operation and management of Ritz Theatre in Pittsburgh. This agreement designates the policy of operation of Ritz as a first-run theatre on "straight motion-picture policy," excepting pictures available to Stanley and Penn after the first choice has been exercised by the Penn, Stanley, and Warner theatres. (Copies of film licenses are annexed to the agreement.)

EXHIBIT 221 (R. 264)

1. Parties: Stanley Company of America (Warner) and Quaker Theatres Corporation (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: August 27, 1936.

3. Duration: For period commencing September 4, 1936, and ending August 31, 1938.[1]

4. Coverage: Circle, State, and 69th Street Theatres of Stanley; and Tower, Roosevelt, Nixon, and Frankford Theatres of Quaker; in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

5. Terms: Covers the pooling of operations of the theatres.

The management and operation of all of the theatres is vested in Stanley, and Stanley is given the exclusive right to book all motion pictures and to procure all entertainments and attractions for the said theatres. The parties agree to use their best efforts to obtain licenses of such photoplays as each of the parties have theretofore licensed from various distributors so as to permit the exhibition of the said photoplays in all of the pooled theatres, and it is agreed that Stanley will accord to the pictures of Paramount and Warner-First National the same length and preference for playing time as near as may be practical. Stanley is to collect the gross income of all of the theatres; and after paying all operating expenses the net receipts are to be distributed in a proportion of 57% to Stanley and 43% to Quaker to a splitting point, and thereafter the balance of the receipts is to be distributed equally.

The agreement provides for the appointment of an operating committee consisting of two members, one designated by Stanley and the other by Quaker, which shall meet regularly in New York City. The committee shall have the power to designate and change the entertainment policy and specify the admission prices to the theatres covered by the agreement.

EXHIBIT 222 (R. 264) (SEE EX. 232)

1. Parties: Paramount Pictures, Inc., Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, California Theatre Realty Company and Strand Leasing Company.

2. Date of Agreement: November 5, 1943.

3. Coverage: Paramount and California (now State) Theatres, St. Francis, Warfield, Fox, and Alcazar Theatres in San Francisco, Calif.

4. Terms: This agreement is a modification of Ex. 232. It extends the leases on San Francisco theatres owned by Paramount and the Paramount first-run film franchise for that city for a ten-year period expiring June 30, 1953. During this period Fox agrees to continue to pay Paramount 37½% of the net profits of its San Francisco theatre operations (including the profits received from the theatres leased from Loew and others), even if Fox loses possession of some of the theatres involved by an earlier termination of the lease (p. 6).

EXHIBIT 223 (R. 268)

1. Parties: Agreements between Stanley Company of America (Warner) and Skouras Theatres Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: September 3, 1935.

3. Duration: Period covering September 6, 1935, to January 31, 1945.

4. Coverage: Theatres owned at Hackensack, New Jersey; Jersey City, New Jersey; and Elizabeth, New Jersey.

5. Terms: The Stanley theatres involved are the Oritani at Hackensack, the Stanley at Jersey City, and the Ritz and Regent at Elizabeth. The Skouras theatres are the Fox at Hackensack, the State at Jersey City, and the Liberty at Elizabeth.

Original agreement provides for pooling of operation and places the control of the theatres under the control of an operating committee of four members: Messrs. Joseph Bernhard and Donald Jacocks, representing Stanley; and Messrs. George and Spyros Skouras, representing Skouras. The operating committee has the sole power to designate and change the entertainment policy and specify the admission prices at the theatres covered by the agreement.

Skouras is authorized to buy and book all pictures for exhibition in the Fox and Oritani Theatres at Hackensack, and State Theatre at Jersey City subject to the approval of Stanley, and Stanley is authorized to buy and book all pictures for exhibition in the Ritz, Regent, and Liberty Theatres at Elizabeth, New Jersey, and the Stanley Theatre at Jersey City. Stanley agrees to obtain a license for the exhibition of Warner Bros. pictures and Skouras agrees to obtain a license for the exhibition of Fox pictures in all of the theatres covered by the agreement. The combined net receipts of the theatres in the towns covered by the agreement are to be divided between the parties according to a specified percentage.

By agreement dated March 25, 1943, the agreement of September 3, 1935, was extended for an additional period of ten years from February 1, 1945.

EXHIBIT 224 (R. 268)

1. Parties: Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc., and Lynchburg-Perry Theatre, Inc. (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: September 25, 1936.

3. Duration: Term beginning October 5, 1936, and ending October 4, 1938.

4. Coverage: Trenton Theatre, Lynchburg, Va.

5. Terms: Warners, in possession under a superior lease dated October 4, 1933 now subleases Trenton Theatre, Lynchburg, Va., to Lynchburg-Perry Theatre, Inc. (Paramount), for a term beginning October 5, 1936, and ending October 4, 1938 at a rental beginning at $910.00 per month. A copy of the original lease is annexed as follows: (1) Date of Agreement: October 4, 1933. (2) Coverage: Trenton Theatre, Lynchburg, Va. (3) Terms: Parties of the first part lease Trenton Theatre to Warners for a period beginning January 1, 1935, and ending December 31, 1939, at $541.66 per month.

Supplemental Agreement

1. Parties: Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc., and Lynchburg-Perry Theatres, Inc. (Paramount).
2. Date of Agreement: December 25, 1936.
3. Coverage: Trenton Theatre, Lynchburg, Va.

4. Terms: Under this agreement Warner assigns all film contracts relating to unplayed pictures to Lynchburg-Perry Theatre, Inc., as set forth in schedule A annexed to agreement.

Supplemental Agreement

1. Parties: Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc., and Dominion Theatres, Inc. (Paramount).
2. Date of Agreement: December 14, 1938.
3. Coverage: Trenton Theatre, Lynchburg, Va.
4. Terms: This agreement recites the original lease dated October 4, 1933, the sublease from Warner to Lynchburg-Perry and the assignment thereof to Dominion. Annexed thereto is an agreement extending the term of the underlying lease to December 30, 1944. It recites that Dominion Theatres, Inc., as exhibitor had entered into a license agreement with Vitagraph, Inc. as distributor, for the exhibition of feature pictures in the Paramount, Trenton, and Isis theatres, Lynchburg, beginning with the 1938–1939 season and ending with the 1943–1944 season. It was agreed between Warners and Dominion that if the franchise agreement be breached by Dominion, Warner reserved the right to terminate the sublease.

Supplemental Agreement

1. Parties: Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc., and Dominion Theatre, Inc. (Paramount).
2. Date of Agreement: November 14, 1944.
3. Duration: Term extended to December 30, 1949.
4. Coverage: Trenton Theatre.
5. Term: This agreement cancels paragraph 5 (tie in with franchise agreement) of the December 14, 1938, lease, and extends the term to December 30, 1949.

EXHIBIT 225 (R. 268)

1. Parties: Agreement between Empire Theatre of San Antonio, Inc. (Warner), and Interstate Theatre Operating Corporation (Paramount).

2. Date of Agreement: August 6, 1934.

3. Duration: Original lease for one year and extended from time to time to September 30, 1941.

4. Coverage: Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Texas.

5. Terms: Lease provides for a rental of $24,000 per year. Lease recites that the tenant has entered into a simultaneous agreement with Warners for the exhibition of Warner pictures in the Empire Theatre and it is agreed that a breach of that agreement shall constitute a breach of the lease. During this period Vitagraph, Inc., the Warner distributing subsidiary, was substituted as lessor and Interstate Circuit, Inc., substituted as lessee.

EXHIBITS 226, 226a (R. 268, 2269)

1. Parties: Paramount Pictures, Inc., Fabian-Brooklyn Theatres, Inc., and Stanley-Mark-Strand Corporation (Warner).

2. Date of Agreement: September 1, 1940.

3. Coverage: Provides for joint operation of Paramount, Fox, and Strand Theatres in Brooklyn, N. Y.

4. Terms: Agreement provides for pooling of film product controlled by the parties, Paramount by Paramount, Columbia by Fabian, and Warner by Stanley-Mark-Strand, among Paramount, Fox, and Strand Theatres for five-year period with operation supervised by a three-man committee, one member appointed by each of the three parties. The Paramount is to be operated with first choice of the available product, the Fox with second choice, and the Strand with third choice. Net profits and losses are to be divided ⅓ to each party. Admission prices are to be fixed by the committee for all three theatres, subject to minimum prices fixed in license agreements (par. 14, p. 17).

Film license agreements are attached which provide film rental terms for Paramount and Warner features based upon varying percentages of the gross depending upon profits earned from exhibition of these films. As for Columbia films, two pictures are to play the Paramount for a percentage of the gross receipts and the rest are covered by a flat rental.

Ex. 226A is a franchise for Paramount films in the same theatres, dated September 1, 1938, for the 1938–39 and 1939–40 seasons, made pursuant to a prior operating agreement between the same parties, dated September 1, 1936, and renewed on September 1, 1938.

EXHIBIT 227 (R. 268)

1. Parties: Agreement between Stanley Company of America (Warner) and Kearuth Theatre Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: August 22, 1940.

3. Duration: Covers a period of one year commencing September 1, 1940, and has been extended from time to time by agreement, the last extension being to August 31, 1948.

4. Coverage: Hudson and Regent Theatres, Kearny, New Jersey.

5. Terms: Agreement provides for pooling the operation of Stanley's Hudson Theatre and Kearuth's Regent Theatre. Agreement provides that the theatres shall be under the supervision of an operating committee of two members, one appointed by each of the parties which shall have the power to change the entertainment policies and specify the admission prices of the theatre. Stanley is to license all pictures to be exhibited in the theatres and the pictures shall be so licensed that they will be available for exhibition in either of the theatres. The combined net receipts of the two theatres are to be divided between the parties in the proportion of approximately 52% to Stanley, and approximately 48% to Kearuth, and the combined loss, if any, is to be borne in the same proportions.

EXHIBIT 228 (R. 268)

1. Parties: Poli-New England Theatres, Inc. (Loew), and Connecticut Theatrical Corporation (Warner).

2. Date of Agreement: May 31, 1939.

3. Coverage: Lease of the Strand Theatre at Waterbury, Conn. for 2 years, expiring March 31, 1942, for 20% of the gross receipts by Poli-New England to Connecticut.

EXHIBIT 229 (R. 268)

1. Parties: Fast Theatres, Inc., and Stanley-Mark-Strand Corporation (Warner).

2. Date of Agreement: July 2, 1941.

3. Duration: Covers a period of five years and three months commencing June 1, 1941, and ending August 31, 1946. By agreement dated July 21, 1943, the agreement was extended for a further period of five years ending August 31, 1951.

4. Coverage: Grand, Leland, Ritz, Madison, and Delaware Theatres, Albany, New York.

5. Terms: Agreement provides that the operation and management of the Grand and Leland Theatres of Fast and the Ritz, Madison, and Delaware Theatres of Warner are to be pooled. The operation and management of the pooled theatres shall be under the supervision of an operating committee of four members, two designated by Fast and two designated by Stanley, who shall have the sole power and authority from time to time to designate and change the entertainment policy and specify the admission prices at the pooled theatres. Fast agrees that in the licensing of pictures for exhibition in the Palace Theatre it will not obtain clearance over the theatres covered by the agreement in excess of the clearance which the Palace has, and Stanley agrees that as operator of the Strand Theatre it will not obtain clearance over the theatres covered by the agreement in excess of the clearance in effect. Each party agrees that it will negotiate for and license the photoplays which it has heretofor licensed for its theatres, and that all license agreements shall permit exhibition in all of the pooled theatres. The combined net receipts of the pooled theatres are to be divided in the proportions of 41% to Fast and 59% to Stanley, and the combined losses are to be borne in the same proportions.

Fast is given a 41% interest in Stanley's lease for the Delaware Theatre under construction, and agrees to reimburse Stanley for 41% of all expenditures made by Stanley in furnishing and equipping the Delaware Theatre.

1. Parties: Fox Philadelphia Building, Inc. (Sub-Lessor) and Stanley Company of America (Sub-Lessee) (Warners).

2. Date of Agreement: July 28, 1936.

3. Duration: Beginning August 1, 1936, ending July 31, 1939.

4. Coverage: Fox Theatre, Philadelphia.

5. Terms: Recites "senior lease" for premises dated June 30, 1921 from William H. Morris to William Fox Entertainments Company for a term of 50 years, modifications and assignments thereof and last senior lease wherein Girard Trust Company was lessor and Fox Philadelphia Building, Inc. was lessee dated August 1, 1934, copy of said lease is annexed to exhibit marked Exhibit B.

Under the terms and provisions of this agreement Fox Philadelphia sub-leases the Fox Theatre to Stanley for a period of three years ending July 31, 1939 at a rental of $10,683.33 monthly plus taxes, with a covenant among others, that the junior lessee will not breach the terms and conditions of the senior lease.

The agreement refers to an existing franchise agreement between Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp. and 20th Century Fox, dated July 28, 1936 (annexed as Exhibit C) which provides that if such franchise agreement be terminated the sub-lessor may, upon proper notice, terminate its sub-lease. In the event of such termination of sub-lease, Stanley agrees that it will assign all its right, title and interest and all the right, title and interest of Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation in and to the film franchise agreements relating to the exhibition of first run pictures in Philadelphia to Fox Philadelphia Building, Inc., the sub-licensor, and will use its best efforts to procure the consent of 20th Century Fox Film Corporation to such assignment.[1]

[1] The film franchise agreements mentioned in this agreement were not annexed to the photostatic copy of the lease furnished to the Government.

(b)

1. Parties: Fox Philadelphia Building, Inc. and Stanley Company of America (Warners).
2. Date of Agreement: July 31, 1939.
3. Duration: Extends term five years to July 31, 1944.
4. Coverage: Fox Theatre.
5. Terms: Recites sub-lease dated July 28, 1936 and extends its term five years to July 31, 1944 with modifications. A new rental at $11,166.66 monthly is provided for and a new Article XVII relating to existing film franchise is substituted providing, among other things, that if the existing film license agreement with 20th Century Fox providing for exhibition of motion pictures for 1939–1940 season is cancelled, or if Fox pictures are not licensed to the sub-lessee for exhibition in the Fox Theatre either party, upon proper notice, may terminate the sub-lease. The substituted Article provides further that if the sub-lease is terminated prior to the termination or cancellation of the license agreement or of any subsequent license agreement relating to the exhibition of motion pictures distributed by 20th Century Fox to the Fox theatre, Stanley agrees that if requested to do so by Fox Philadelphia it will assign through the latter all its right, title and interest in all the right, title and interest of Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation to that part of such license agreement relating to the exhibition of first run motion pictures in Philadelphia.

(c)

1. Parties: Fox Philadelphia Building, Inc., and Stanley Company of America (Warner).
2. Date of Agreement: June 12, 1944.
3. Coverage: Fox Theatre.
4. Duration: August 1, 1944 to July 31, 1949.
5. Terms: By this agreement Fox leases the Fox theatre to Stanley at a rental of $184,000 per year plus taxes and other charges. Provision is made that the name "Fox" be continued as the name of the theatre with the tenant agreeing (Article 23) to use the premises as a first run first class motion picture theatre. The agreement further provides (Article 11) that either party may at its discretion and without any reason therefore terminate this lease upon at least one year's prior written notice.

EXHIBIT 231 (R. 265)

1. Parties: Lease from Loew's to Fox West Coast Theatres.

2. Date of Agreement: August 31, 1936.

3. Duration: Covers period of nine years from September 1, 1936, to August 31, 1945.

4. Coverage: Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, California.

5. Terms: Provides for an aggregate rental of $1,125,000. Lease refers to a franchise agreement executed simultaneously with the lease for the exhibition of Loew pictures in the Warfield Theatre and other theatres in the city of San Francisco, and it is provided that if the franchise agreement is terminated pursuant to the provisions thereof, the landlord shall have the right at its option to terminate the lease.

EXHIBIT 232 (R. 265) (SEE EXS. 222 AND 231)

1. Parties: Trustees in Bankruptcy of Paramount Publix Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: January 25, 1934.

3. Duration: Approximately ten years.

4. Coverage: (1) Lease of the following theatres in San Francisco; Paramount, period May 1, 1933, to June 30, 1943; California, period May 1, 1933, to August 31, 1943; St. Francis, period January 1, 1934, to June 30, 1943.

(2) Paramount participation in the net earnings of the following theatres operated by Fox in downtown San Francisco: Paramount, California, St. Francis, Warfield.

(3) Lease of Paramount Theatre, Oakland, California, for a period of 15 years commencing May 1, 1933, with an option to renew.

(4) Lease of Paramount Theatre, Portland, Oregon, for the period November 10, 1933, to October 31, 1943.

(5) Ten-year film franchise agreements relating to exhibition of Paramount pictures first-run in Fox theatres in the cities of San Francisco, California, Oakland, California (15 years), Portland, Oregon, and Seattle, Washington.

5. Terms: This agreement which, together with exhibits attached thereto, comprises a total of 409 pages. The preliminary portion contains recitals as to a previous agreement, dated December 10, 1930, between Paramount and Fox, under which Paramount agreed that it would cause its appropriate subsidiaries to sublet, and Fox agreed that it would cause Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., or other designated subsidiaries, to hire from Paramount's subsidiaries certain theatres in the above-named cities. As an outgrowth of this December 10th agreement, and also as a result of certain other transactions entered into between Paramount and Fox, controversies had arisen between the Paramount Trustees and Fox which they desired to settle in accordance with the provisions of the instant agreement.

Article I (page 12) Rent Arrearages on the Paramount, California, and St. Francis Theatres in San Francisco

This article provided for settlement of rental arrearages of these theatres.

Article II (page 15) New Leasing Argeement, San Francisco Theatres

It was provided that West Coast would cause a new corporation to be named West Coast Leasing Corporation, or such other name as West Coast should designate (termed "Coast Leasing") to be organized under the laws of Delaware for the purpose of acquiring and operating theatres; that Paramount Trustees would cause the Granada Realty Company, as lessor, and West Coast as lessee, to enter into a lease of the Paramount Theatre in San Francisco substantially in the form annexed as "Exhibit B" (page 85) attached to the agreement, for a period of ten years and two months beginning May 1, 1933, and ending June 30, 1943, at an annual rental of $87,500 and upwards; that Paramount Trustees would cause the Market Street Realty Company, as lessor, to lease to West Coast, as lessee, the California Theatre in the form annexed marked "Exhibit C" (page 114) for a period of ten years and four months, beginning May 1, 1933, and ending August 31, 1943, at an annual rental of $35,000 until August 31, 1936, and $42,500 for each year thereafter until termination of the lease; that the Paramount Trustee would cause the Strand Leasing Company, as sublessor, and West Coast, as sublessee, to execute a sublease of the St.

Francis Theatre, San Francisco, substantially in the form annexed, marked "Exhibit D" (page 141), for a period of nine years and six months, beginning January 1, 1934, and ending June 30, 1943, at an annual rental of $75,000. West Coast agreed that it would immediately cause Coast Leasing to execute a sublease of each of these San Francisco theatres.

Section 14 of this Article (page 25) stipulates that the trustees in bankruptcy of Fox West Coast Theatres, in addition to the other San Francisco theatres mentioned, are operating Loew's Warfield Theatre owned by a subsidiary of Loew's, Inc., and leased to Fox West Coast Theatres, bankrupt, for a term ending September 27, 1941. It is also stipulated that negotiations are pending for, and West Coast agrees to use its best efforts to obtain, a lease, sublease, or operating arrangement, for the Embassy Theatre, San Francisco. This Article further provides that West Coast will cause to be transferred to Coast Leasing all rights, title, and interests which Fox or West Coast, or their subsidiaries, may have or become entitled to in the profits of operation of the aforesaid theatres.

Section 15 of this Article (page 27) provides that there shall be annexed as "Exhibit E" (page 177) a map of the downtown district of San Francisco showing the motion picture theatres in said district; that in the event there should be acquired any additional theatre or theatres in said district by Fox, West Coast, or the trustees in bankruptcy of Fox West Coast Theatres, or by Paramount Trustees, each theatre shall be offered to Coast Leasing, or a wholly owned subsidiary thereof, within thirty days after the acquisition.

Article III (page 28) Agreement for Payment of a Portion of Operating Profits, San Francisco Theatres

It provided that for the period from May 1, 1933, to date of commencement of operations of Coast Leasing, West Coast will pay to Paramount Trustees a sum equal to 37½% of the aggregate net earnings for such period arising from the operation of all theatres within the downtown district of San Francisco in which either Fox or West Coast, or the bankrupt estate of Fox West Coast, shall have any interest. For the period from the date of commencement of operations of Coast Leasing to June 30, 1943, West Coast agrees to pay Paramount Trustees a sum equal to 37½% of the aggregate net earnings of Coast Leasing.

Article IV (page 45) Paramount Theatre, Oakland, California

Section 2 of this Article provides that West Coast will cause Solano Theatre Corporation, Ltd., to enter into an agreement of lease with Broadway and Twentieth Properties, Inc., substantially in the form annexed marked "Exhibit F" (page 178), as lessor for the Paramount Theatre in Oakland, this lease to be for a term of fifteen years, beginning May 1, 1943, with an option to the lessor to renew for five additional years at a rental of $70,000 per annum, or 15% of the annual gross receipts, whichever sum may be greater.

Article V (page 49) Seattle and Portland Theatres

Section 1 of this Article provides for a settlement whereby Fox agrees to pay to Paramount Trustees in complete satisfaction and full discharge of Fox's obligation to them and to Paramount, with respect to arrearages in rent claimed to be due under the agreement of December 10, 1930 up to December 31, 1932 for the Paramount Theatre in Seattle, the sum of $9,696.89. Fox, by payment of the sum of $4,500, makes a similar settlement of all claims arising under the December 10th agreement relating to the Rialto Theatre in Portland, Oregon. A similar settlement is made with respect to arrearages in rental claimed under the December 10th agreement for the Paramount Theatre in Portland, Oregon by the payment by Fox of the sum of $20,833.34.

Article VI (page 59) Film Franchise Agreements

Section 1 provides that Paramount Trustees will cause Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., to execute and deliver the following agreements covering features, news reels, and short subjects:

(1) Film Franchise Agreement annexed marked "Exhibit L" (page 250).

Parties: Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.

Duration: Term beginning August 1, 1933, and ending July 31, 1943.

Coverage: The following theatres in San Francisco: Paramount, Warfield, St. Francis.

Run: First run (subject to Paramount's right to "road-show").

Admission Price: The exhibitor will charge admission prices comparable in amount to the average admission prices charged for admission by theatres of similar character in cities of corresponding size.

Rental: For Class "A" features at Paramount Theatre for each week of exhibition, 25% of gross to $14,000 and a sum equal to 50% of gross in excess of $14,000. Where weekly gross less than $10,000 license fee to be 20% of gross during such week; for Class "B" features at Warfield Theatre, 15% of weekly gross up to $20,000, 50% above that sum. Minimum guarantee $1,750; for Class "C" features at Warfield, 15% of weekly gross up to $20,000, 50% above that sum; for Class "D" features at St. Francis Theatre $800.

(2) Film Franchise Agreement annexed marked "Exhibit M" (page 287).

Parties: Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc. and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.

Duration: Fifteen years—August 1, 1933 to July 31, 1948.

Coverage: Fox, Paramount, Orpheum, Grand Lake Theatres, Oakland, California.

Run: First run Oakland, California.

Admission Price: Exhibitor will charge admission prices comparable in amount to the average admission prices charged for admission by theatres of similar character in cities of corresponding size.

Rental: For Class "A" features at Fox in conjunction with stage presentation, 15% of gross up to $19,000, and 50% thereafter. For Class "A" features at Fox not in conjunction with stage presentation, 25% of the weekly gross up to $15,000, 50% thereafter. If weekly gross less than $10,000 then license fee to be 20% of such weekly gross.

For Class "A" feature photoplays at Paramount Theatre with stage presentation, 15% of weekly gross up to $18,000, 50% thereafter. For Class "A" features at Paramount without stage presentation, 25% of weekly gross up to $13,000, 50% thereafter. If weekly gross without stage presentation less than $9,000, the license fee shall be 20%.

For Class "A" features at Orpheum Theatre with stage presentation, 15% up to $17,000, 50% thereafter. For Class "A" features at Orpheum Theatre without stage presentation, 25% up to $12,000, 50% thereafter. If weekly gross less than $8,000, license fee 20% of such weekly gross. For Class "B" features at Orpheum or Grand Lake Theatres $500 per photoplay.

(3) "Exhibit N" (page 328) is an agreement providing for the application of the terms and conditions of the film franchise agreements referred to in Exhibits "L" and "M" to pictures released for exhibition in San Francisco and Oakland during the period May 1, 1933, to August 1, 1933.

(4) "Exhibit O" (Page 330) Film Franchise Agreement.

Parties: Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.

Duration: August 1, 1933, to July 31, 1943.

Coverage: Liberty and Paramount Theatres in Portland, Oregon.

Run: First.

Admission Price: Admission prices shall be comparable to those charged by theatres of similar character in cities of corresponding size.

Rental: Deal sheets attached to contract provide that at the Liberty Theatre there shall be a total of twenty-five weeks playing time as follows: Six weeks at 30% a split, 50% over the split. Fourteen weeks at 25% to a split, 50% over the split. Five weeks at 20% to a split, 50% over the split.

At the Paramount sixteen pictures shall play at 20% to a split, with 50% over the split. Nine pictures at $500 per picture, seven days each. Balance $350 for seven days each. Exhibitor has the privilege of excluding 10% of the $350 pictures of Group S–5. The "split figure" is deemed to mean that point where the gross receipts of the theatre during the exhibition of each such percentage photoplay shall reach a figure which allows the exhibitor to reimburse itself out of such gross receipts for its operating expenses and for the minimum license fee so paid, and will allow the exhibitor as profit a further sum out of such gross receipts equal to the minimum license fee so paid.

(5) "Exhibit P" (page 362) Franchise Agreement.

Parties: Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc. and Evergreen State Amusement Corporation (Delaware).

Duration: Ten years, commencing August 1, 1933, and ending July 31, 1943.

Coverage: The following theatres in Seattle, Washington, the Fifth Avenue, Paramount, and Orpheum Theatres.

Run: First (subject to Paramount's right to "road-show" as provided).

Rental: Fifth Avenue, twenty weeks' playing time, six weeks, 30% to a split, 50% over the split. Fourteen weeks, 25% to a split, 50% over the split.

Paramount (total of 20 pictures). If stage show, 15% to a split, 50% over the split. If no stage show, 25% to a split, 50% over the split.

It is also agreed if the weekly gross receipts of the Fifth Avenue Theatre during the exhibition of any such 30% or 25% photoplays shall not reach the house expenses during such respective weekly exhibition, then such license fees shall be reduced with respect to such week to 25% of gross to the split and 50% over with respect to such 30% photoplays and 20% of the gross to a split with 50% over with respect to such 25% photoplays.

EXHIBIT 232a (R. 2269)

1. Parties: Contract between Paramount-Publix Corporation (Paramount) and Fox Film Corporation (Fox).
2. Date of Agreement: December 10, 1930.
3. Duration: Varying dates from 3 years to 20 years.
4. Coverage: (a) Sublease of the following Paramount first run theatres:

Theatre and City

California, San Francisco; Paramount, San Francisco; St. Francis, San Francisco; Paramount, Seattle; Paramount, Portland; Rialto, Portland.

(b) Licensing of Paramount pictures in said theatres.

5. Rental Terms: (a) Sublease.—Fox to pay Paramount

a stipulated annual rental ranging from $39,737.60 to $217,743.99, depending upon the theatre involved; with a provision that if the actual yearly earnings of Fox West Coast Theatres Inc.'s "first-run" exhibitions in San Francisco, Seattle and Portland (combined) exceed their average yearly earnings as specified, then Fox will pay Paramount, as additional rent, 35% of the difference between such average yearly earnings and the actual yearly earnings; but such additional payment shall not exceed, in the aggregate, the sum of $109,600—with proportionate reduction where a lease is terminated; and with a further provision that in determining the annual earnings and the average earnings of Fox West Coast Theatres Inc., it shall be assumed that it has under its operation and control, for such year, all "first-run" theatres in the cities mentioned * * * in the operation of which Fox shall have had any financial interest (whether thru majority or minority stock ownership, or thru participating agreements or otherwise).

(b) Licensing of Paramount pictures in the theatres subleased by it to Fox.—Fox was to have exclusive right to exhibit Paramount pictures in the theatres referred to above so long as Fox has under sublease to it any of the theatres in the respective cities described; the rental terms being specifically provided for in detail.

6. Other Terms: (a) The agreement contains a provision to the effect that if a majority of the voting and controlling stock of Fox Film Corporation shall pass into the hands of others than the present owners thereof, or if the ownership and control of Fox West Coast Theatres Inc. shall pass out of the hands of Fox Film Corporation, then in either event Paramount shall have the right to terminate this agreement upon giving 6 months' notice.

(b) There was also a provision that for the 1931-32 season, Paramount will refrain from disposing, for second-run exhibition in any of the cities covered by the first-run license granted by it to Fox, of any of the pictures covered by the first-run license aforementioned until Fox shall have an opportunity to agree with Paramount upon terms for such second-run exhibitions in Fox's theatres in said cities.

EXHIBIT 233 (R. 265)

1. Parties: Lease between Strand Leasing Company (Paramount) and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.
2. Date of Agreement: January 1, 1934.
3. Duration: January 1, 1934 to June 30, 1943.
4. Coverage: St. Francis Theatre, San Francisco, California.
5. Terms: Provides for a total rental of $712,500.

Refers to a franchise agreement dated August 1, 1933 between Paramount and the lessee for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in certain theatres in San Francisco, including the leased theatre, and lease provides that if Paramount becomes entitled to terminate the franchise agreement according to the provisions thereof, it shall have the right at its option to terminate the lease.

1. Parties: Lease between Market Street Realty Co. (Paramount) and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.
2. Date of Agreement: May 1, 1933.
3. Duration: May 1, 1933 to Aug. 31, 1943.
4. Coverage: California Theatre, San Francisco, California.
5. Terms: Provides for a specified annual rental.

Refers to a franchise agreement dated August 1, 1933, between Paramount and the lessee for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in certain theatres in San Francisco, including the leased theatre, and lease provides that if Paramount becomes entitled to terminate the franchise agreement according to the provisions thereof, it shall have the right at its option to terminate the lease.

---

1. Parties: Lease between San Francisco Paramount Corporation and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.
2. Date of Agreement: May 1, 1933.
3. Duration: May 1, 1933 to June 30, 1943.
4. Coverage: Paramount Theatre, San Francisco, California.
5. Terms: Provides for a specified annual rental.

Refers to a franchise agreement dated August 1, 1933 between Paramount and the lessee for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in certain theatres in San Francisco, including the leased theatre, and lease provides that if Paramount becomes entitled to terminate the franchise agreement according to the provisions thereof, it shall have the right at its option to terminate the lease.

EXHIBIT 235 (R. 266)

1. Parties: Lease by Loew's to Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.

2. Date of Agreement: August 31, 1936.

3. Duration: Period covering September 1, 1936, to August 31, 1945.

4. Coverage: State Theatre, Los Angeles, California.

5. Terms: Provides for a total rental of $1,350,000, payable in monthly installments of $12,500 each.

Lease refers to a franchise agreement between Loew's and the tenant to be executed simultaneously with the lease for the exhibition of Loew pictures in the State Theatre, and it is provided that if the franchise agreement is terminated pursuant to the provisions thereof then the landlord at its option shall be entitled to terminate the lease.

EXHIBIT 236 (R. 266)

1. Parties: Publix-Salt Lake, Inc. (Lessor) (Paramount), and Fox Idaho Theatre Corporation (Lessee).

2. Date of Agreement: June 1, 1935.

3. Coverage: Paramount Theatre, Idaho Falls, Idaho.

4. Duration: June 1, 1935 to October 30, 1944.

5. Terms: Publix leases its Paramount Theatre, Idaho Falls, Idaho to Fox for a period of years ending October 30, 1944 at $833.33 per month. The lease recites that the present lease shall be subject to the superior lease between Colonial Investment Company, and Publix-Marcus Inc., dated October 16, 1929, which was thereafter assigned to Publix Salt Lake, Inc. the sub-lessor herein.

EXHIBITS 238, 239 (R. 267)

1. Parties: Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, Grauman's Greater Hollywood Theatre, Inc., United West Coast Theatres Corporation, United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd., Fox West Coast Agency Corporation, and United Artists Theatre Corporation of Los Angeles.

2. Date of Agreement: September 20, 1937.

3. Duration: Ending March 31, 1947.

4. Coverage: Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, California; Grauman's Chinese Theatre, Hollywood, California; Four Star Theatre, Los Angeles, California; United Artists Downtown Theatre, Los Angeles, California.

5. Terms: By this agreement Grauman's Greater Hollywood, United West Coast, Los Angeles United Artists and United Artists, and West Coast, vest the management of their Chinese, Four Star, United Artists Downtown, and Loew's State Theatres in Fox West Coast Agency Corporation, with the Agency receiving 5¼% of the gross income of all theatres as its fee. Fox West Coast Agency is to have the exclusive authority to lease and book all attractions for exhibition, and may, "from time to time close and thereafter reopen any of the theatres", provided written consents have been obtained. Various rentals (enumerated on page 5) are to be paid to the parties for their respective theatres with the net profits being divided equally between Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation and United Artists Theatres Circuit, Inc. The agreement further provides that in the event that the Four Star shall not be used as a first-run theatre it may at the election of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation be excluded from the operation of the agreement and be reincluded if it again operates as a first-run theatre. The sublease for the Four Star Theatre is to be extended by agreement between United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd., and United Theatres West Coast Corporation so that it will expire on March 31, 1947.

Letter

1. Parties: United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd., and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, Grauman Greater Hollywood, Inc., United West Coast Theatres Corporation, United Artists Theatres Circuit, Inc., Fox West Coast Agency Corporation.

2. Date: January 1, 1939.

3. Coverage: Four Star, Chinese, Loew State, United Artist Downtown Theatres.

Supplemental Agreement

1. Parties: Hollywood Egyptian, Inc., Egyptian Theatre Corporation and United West Coast Theatres Corporation (Fox United Artists Theatre Circuit).

2. Date: October 13, 1942.

3. Coverage: Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, Los Angeles, California.

4. Terms: Egyptian Theatre Corporation assigns all its right, title and interest in and to its lease with Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, Inc., and the latter assume all liability thereunder. Mutual releases are exchanged between Hollywood Egyptian, Inc., and Egyptian Theatre Corporation with the provision that the sublease shall continue with Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, Inc., as sublessor and United West Coast Theatres Corporation agreeing to be bound by all of the agreements of the sublessee.

Supplemental Agreement

1. Parties: Egyptian Theatre Corporation (lessor), United West Coast Theatre Corporation (lessee).

2. Date of Agreement: January 1, 1934.

3. Duration: Period of five years ending December 31, 1938.

4. Coverage: Egyptian Theatre.

5. Terms: Recites that the Egyptian Theatre Corporation is in possession of the premises under a lease dated June 29, 1927, from Boulevard Theatre Co. Egyptian Theatre Corporation leases all the premises therein described for a period of five years ending December 31, 1938, at a rental of $2,766.64 per month.

Supplemental Agreement

1. Parties: Egyptian Theatre Corporation (lessor), United West Coast Theatres Corporation (lessee).

2. Date of Agreement: November 1, 1938.

3. Coverage: Egyptian Theatre.

4. Duration: Term extended to March 31, 1947.

5. Terms: This agreement modifies the sublease dated January 1, 1934, and extends the term thereof to March 31, 1947. Recites the "senior lease" which expires June 29, 1952.

Joint interests are shown under the column headed "Pools." In this column we have also included the situations in which United Artists Theatre Circuit is interested with one of the defendants as it is jointly interested with each of them in various locations, although none of them own a direct or indirect stock interest in it. As used in this tabulation, the term "pools" include all such joint interests, whether held directly or indirectly through stock ownership in the same corporation or through a lease or operating agreement.

In compiling this tabulation, the following sources were used:

(a) 1945 theatre lists furnished by the five distributor-exhibitor defendants, marked as Government Exhibits 156 (R. 242), 157 (R. 242), 158 (R. 242), 159 (R. 242), 160 (R. 242), 161 (R. 243), 162 (R. 243), 163 (R. 243), 163b (R. 2159), and 360 (R. 240);

(b) List of corporate structure and theatre holdings furnished by United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., marked as Government Exhibit 164 (R. 375);

(c) 1945 corporate structure lists (supplements to 1939 interrogatory 17) furnished by the five distributor-exhibitor defendants, marked as Government Exhibits 22 (R. 179), 47 (R. 180), 64 (R. 187), 87 (R. 202), 119 (R. 219), and 120 (R. 220);

(d) Answers to 1939 interrogatories 50 (a) and 52 furnished by the five distributor-exhibitor defendants, marked as Government Exhibits 8 (R. 161), 9 (R. 161), 12 (R. 162), 13 (R. 162), 48 (R. 181), 88 (R. 202), 97 (R. 203), 100 (R. 204), and 118 (R. 217).

A. LIST OF THEATRE HOLDINGS OF DEFENDANTS WHICH SHOWS THE NUMBER AND LOCATION, BY STATE AND CITY, OF ALL THEATRES IN WHICH EACH DEFENDANT SEPARATELY OWNS A DIRECT OR INDIRECT STOCK INTEREST OF 50% OR MORE; THOSE IN WHICH THEY OWN A STOCK INTEREST OF LESS THAN 50%; AND THOSE IN WHICH TWO OR MORE DEFENDANTS OR CORPORATIONS AFFILIATED WITH ONE OR MORE OF THEM ARE JOINTLY INTERESTED.

3. Recapitulation of Fox data disclosed in Exs. 467, 468, 469 (R. 2455) and F–21, F–21A (R. 1583, 2271):

As shown in Plaintiff's Ex. 467, which recapitulates the rental performance of the defendants' films released during the 1936–37 season in the town of Atlanta, Georgia, although the only affiliated theatres in the town were seven first-run theatres, those theatres paid about 70% of the total film rental received by all of the distributor defendants from all of the theatres in Atlanta, despite the fact that Columbia received all of its rentals from unaffiliated theatres. In Kansas City (Ex. 468) and Philadelphia (Ex. 469), the affiliated theatres also paid about 70% of the total film rentals received by all defendants, although in those larger cities the affiliated theatres blanketed the first three runs in each city instead of just the first runs.

Comparable town-by-town figures are available for the feature film "Sweet Rosie O'Grady", the Fox feature with the largest number of domestic billings released by Fox during the 1943–44 season. Fox's Exs. 21 and 21–A, the latter being a supplement prepared by Fox at Plaintiff's request and offered by Plaintiff, show the following proportion of rentals derived from first runs in these three cities on this picture, as compared with the comparable figures for all Fox 1936–37 features in the same towns (Exs. 467, 468 and 469).

	Atlanta	Kansas City	Philadelphia
	Percent	Percent	Percent
Sweet Rosie O'Grady	70	73	34
All Fox 1936–37 features	64.5	43.8	30.1

While the percentage of first-run rental from a popular film will generally be greater than that for an unsuccessful one, these figures indicate the current trend toward an increase in the percentage of the total gross which the first runs contribute. That this increase is, in part, due to greater use of simultaneous first runs, and moveover first runs is shown by the following examples computed from Exs. F–21 and F–21–A. The figure in the first column is the percentage of the total revenue from the city which came from the first runs and the figure in the second column is the number of theatres which played them on first run. The third column is the total number of exhibitions in the town and represents the total number of theatres which played the film on all runs.

H. TABULATIONS SHOWING FIRST RUN DISTRIBUTION OF FEATURES RELEASED BY THE DEFENDANTS AMONG THEATRES RESPECTIVELY AFFILIATED WITH THEM AND INDEPENDENT THEATERS

1. For all of the defendants' features released during the 1943–44 season in all cities over 100,000 (Exs. 428, 428A):

Exhibit 428 (R. 2324, 2473)

Exhibitors holding first-run contracts with defendant distributors in 82 cities with populations of 100,000 and over, during the 1943–44 season

Distributor licensor appears at head of each column. Abbreviations "War," "Par," "Fox," "Loew," and "RKO" indicate particular defendant with which first run licensee is affiliated. "Ind" indicates first run licensee is not affiliated with any distributor. Where symbol "&" is used the distributor's films were divided among first-run licensees shown. Where symbol "—" is used the first-run licensees shown had pooled their theatres.

(d) Recapitulation of data in Exs. L–8, L–9, and L–16

Loew's Exhibit 8 confirms the fact that the preferred playing time in the affiliated theatres is reserved for affiliated features. It shows the film rentals which Loew's Metropolitan theatres paid to the distributor defendants, to the non-defendants, to Republic, and to all others (which are grouped under the heading "Miscellaneous"), for the years 1931 to 1944, inclusive. Thus, the Republic figure must be added to the Miscellaneous figure to secure the total for non-defendant distributors. This exhibit shows that there has been a decrease in the percentage of total rentals paid by these theatres to all non-defendant distributors from a high of 5.1% in 1931 to 4.2% in 1944, although this percentage has risen substantially from the lowest figure on the chart of 1.5% in 1942. The same percentages for all Loew's theatres is shown on Loew's Exhibit 9, which includes the Metropolitan theatres and the theatres outside that area, which are substantially all first run theatres. The percentage of total rental paid to non-defendants, as shown on this exhibit, are for the year 1931, 2.9%, for the year 1942, 0.3%, and for the year 1944, 2.6%, which, when compared with the higher percentage for the Metropolitan theatres, listed above, simply reflects the fact that Loew's Metropolitan circuit includes numerous subsequent runs in which non-defendant product gets some representation, while in the first runs outside the Metropolitan district non-defendant features get virtually no representation. The corresponding totals for the payments made to affiliated distributors and to other distributor defendants for the same years for the Metropolitan theatres and for all Loew theatres respectively are as follows:

	Loew's Metropolitan Theatres (ex L–9)		All Loew Theatres (ex L–9)
	Major defendants	Other defendants	Major defendants	Other defendants
1931	76.5	18.4	76.3	20.8
1942	65.5	33.0	74.0	25.7
1944	61.3	34.5	72.9	24.5

Thus, while there has been a very great increase in the proportionate payments to unaffiliated defendants for the use of their films in subsequent run theatres, there has been a counter-balancing decrease in proportionate first run rental payments to the unaffiliated defendants, which have resulted in only a small net decrease in the payments to affiliated distributors for all runs in all Loew theatres.

The fact that the most profitable playing time in first run theatres has been increasingly reserved for affiliated films is further confirmed by Loew's Exhibit 16, which shows the number of features exhibited by all of Loew's first run theatres for the seasons 1934–35 through 1944–45, inclusive, broken down among those released by Loew, by other affiliated distributors, and by all non-theatre owning distributors, which category, of course, includes the other defendant distributors as well as non-defendants. This exhibit shows that the percentage of Loew features used, in terms of numbers, decreased from 39% in 1934–35 to 33% in 1944–45, with an intervening peak of 42% in the 1938–39 season. It also shows that the proportion of all of the other features used by these theatres which were supplied by the affiliated distributors decreased from 54% in 1934–35 to 35% in 1944–45, with a correspondingly steady increase in the number of features supplied by non-theatre owning distributors from 46% to 65%. Yet, when these figures are compared with the proportionate rental payments for the roughly corresponding periods, tabulated in Loew's Exhibit 9, it appears that from the year 1935, which includes the last eight months of the 1934–35 season, to the year 1944, which includes only the first four months of the 1944–45 season, but is the last year shown on the exhibit, there was an increase in the payments made by all Loew theatres for Loew features from 41.0% to 47.9%, and a decrease in the payments of the same theatres for the features of the other affiliated distributors from 36.2% to 31.9% during this period. The total payments to all affiliated distributors by all Loew theatres thus actually increased from 77.2% to 79.8% during this period. Since the previous comparison of Loew's Exhibits 8 and 9 has already shown that Loew's first runs paid a higher percentage of their total film rental to affiliated distributors than their subsequent runs paid, it is apparent that despite the great increase in the proportion of films distributed by unaffiliated distributors used in the Loew first run theatres, there was a proportionate decrease in rental payments to them by those theatres.

768841 O—48——24

A comparison of the proportionate feature rentals paid by all Loew theatres to the same distributors during each of the calendar years 1931 to 1944, inclusive, was furnished in Ex. L–9. These figures show the following comparisons between the proportion of numbers of features used and the proportion of feature rentals paid to the various distributors which furnished them:

NUMBER OF FEATURES

	Major defendants	Other defendants	Nondefendants
1934–35 season	71.6	24.6	3.8
1944–45 season	56.2	31.7	12.1

FEATURE RENTALS

1935	72.9	25.6	1.5
1944	72.9	24.5	2.6

The foregoing table shows that the greatly increased use of features released by non-defendant distributors in recent years has resulted in no increase in the unaffiliated distributors' proportionate penetration of the domestic film market, in terms of dollars.

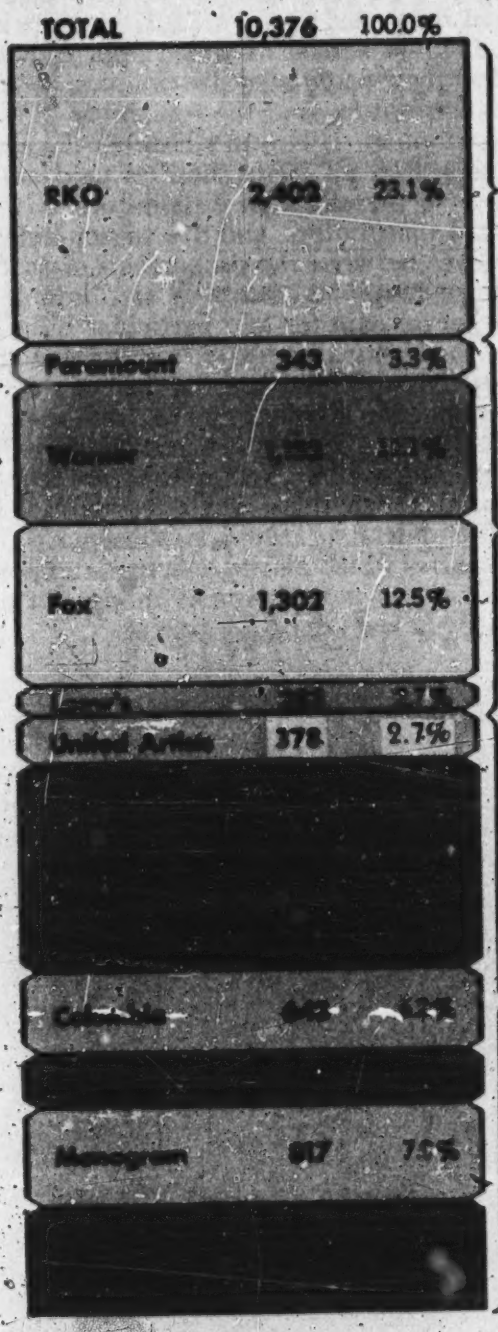
FIRST RUN AND METROPOLITAN CIRCUIT RUN (Ex. RKO-8 (R-1659))



Source: RKO Film Booking Dept. Records

(b) Recapitulation of data in Ex. RKO–8 (R. 1659) compared with RKO data in Ex. 424 (R. 2276, 2284)

A comparison of Exhibit RKO–8 with plaintiff's Exhibit 424 (supra, p. 256) shows that R O's first run theatres and the theatres in its Metropolitan circuit, which are mainly subsequent runs, used a total of 10,376 feature billings during the 1943–44 season of which approximately 53% were supplied by the affiliated distributors, 26% by other defendant distributors, and the remaining 21% by nondefendant distributors. Plaintiff's Exhibit 424 shows that for the same season all RKO theatres paid out in rentals about 74% to the affiliated distributors, 23% to the other defendant distributors, and 3% to non-defendants. The difference between the proportions of feature billings and feature rental payments is attributable to the fact that the rental paid for any particular billing is dependent upon the particular run it represented in a particular competitive area and the number of days of the run. This comparison simply demonstrates that the non-defendant distributors did not get rentals per billing for their features comparable to those secured by the defendants' films, although there was a substantial use in numbers of non-defendant films in subsequent run theatres and in theatres which played on a first-run policy with inferior product and more frequent changes of program at comparatively low admission prices.

DECREE

The United States of America having filed its Petition herein on July 20, 1938, and its Amended and Supplemental Complaint on November 14, 1940; the defendants: Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Proctor Corporation; RKO Midwest Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and National Theatres Corporation[1] having appeared and severally filed their answers to such Petition and to such Amended and Supplemental Complaint and having asserted the truth of their answers and their innocence of any violation of law; and no testimony having been taken, but each of the consenting defendants having consented to the entry of this decree without any findings of fact, upon condition that neither such consent, nor this decree itself, nor the entry of this decree, nor any statement, provision or requirement contained in this decree, shall be or shall be construed as being (1) an admission or adjudications that the allegations of the Petition or of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint, or any of them, are or is true, or that such defendants, or any one or more of them, have or has violated or are or is violating any statute or law, or (2) evidence that such allegations, or any of them, are or is true, or that such defendants, or any one or more of them, have or has violated any statute or law, or (3) an admission or adjudication that the doing of any of the acts or things hereinafter enjoined or the failure to do any of the acts or things hereinafter directed to be done would constitute a violation of any statute or law, and upon the further conditions hereinafter set forth; and the United States of America, by its counsel, having consented to the entry of this decree and to each and every provision thereof upon such conditions, and having moved the Court for the entry of this decree;

[1] The above-named defendants are referred to hereinafter as the consenting defendants.

THEREFORE, IT IS ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

I

The Court has jurisdiction of the parties hereto; and for the purposes of this decree and of proceedings for the enforcement thereof, and for no other purpose, the Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and the complaint states a cause of action against the defendants under the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890 entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies".

The Petitioner not having offered any proof of its allegations that defendants have violated the antitrust laws, and defendants having denied each and every such allegation, this Court has not determined or adjudicated and by this decree does not determine or adjudicate, and this is not a decree to the effect that any of said defendants has violated or is now violating any of such laws, or any other statute; and this decree relates solely to future conduct herein below specified and is not based upon any finding, determination, or adjudication that any right or statute has yet been or is now being violated.

II

Each consenting defendant, its successors, officers, directors, agents and employees, and all persons and corporations acting under, through, or for it, hereby is and are enjoined from doing the acts prohibited by this decree, and is and are directed to do the acts thereby required.

III

No consenting defendant engaged in the distribution of motion pictures (hereinafter referred to as a distributor defendant) shall license or offer for license [2] a feature motion picture [3] (hereinafter sometimes referred to as a feature) for public exhibition within the United States of America at which an admission fee is to be charged, until the feature has been trade shown [4] within the exchange district [5] in which the public exhibition is to be held. Every trade showing shall be preceded by a notice, published in a trade publication [6] having general circulation among exhibitors [7] in such exchange district, which shall state the title of the picture and the date and the time when and the place or places where it will be trade shown.

[2] License means (as a verb) to make an agreement, or (as a noun) an agreement, by which a distributor grants the right to exhibit a motion picture in any theatre engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures for profit.

[3] A feature motion picture is a motion picture approximately 5,000 feet, or more, in length.

[4] A trade showing is an exhibition of a feature at a theatre or projection room for the benefit of exhibitors generally.

[5] Each distributor defendant shall file with the Department of Justice a map of each of its exchange districts, showing the territorial limits thereof. Changes in the territorial limits of an exchange district shall be made only after two weeks' notice to the Department of Justice. References in this Section and in Sections V, IX and XVIII hereof to exchange districts are to exchange districts of each distributor defendant, as constituted from time to time.

[6] Trade publication means a daily or weekly newspaper or magazine which is devoted primarily to news concerning the motion picture industry.

[7] Exhibitor means any individual, partnership, unincorporated association, or corporation engaged in the public exhibition of motion pictures in a theatre or theatres for profit.

IV

(a) No distributor defendant shall offer for license or shall license more than five features in a single group. In offering its features for license to an exhibitor a distributor may change the combinations of features in groups as it may from time to time determine, and may license or offer for license as many groups of features as it may from time to time determine, provided that the license or offer for license of one group of features shall not be conditioned upon the licensing of another feature or group of features.

(b) No distributor defendant shall require an exhibitor to license short subjects, newsreels, trailers, or serials (hereinafter collectively referred to as shorts) as a condition of licensing features. No distributor defendant shall require an exhibitor to license reissues, westerns,[8] or foreign[9] (hereinafter collectively referred to as foreigns) as a condition of licensing other features.

Where a license has been entered into, controversies arising upon a complaint by an exhibitor that the licensing to him of one group of features was conditioned by the distributor upon the licensing of another feature or group of features or the licensing of shorts or foreigns shall be subject to arbitration. An exhibitor shall have no right to assert any such claim unless he shall have mailed to the distributor at its Home Office a notice in writing of such claim and of the grounds thereof, not later than two days after receipt by the exhibitor of the distributor's written approval of the exhibitor's signed application or applications for such features, shorts or foreigns. The power[10] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the licensing of such features was so conditioned; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award cancelling the license for (or to the extent that it may relate to) such other feature or group of features, or such shorts or foreigns.

[8] Westerns are those western pictures which are not of the usual character and type of, and are inexpensively produced as compared with, the distributor's general line of features.

[9] Foreigns are features produced outside of the United States except such as are produced in the English language by the distributor or a subsidiary or affiliate thereof.

[10] When, in any arbitration under this decree, the finding of the arbitrator shall be that the complainant has not sustained his complaint, the arbitrator shall enter an award dismissing the complaint.

Where no license has been entered into, controversies arising upon a complaint by an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has offered for license to him more than five features in a single group or that the offer of a license to him of one group of features was conditioned upon the licensing of another feature or group of features, or the licensing of shorts or foreigns, shall be subject to arbitration. An exhibitor shall have no right to assert any claim that an offer so to license such features was so made or conditioned unless he shall have mailed to the distributor at its Home Office a notice in writing of such claim and of the grounds therefor not later than five days after the exhibitor claims the alleged offer was made. The power [11] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the offer to license such features was so made or conditioned; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award imposing upon the distributor making such offer a penalty in an amount not to exceed five hundred dollars ($500.00). Such penalty shall be payable into the arbitration fund referred to in subdivision 8 of Section XXII hereof.

No license for features to be exhibited in theatres located in one exchange district [12] shall include theatres located in another exchange district, nor shall the licensing of features for exhibition in theatres located in one exchange district be conditioned upon the licensing of a feature or group of features for exhibition in theatres located in another exchange district.

Controversies arising upon a complaint by an exhibitor thereby affected that the licensing by a distributor defendant of features for exhibition in theatres located in one exchange district was conditioned upon the licensing of a feature or group of features for exhibition in theatres located in another exchange district shall be subject to arbitration. The power [13] of the arbitrator in deciding [11] See footnote 10 to this Section.

[12] See footnote 5 to Section III.
[13] See footnote 10 to Section IV.

any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the licensing of features for exhibition in theatres located in one exchange district was so conditioned upon the licensing of a feature or group of features for exhibition in theatres located in another exchange district; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award imposing upon the distributor defendant so licensing features a penalty in an amount not to exceed five hundred dollars ($500.00), payable into the arbitration fund referred to in subdivision 8 of Section XXII hereof.

VI

No distributor defendant shall refuse to license its pictures for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run (to be designated by the distributor) upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor which are not calculated to defeat the purpose of this Section, if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms to such exhibitor for said theatre will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located. Controversies arising upon a complaint by an exhibitor that, contrary to the provisions of this Section, a distributor defendant has refused so to license its pictures shall be subject to arbitration. The power [14] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not, contrary to the provisions of this Section, the distributor has refused to license its pictures to the complainant for exhibition in said theatre; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award directing the distributor to offer its pictures for license to the complainant for exhibition in said theatre on a run to be designated by the distributor and upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor which are not calculated to defeat the purpose of this Section. The burden of showing that granting a run on any terms to the complainant will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the complainant's theatre is located shall be upon the distributor.

[14] See footnote 10 to Section IV.

Any distributor defendant affected by such an award may institute a further arbitration proceeding to be relieved therefrom on the ground that since the making of the award the granting of a run in compliance therewith has had the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the complainant's theatre is located, and, in the event that the arbitrator finds that the granting of a run in compliance with the award has had the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in said area, he shall vacate the award.[15]

VII

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a feature licensed to him by a distributor defendant for exhibition in a particular theatre is generally offensive in the locality served by such theatre on moral, religious, or racial grounds shall be subject to arbitration. An exhibitor shall have no right to assert any such claim unless written notice of his election to cancel such feature, together with a statement of his reasons therefor, shall have been mailed to the distributor defendant at its Home Office not later than ten days after the receipt by the exhibitor of the distributor's written approval of the exhibitor's signed application for such feature. In such event the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of such feature in the theatre specified in the notice shall be deemed cancelled unless within five days after receipt of such notice, the distributor shall have mailed to the exhibitor a notice in writing of its denial of such claim and of its intention to arbitrate the controversy. The power [16] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the feature is generally offensive in the locality served by the exhibitor's theatre on moral, religious, or racial grounds; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award cancelling the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of such feature in said theatre.

---

[15] See footnote 10 to Section IV.

[16] (Section VII) See footnote 10 to Section IV.

VIII

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance [17] applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to arbitration under the following provisions:

It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the arbitrator shall take into consideration the following factors and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The historical development of clearance in the particular area wherein the theatres involved are located;

(2) The admission prices of the theatres involved;

(3) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(4) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, giveaways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(5) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor defendant from such theatres;

(6) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage; and

(7) All other business considerations, except that the arbitrator shall disregard the fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres.

The power [18] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the clearance complained of is unreasonable; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award fixing the maximum clearance between the theatres involved which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by the distributor defendant which is a party to the arbitration. Subject to the provisions of Section [17] (Section VIII) Clearance means the period of time, fixed by agreement between a distributor and an exhibitor, prior to the expiration of which a feature licensed for prior exhibition in a theatre may not be exhibited in another theatre or theatres.

[18] See footnote 10 to Section IV.

XVII hereof, the award may fix such maximum clearance under any then existing franchise or any license entered into pursuant to such franchise between such distributor defendant and any other party bound by this decree.

Any distributor defendant or any exhibitor affected by such an award may institute a further arbitration proceeding for a modification thereof upon the ground that since the making of the award the conditions with respect to the theatres involved therein have so changed as to warrant modification; and, in the event that the arbitrator finds that there has been such change,[20] he shall make a redetermination of the maximum clearance.

Nothing contained in this Section shall be deemed to restrict, and no award made in any arbitration under this Section shall restrict, the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which he is able to negotiate with any distributor, nor the distributor's right to license for any theatre any run which it desires to grant.

Nothing contained in this Section and no award hereafter entered in any arbitration in accordance with its provisions shall apply to licensing the exhibition of any special feature,[20] provided such special feature is licensed under an exhibition contract applicable only thereto, or to the right of a distributor defendant to include in such contract and to make a part thereof such special terms and conditions, including such special clearance provision or provisions, as such distributor shall fix, establish and enforce for and in connection with the exhibition of such special feature.

IX

In booking prints for exhibition by exhibitors competing on the same run in the same exchange district,[21] a distributor defendant shall not withhold delivery of prints available in its exchange from one exhibitor in order to give a competing exhibitor a prior playing date not provided for in his license. It is recognized that distributors must be permitted discretion in the ordinary course of booking and distributing films in an exchange district when too few prints are available in the exchange for the playing date desired by two or more theatres. In such cases this Section shall have no application.

Violations of this Section shall be subject to arbitration and, if the arbitrator finds [32] that the distributor complained against has pursued a policy of withholding available prints from the complaining exhibitor in violation of this Section, he shall enter an award directing the distributor to discontinue such policy.

X

A. Controversies arising upon a complaint by an independent exhibitor [33] that a distributor defendant has arbitrarily refused to license its features for exhibition on the run requested by said exhibitor in one of said exhibitor's theatres which was in existence or which replaced [34] a theatre in existence at the date of this decree shall be subject to arbitration.

B. In any such arbitration no award shall be made against a distributor defendant unless the arbitrator shall first find the following facts:

(1) The complainant is an independent exhibitor and the theatre operated by him and specified in his complaint was in existence at the date of the decree or replaced such a theatre; and

(2) Such refusal of the distributor to license its features for exhibition in the complainant's theatre on the run requested by the complainant continued during a period of not less than three successive months; and

(3) The distributor during such period has licensed the features requested by the complainant on the run requested by him to a theatre (sometimes hereinafter referred to as a circuit theatre) which was in competition with the theatre specified in the complaint and which was a component of a circuit of not less than 15 theatres or which was affiliated either by stock ownership, common ownership, common buying or otherwise with a circuit of not less than 15 theatres or the licenses for which were negotiated by a buying combine or common buying agent negotiating for not less than 15 theatres; and

[32] See footnote 10 to Section IV.

[33] An independent exhibitor, as used in this Section, is one wholly independent of any circuit of more than five theatres and not affiliated either by stock ownership, common ownership, common buying or otherwise with a circuit of more than five theatres and whose licenses are not negotiated by a buying combine or common buying agent negotiating for more than five theatres.

[34] A theatre shall not be deemed to have replaced such an existing theatre unless erected in the same neighborhood as one which was destroyed or permanently abandoned as a theatre, for the purpose of succeeding to its patronage, and with a seating capacity not more than 25 percent greater than that of the theatre replaced.

(4) The complainant's theatre has not available to it features sufficient in nature and quantity to enable it to operate on the run requested by the complainant; and

(5) (a) Subsequent to July 20, 1935 and prior to July 20, 1940 the complainant operated the theatre specified in his complaint on the same run as or on an earlier run than that enjoyed by the circuit theatre specified in the complaint; or

(b) Subsequent to July 20, 1940, and during the two consecutive motion picture seasons [28] immediately preceding the filing of the complaint, the complainant operated the theatre specified in his complaint on the same run as or on an earlier run than that enjoyed by the circuit theatre specified in the complaint and during such period exhibited on such run substantially all the features released during such period by the distributor complained against; or

(c) Subsequent to July 20, 1935 and prior to July 20, 1940 the complainant demanded in writing,[29] features for the theatre specified in his complaint from the distributor complained against on the same run as or on an earlier run than that enjoyed by the circuit theatre specified in the complaint; or the complainant had filed with a Local Clearance and Zoning Board or a Local Grievance Board under the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry approved pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act such a complaint which was not finally disposed of by administrative decision under said Code prior to May 27, 1935; or

(d) The complainant operated the theatre specified in his complaint for at least one year prior to the entry of this decree, and subsequent to July 20, 1935 and prior [28] A motion picture season means the period from September 1 of one year to August 31 of the next year.

[29] Demands in writing shall be deemed to include complaints in writing to the Department of Justice.

to July 20, 1940 a prior operator of said theatre had demanded in writing [27] features from the distributor complained against on the same run as or on an earlier run than that enjoyed by the circuit theatre specified in the complaint; or the complainant had filed with a Local Clearance and Zoning Board or a Local Grievance Board under the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry approved pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act such a complaint which was not finally disposed of by administrative decision under said Code priod to May 27, 1935; and

(6) Such refusal to license the exhibition of said features in the complainant's theatre specified in his complaint was in fact because the theatre licensed to exhibit them on the run requested by the complainant was a circuit theatre.

C. In determining whether the exhibitor's complaint is established by the evidence, the arbitrator shall take into consideration, among other things, the following factors and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed: the terms, if any, offered in respect of each of the two competing theatres; the seating capacity of each of said theatres; the capacity of each for producing revenue for the distributors; the character, appearance and condition of each, including its furnishings, equipment and conveniences; the location of each of said theatres; the character and extent of the area and population each serves; the competitive conditions in the area in which they are located; their comparative suitability [28] for exhibition of the distibutor's features on the run requested; the character and ability of the exhibitor operating each and his reputation generally in the industry and in the community for showmanship, honesty and fair dealing; the policy under which each of the theatres has been operated and the policy under which the complainant proposes to operate his said theatre if he obtains the run requested; the financial responsibility of the ex-

[27] See footnote 26 to this Section.

[28] In considering this factor in situations where the exhibitor customarily exhibits features in two or more theatres on the same run in the same situation as a unit by contracting for groups of features on an "or" basis (i. e., for exhibition at one of two or more specified theatres) all of such theatres may be considered collectively as a unit.

hibitor operating each of said theatres; and the distributor's prior relations with each of the two theatres involved and with their owners and operators and any equities arising therefrom.

D. If in any such arbitration the arbitrator finds [9] for the complainant, he may enter an award against the distributor which shall not affect the license to exhibit any feature then under license to the circuit theatre but which shall prohibit such distributor from thereafter licensing its features for exhibition either in the circuit theatre specified in the complaint on the run requested by the complainant, or in the complainant's theatre specified in the complaint, on such run, otherwise than by a separate contract or agreement which shall not be a part of any contract or agreement for the licensing of features for exhibition in any other theatre or conditioned upon the licensing of features for exhibition in any other theatre.

E. After a final award in favor of a complaining exhibitor has been made under this section, such exhibitor may institute a further arbitration proceeding (to be held before the arbitrator who entered the original award, if available) upon the ground that such award has not been complied with in good faith by the distributer against which it was entered. If in any such proceeding the arbitrator shall find [9] that the distributor has not complied in good faith with the original award, the arbitrator may award damages to the exhibitor for loss resulting from the distributor's failure to comply with the original award but any such award of damages shall be purely compensatory.

Any further arbitration proceeding for an award of damages for violation of the original award must be commenced within sixty days after such violation has occurred, by filing a statement specifying the facts constituting each alleged violation for which damages are sought and the exhibitor's alleged damages resulting from each such alleged violation. No award of damages shall be made in any such proceeding for any violation of the original award not occurring within said sixty-day period, but prior violations may, in any such proceeding, be considered by the arbitrator as evidence bearing upon the question of the distributor's good faith.

(1) For a period of three years after the entry of the decree herein each of the consenting defendants will notify* the Department of Justice immediately of any legally binding commitment for the acquisition by it of any additional theatre or theatres.

(2) During such period each such defendant will also report* to the Department of Justice on or before the tenth day of each month the changes in its theatre position, if any, that have occurred during the preceding month, as follows, together with a statement of the reasons for such changes:

(a) Theatres contracted to be built, or under construction;

(b) Theatres lost or disposed of;

(c) Theatres acquired;

(d) Interests in theatres acquired, with a statement of the nature and extent of such interests.

(3) If upon receipt of such information the Department of Justice requests any such defendant to furnish further information with respect to any of the above transactions in which it is involved, such defendant will make a reasonable effort to supply such information promptly.

(4) No information furnished under subdivision (1), (2) or (3) hereof shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

(5) For a period of three years following the entry of this decree, no consenting defendant shall enter upon a general program of expanding its theatre holdings. Nothing herein shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purposes of its business. Proceedings based on a violation of this sub-

*The notification and report shall include such commitments and changes as may have been made by corporations not parties to this decree which are controlled by such defendant. They shall also include such commitments or changes as may have been made by corporations in which such defendant owns a financial interest but which it does not control, if such defendant has received knowledge of such commitments or changes. Each defendant will request such corporations to notify it immediately of any such commitment or change.

XII

(a) If, prior to June 1, 1942, a decree shall not have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, requiring each of them to trade show its features before licensing the same for exhibition, Section III of this decree, after said date, shall be inoperative and of no binding force and effect upon the consenting defendants, or any of them, except with respect to licenses entered into prior to September 1, 1942, for the exhibition of features released prior to such date and subsequent to August 31, 1941.

(b) If, prior to June 1, 1942, a decree shall not have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, limiting the number of features which may be licensed in a single group, subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree, after said date, shall be inoperative and of no binding force and effect upon the consenting defendants, or any of them, except with respect to licenses entered into prior to September 1, 1942, for the exhibition of features released prior to such date and subsequent to August 31, 1941.

(c) If, prior to June 1, 1942, a decree shall have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation containing provisions requiring each of them to trade show its features before licensing the same for exhibition, any consenting defendant may at any time thereafter file herein a written notice of its election to be relieved from further compliance with Section III of this decree and to comply with said provisions of such decree against said defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, and thereupon an order or supplemental decree shall be entered herein on the application of the defendant or defendants so electing which shall subject said defendant or defendants to such provisions of such other decree and entitle it or them to the benefits of any terms thereof providing for the suspension, modification or vacation of said provisions, and relieve it or them from further compliance with the provisions of Section III of this decree.

(d) If, prior to June 1, 1942, a decree shall have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation containing provisions limiting the number of features which may be licensed in a single group, any consenting defendant may at any time thereafter file herein a written notice of its election to be relieved from further compliance with subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree and to comply with said provisions of such decree against said defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, and thereupon an order or supplemental decree shall be entered herein on the application of the defendant or defendants so electing which shall subject such defendant or defendants to said provisions of such other decree and entitle it or them to the benefits of any terms thereof providing for the suspension, modification or vacation of said provisions, and relieve it or them from further compliance with the provisions of subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree.

(e) If, prior to June 1, 1942, (1) a decree containing the provisions referred to in subdivision (c) hereof, or (2) a decree containing the provisions referred to in subdivision (d) hereof, or (3) a decree containing the provisions referred to in both of said subdivisions, shall have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, but an appeal therefrom has been taken or any of said provisions have not become operative and of full force and effect, then the operation of the provisions dealing with the same subject matter contained in Section III or subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree shall be suspended and shall be of no binding force and effect upon any consenting defendant except with respect to licenses entered into prior to September 1, 1942, for the exhibition of features released prior to said date and subsequent to August 31, 1941, unless and until such decree shall become final and such provisions shall be in full force and effect against the defendants

United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation. After such decrees shall have become final, any consenting defendant may at any time exercise its right of election provided for in subdivisions (c) and (d) of this Section.

(f) If, at any time, an Act of Congress or a rule or regulation made pursuant to an Act of Congress shall require the trade showing of features before licensing the same for exhibition, each of the consenting defendants shall be relieved from further compliance with Section III of this decree, and if, at any time, an Act of Congress or a rule or regulation made pursuant to an Act of Congress shall limit the number of features that may be licensed in a single group, each of the consenting defendants shall be relieved from further compliance with subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree. In either of such events any consenting defendant may at any time make application to this Court, of which notice shall be served upon Petitioner and all other consenting defendants, for an order relieving the consenting defendants, and each of them, from further compliance with Section III or subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree, or both, as the case may be, and vacating the same, and thereupon this Court shall make and enter such an order.

(g) At any time after September 1, 1943, any consenting defendant may move to vacate the then effective provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree by filing an application under oath stating that during any consecutive twelve months period preceding the filing of such application either (1) distributors of motion picture films have licensed 25 percent or more of the features released for exhibition in the United States otherwise than in accordance with the then effective provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree [11] or (2) 12½ percent or more of the total gross income from licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States, excluding the gross income of states rights exchanges, has been derived from pictures licensed otherwise than in accordance with the then effective provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree.[32]

Petitioner and all other consenting defendants shall be served with notice of the filing of such application.

Upon such application the Court shall enter an order relieving the defendants from further compliance with the provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree, unless within sixty (60) days after service of such application Petitioner shall establish to the satisfaction of the Court that during said twelve months period less than 12½ percent of the total gross income from licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States excluding the gross income of states rights exchanges, had been derived from pictures licensed otherwise than in accordance with the then effective provision of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree.[33]

(h) At any time after September 1, 1942, any consenting defendant may apply to the Court to vacate the provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree, or the provisions of either of such Sections, and upon such application, the Court shall enter an order relieving the consenting defendants from further compliance with such provisions, upon such defendant showing to the satisfaction of the Court that subsequent to said date and by reason of the competition of persons not selling exclusively in accordance with said provisions of said Sections, or of either of them,[34] compliance by the applicant defendant with such provisions of said Sections, or of either of them, has substantially and adversely affected the applicant defendant's business.

activities of any consenting defendant within the continental United States insofar as they relate to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures outside of the continental United States.

XIV

Nothing contained in this decree shall be construed to limit or affect the right of any distributor defendant, prior to the general release of a motion picture, to road show such picture or to license or otherwise arrange for the road showing [36] of such picture upon such terms and conditions as may be fixed by the distributor.

XV

The provisions of this decree shall not apply to any franchise which was signed prior to June 6, 1940, or to any license entered into pursuant to any such franchise, except that Section VIII hereof shall apply to all such franchises and such licenses between parties bound by this decree other than licenses referred to in Section XVII hereof.

XVI

No consenting defendant and no officer, director, agent or employee of any such defendant, shall be deemed to have violated any provision of this decree if the arbitration of disputes or controversies arising relative to the subject matter thereof is herein provided for, unless such defendant has refused to arbitrate such a dispute or controversy in the manner and under the conditions specified in this decree and in the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals which are filed herewith, as amended from time to time, or has failed or refused to abide by and perform the final award [37] made and entered in such an arbitration proceeding.

---

[36] (Section XIV) Road showing is an exhibition at a theatre where a majority of the main floor seats for each evening performance are reserved and sold at an admission price of not less than one dollar.

[37] (Section XVI) for the purposes of this Section the final award in any arbitration proceeding under Section X of this decree shall be only a final award for damages as therein provided.

XVII

Nothing contained in this decree shall be construed to limit, impair or restrict in any way whatsoever the right of each distributor defendant[38] to license the exhibition, or in any way to arrange or provide for the exhibition in such manner, upon such terms and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, of any or of all of the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute (1) in any theatre in the ownership, lease, management or operation, or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation, of which it directly or indirectly, by stock ownership or otherwise, owns a financial interest at the time of the entry of this decree and also at the time of such license, and (2) in any theatre in the ownership, lease, management or operation, or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation, of which such distributor defendant acquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership or otherwise, a financial interest of not less than 50 percent and (3) in any theatre in the ownership, lease, management, or operation, or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation, of which a company in which such defendant owned not less than 42 percent of the common stock at the date of the decree and at the time of such license,[39] acquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership or otherwise, a financial interest of not less than 50 percent.

[38] (Section XVII) For the purpose of this Section (1) defendant RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., or its successors, shall be deemed to have the same interest in the ownership, lease, management or operation or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation of any theatre which Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, or its successors, directly or indirectly, has; and (2) defendant Vitagraph, Inc., or its successors, shall be deemed to have the same interest in the ownership, lease, management or operation or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation of any theatre which Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or its successors, directly or indirectly, has.

[39] In the case of the distributor defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, or its successors, the defendant National Theatres Corporation, or its successors, shall be deemed to be such a company if said distributor defendant owned not less than 42 percent of its common stock at the date of the decree and not less than 35 percent of its common stock at the time of such license, provided not less than 42 percent of its common stock is owned by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, or its successors, and by present or future officers or directors of National Theatres Corporation, or its successors.

XVIII

For the purpose of securing compliance with this decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any consenting defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this decree, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for the company may be present. Without in any way limiting the rights granted in the foregoing provisions of this Section each of the distributor defendants shall keep at its principal office current records, which shall be accessible for the purpose aforesaid, showing—

(1) The dates when and the places where each of its features is trade shown, the names of the trade publications wherein notice of each trade showing was published, and the dates of publication, the name and location (by town and exchange district [40]) of each theatre in which each feature is licensed for exhibition, and the date of license thereof;

(2) As to each license entered into by it, the date thereof and the names and location (by town and exchange district [40]) of the theatres involved, the names of the parties thereto and of the distributor's sales representative who negotiated the license, and the names of the features licensed for exhibition;

[40] See footnote 5 of Section III.

(3) All arbitration awards rendered against the distributor with a statement showing what the distributor has done to comply therewith.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this Section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

XIX

Except as otherwise expressly and specifically provided in this decree, nothing herein shall be construed to limit the right of any distributor defendant to select its own customers, to bargain with them in accordance with law, or to negotiate with or to license to or to accept any offer from any exhibitor to license its motion pictures or any number thereof upon such terms and conditions as it deems advisable or to its best interests.

XX

The provisions of Section III, of subdivision (a) of Section IV, of Section V and of Section X of this decree shall have application only with respect to features released in the United States after August 31, 1941.

XXI

Petitioner, by its counsel, has represented to the Court that the public interest requires that the provisions of this decree shall operate for a trial period of three years from the date of entry hereof. Petitioner has further represented to the Court, and each of the consenting defendants has consented to the entry of this decree upon the condition, that Petitioner will not, for a period of three years after the entry of this decree, either in this action or any other action or proceeding against any such defendant seek either the relief or any thereof prayed in paragraphs (4), (5) and (6) of Section VIII of the Petition filed herein July 20, 1938, or in paragraph (5), (6), and (7) of Section VIII of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint filed herein November 14, 1940, or otherwise seek to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition; or to dissolve any such defendant or any corporation in which any such defendant has, directly or indirectly, a substantial stock interest and which is engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures or holds directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest in any corporation so engaged, or to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres of any such defendant or of any such corporation, or to require any such defendant, corporation or circuit to divest itself of its interests or any thereof, direct or indirect, in motion pictures theatres in which it had an interest at the date of the entry of this decree.

XXII

1. The method and conditions of and the procedure for the arbitration of claims and controversies hereinbefore provided for in this decree, as well as the arbitration of claims and controversies provided for in any decree referring to this decree which may be entered by the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, in an action entitled "United States of America, Petitioner, against Balaban & Katz Corporation, et al., Defendants," modifying a consent decree entered in said action on April 6, 1932 and the arbitration of claims and controversies provided for in any decree referring to this decree which may be entered by the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, Central Division, in an action entitled "United States of America, Plaintiff, vs. West Coast Theatres, Incorporated, et al., Defendants," modifying a consent decree entered in said action on August 21, 1930, shall be as specified in this Section and in the Rules or Arbitration and Appeals which are provided for hereinafter.

2. An arbitration system for the arbitration of claims and controversies referred to in this decree shall be administered by an impartial Administrator.

The Administrator shall establish and maintain an Arbitration Tribunal in each city in the United States in which three or more of the distributor defendants shall maintain exchanges.

The Administrator shall establish and maintain a panel of not less than ten arbitrators for each Arbitration Tribunal and shall establish and maintain suitable offices and personnel, including a clerk, for each Arbitration Tribunal and for the Appeal Board provided for hereinafter. The Administrator shall have the power to appoint and remove members of the panels and personnel.

3. No person shall be appointed a member of any panel of arbitrators who has any financial interest in, or has or has had any connection with, the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, or has or has had any interest in any motion picture theatre as landlord, lessor, or otherwise.

4. The American Arbitration Association is appointed Administrator of the arbitration system under this decree, and is authorized and directed to perform the duties and functions of such Administrator until further order of the Court.

Any successor to the American Arbitration Association as Administrator shall be appointed by the Court on the joint application and recommendation of the Petitioner and of a majority of the distributor defendants, except that if the Petitioner and a majority of the distributor defendants fail to join in making such application and recommendation the successor Administrator shall be appointed by the Court.

5. There shall be a Budget Committee consisting of three members, one of whom shall be appointed by the Administrator, one of whom shall be appointed by the distributor defendants, and one of whom shall be the Chairman of the Appeal Board. The Budget Committee shall budget the cost of the maintenance and operation of the arbitration system. Such budget for the first twelve months of the operation of the arbitration system shall not exceed four hundred ninety thousand dollars ($490,000.00), except with the consent of a majority of the distributor defendants. The budget for each succeeding twelve months period shall not exceed four hundred sixty-five thousand dollars ($465,000.00), except with the consent of a majority of the distributor defendants, provided, however, that the Court may, on the application of the Petitioner, and for good cause shown, order an increase in the budget for any year in such amount, not exceeding fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00), as it may find necessary for the effective operation of the arbitration system.

6. Each arbitrator shall be selected and each arbitration proceeding shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals which are filed herewith and are hereby approved. Such Rules may be amended or added to from time to time by the Administrator with the approval of a majority of the Appeal Board upon notice to the Petitioner and to the distributor defendants of such proposed amendments or additions and an opportunity for a hearing thereon. No amendment of or addition to such Rules shall change the qualifications of arbitrators as set forth in Rule II of such Rules or deny to any exhibitor or distributor defendant the right to intervene as a party in any proceeding by which it may be affected or deny to any party to an arbitration proceeding the right: to receive notice of all proceedings therein; to participate in the selection of arbitrators; to challenge the qualifications of arbitrators; to be represented by counsel or otherwise; to secure the production of witnesses and of evidence; to examine and cross-examine all witnesses; and to appeal to the Appeal Board from any adverse award. The Rules may provide for the arbitration of claims and controversies between distributor defendants and exhibitors other than claims or controversies referred to in subdivision 1 of this Section which by agreement between the parties thereto shall be submitted to the tribunals.

7. There shall be an Appeal Board which shall have jurisdiction to determine appeals from awards made by the Arbitration Tribunals. It shall consist of three members appointed by the Court, each of whom shall be a person of known impartiality and distinction. Each such member shall be appointed for a term of three years and shall serve during such term unless he shall be removed by order of the Court or shall resign. Each member of the Appeal Board shall be eligible for reappointment.

If any member of the Appeal Board is disqualified from passing upon any appeal, or is temporarily unable because of illness, absence or other cause to act as a member of the Appeal Board, the Court may on application of one or more members of the Appeal Board appoint another person of known impartiality and distinction to act as a temporary member of the Appeal Board in place of the member so disqualified or unable to act. The compensation of such temporary member shall be fixed by the Court.

One member of the Appeal Board shall be designated by the Court as the Chairman of the Board.

The members of the Appeal Board shall be compensated on an annual basis. The Chairman of the Board shall be paid twenty thousand dollars ($20,000.00) per annum, and each of the other members of the Board shall be paid seventeen thousand five hundred dollars ($17,500.00) per annum.

The Appeal Board shall have its offices in New York, New York.

8. The expenses of the arbitration system shall be paid out of a fund administered by the Administrator. Such fund shall be established and maintained: by filing fees provided for by the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals; by penalties imposed in accordance with the provisions of Sections IV and V of this decree, and by such additional amounts, to be paid by the distributor defendants, as may be determined by the Budget Committee from time to time to be necessary. Such amounts shall be assessed by the Administrator to and shall be paid by the several distributor defendants in amounts proportionate to their respective gross receipts from licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States. The proportionate gross receipts of such defendants during the 1939–40 motion picture season shall be used in determining the amount to be paid by each such defendant for the expenses of establishing the arbitration system and of maintaining it during the first twelve months of its operation. Thereafter the gross receipts for the motion picture season ending on the August 31st immediately preceding the start of the particular twelve months' period shall be used in determining such amounts.

Each distributor defendant shall inform the Administrator promptly after the end of each motion picture season of its total gross receipts during such motion picture season from licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States. Such information shall be treated by the Administrator as confidential and shall not be divulged except as required by l[illegible]

9. Any person who has the right to institute an arbitration proceeding under any provision of this decree or of any other decree referred to in subdivision 1 of this Section may institute and prosecute such proceeding in the manner and subject to the conditions specified in the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals, upon the condition that such person file with the Clerk of the Arbitration Tribunal a submission, in the form and executed in the manner prescribed by the Administrator, which shall provide in substance that such complaint submits the controversy to arbitration and undertakes to abide by and to comply fully with whatever final award may be entered therein.

Any exhibitor or distributor who intervenes as a party in any arbitration proceeding as provided in the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals, shall file with the Clerk of the Arbitration Tribunal a submission, in the form and executed in the manner prescribed by the Administrator, which shall provide, in substance, that such intervenor submits to the arbitration and undertakes to abide by and to accept whatever final award may be entered therein.

Representatives of the Department of Justice, duly authorized in writing, shall be permitted reasonable access during regular office hours to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of the Appeal Board, of the Arbitration Tribunal, and of the Administrator, which relate to the arbitration system and to the arbitration of claims and controversies under this decree.

XXIII

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of:

(a) Enabling any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time for such orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this decree, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof;

(b) Enabling any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time for a modification of this decree in order to conform it to any Act of Congress enacted after the entry of this decree;

(c) Enabling any consenting defendant to make any application to the Court referred to in any provision of this decree;

(d) Enabling any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of this decree for any modification thereof;

(e) Enabling any consenting defendant to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of this decree, to vacate this decree, or any modification thereof, or to vacate or modify any provision thereof, on the ground that under the economic or competitive conditions existing at the time of such application, this decree or any modification thereof, or any provision thereof, is inappropriate or unnecessary, or oppressive or unduly burdensome, regardless of whether or not such economic or competitive conditions are new or unforeseen. The right of each consenting defendant to make any such application and to obtain such relief is expressly reserved by them and is hereby expressly granted.

Whenever obligations or prohibitions are imposed upon the defendants by the laws of any State or by rules or regulations made pursuant thereto, with which the defendants by law must comply, the Court, upon application of the defendants, or any of them, shall from time to time enter orders relieving the defendants from compliance with any requirement of this decree in conflict with such laws, rules or regulations, and the right of the defendants to make such applications and to obtain such relief is expressly granted.

Any application by any party to this decree under the provisions of this Section shall be made in open court upon notice to all of the other parties to this decree, and each such party, upon such application, shall have the right and privilege of requiring the production of witnesses upon whose testimony such application is sought or opposed, and of examining and cross-examining such witnesses in accordance with the rules of the Court.

Dated November 20th, 1940.

RULES OF ARBITRATION AND APPEALS PURSUANT TO SUBDIVISION 6 OF SECTION XXII OF THE DECREE IN THE ABOVE ENTITLED ACTION

I. Initiation of arbitration

An arbitration proceeding shall be initiated by filing with the Clerk of the Tribunal having jurisdiction of the controversy a Demand for Arbitration and a submission as provided in subdivision 9 of Section XXII of the Decree, and by paying a filing fee of $10.00 to the Clerk of the Tribunal.

Filed herewith and made a part of these Rules is a map[1] showing the territory throughout which each Arbitration Tribunal shall have jurisdiction (each of which territories is hereinafter called an Arbitration District), and the city in each such Arbitration District in which the Arbitration Tribunal shall be located. The Tribunal having jurisdiction in a particular proceeding shall be the Tribunal maintained pursuant to Section XXII of the Decree in the Arbitration District in which the complainant's theatre is located, except that when a distributor institutes an arbitration proceeding the Tribunal having jurisdiction shall be the Tribunal in the Arbitration District in which the theatre involved is located.

The Demand for Arbitration shall be signed by the complainant and shall set forth:

The name and address of the complaining party; the name and address of each theatre involved in the controversy; the name and address of each exhibitor or distributor against whom complaint is made (hereafter sometimes referred to as a defending party); the name and address of each other exhibitor and distributor whose business or property it is believed by the complainant may be affected by an award in the proceeding; and a brief statement in simple language of the claim and the relief sought.

At the time of filing the Demand the complainant shall deliver to the Clerk of the Tribunal sufficient copies of the Demand to enable the Clerk to deliver one copy to each defending party and to each other exhibitor and distributor named in the Demand, and the Clerk shall forthwith make such delivery.

Within seven days after the date on which the Clerk of the Tribunal delivers a copy of the Demand to a defending party, such party may sign and file with the Clerk of the Tribunal a list giving the name and address of each exhibitor or distributor not named in the Demand whose business or property it is believed by such party may be affected by an award in the proceeding.

[1] Not printed herein.

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith deliver a copy of the Demand to each exhibitor and distributor named in any list filed by a defending party.

Any exhibitor or distributor named either in the Demand or in any list filed by any defending party and any other exhibitor or distributor whose business or property may be affected by an award in the proceeding may, at any time prior to the commencement of the first hearing, intervene and thereby become a party to the proceeding by filing with the Clerk of the Tribunal a statement which shall set forth his interest as an intervenor in the proceeding and a submission as provided in subdivision 9 of Section XXII of the Decree and by paying a filing fee of $10.00 to the Clerk of the Tribunal. The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith deliver notice of each intervention to each other party to the proceeding.

Any party who intervenes more than fifteen days after the filing of the Demand shall not be entitled to participate in the selection of the arbitrator.

If, at any time after the fifteenth day following the filing of the Demand and prior to the appointment of an arbitrator, all parties to a proceeding who became parties, by intervention or otherwise, on or before said fifteenth day shall by written agreement select another Tribunal as the Tribunal having jurisdiction and file such agreement with the Clerk of the Tribunal originally having jurisdiction, jurisdiction of the proceeding shall thereby be transferred to the Tribunal so selected. Thereafter no further proceedings shall be had in the Tribunal originally having jurisdiction except that the Clerk thereof shall forthwith deliver notice of such transfer to the American Arbitration Association and shall forthwith deliver the entire file in such proceeding to the Clerk of the Tribunal so selected, who shall forthwith take the action prescribed in Rule III for the appointment of an Arbitrator from the Panel of Arbitrators for his Tribunal.

II. QUALIFICATIONS OF ARBITRATORS

No person shall be appointed a member of a Panel of Arbitrators established in accordance with the Decree who has any financial interest in, or has or has had any connection with, the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, or has or has had any interest in any motion picture theatre, as landlord, lessor or otherwise.

No member of a Panel shall serve as an arbitrator in any proceeding if he has or has had any financial or other relations with any party to the proceeding, or has any interest in the result of the proceeding, or has any personal bias which might prejudice the right of any party to a fair and impartial award.

III. APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATORS

Not less than fifteen nor more than seventeen days after the filing of the Demand in accordance with Rule I, the Clerk of the Tribunal shall deliver to each party an identical list of arbitrators selected from the Panel of Arbitrators, for the purpose of enabling the parties to indicate thereon their preference of arbitrators. If the Clerk of the Tribunal does not receive the list from any party within seven days after the delivery of the list to such party, all the names on such list shall be deemed acceptable to such party.

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith appoint an arbitrator from the names indicated as acceptable to all parties. In the event no name appears from the lists to be acceptable to all parties, or that none of those shown to be acceptable is available, the American Arbitration Association shall appoint an arbitrator from the remaining members of the Panel.

Not less than sixteen days after the filing of the Demand and prior to the appointment of an arbitrator (or in the case of an arbitration of a controversy under either Section IV or Section VII of the Decree, at any time prior to the appointment of an arbitrator), the parties to any controversy may by written agreement unanimously appoint one or more arbitrators from the Panel of Arbitrators to arbitrate such controversy, by filing such agreement with the Clerk of the Tribunal.

No irregularity in the appointment of an arbitrator shall affect the validity of the proceeding or of the award.

Notice of appointment shall forthwith be given to the arbitrator by the Clerk of the Tribunal, and a signed acceptance obtained.

IV. REMOVAL OF ARBITRATOR AND FILLING OF VACANCY

Upon written application of any party prior to the date the arbitrator's award becomes final, the American Arbitration Association shall, upon proof satisfactory to it that an arbitrator is disqualified under Rule II, revoke the appointment of such arbitrator and declare the office vacant and the award, if any, vacated. No such action shall be taken by the American Arbitration Association in any case where an award has been made unless the applicant party shall have given five days' notice of its application to all other parties. Unless application for disqualification is made immediately following a party's discovery of the reason therefor, such party shall be deemed to have waived such disqualification.

The American Arbitration Association also may revoke the appointment of an arbitrator at any time by reason of his neglect, refusal or failure to perform the duties of his office.

If the appointment of an arbitrator is revoked, or if by reason of resignation, death or illness an arbitrator is unable to perform the duties of his office, a new arbitrator shall forthwith be appointed by the Clerk of the Tribunal from among the names acceptable to the parties or by the American Arbitration Association, in accordance with the second paragraph of Rule III.

V. HEARINGS

Hearings shall be held at the office of the Arbitration Tribunal having jurisdiction of the controversy involved or at such other place in the same Arbitration District as may be agreed upon by the parties with the consent of the arbitrator.

Hearings shall commence as promptly as possible after the appointment of the arbitrator.

The arbitrator shall fix the time of the beginning of the hearing and may adjourn the hearing from time to time.

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall deliver to the parties written notice of the name of the arbitrator and of the time and place of the beginning of the hearing at least five days prior thereto, unless such notice is waived by the parties.

VI. PROCEDURE AT HEARINGS

The arbitrator shall take the oath of office in the form prescribed by the Administrator before commencing the hearing.

Parties may be represented by counsel or by others.

Each party shall have the right to examine or cross-examine all witnesses.

Witnesses shall testify under oath or its legal equivalent.

Evidence shall be received only at hearings of which all parties shall have had due notice and the arbitrator in making his award shall consider only evidence so received and such inspections as he may make hereunder.

The arbitrator shall have power to require any party to produce such records or documents as the arbitrator may deem necessary to a proper determination of the controversy. In lieu of producing or offering original records or documents, any party may, with the approval of the arbitrator, produce or offer sworn copies thereof or sworn excerpts of the relevant or material portions thereof. If any party challenges the authenticity, correctness or adequacy of such documents or excerpts, the arbitrator shall determine such authenticity, correctness or adequacy. All exhibits offered in evidence shall be numbered and so marked as to indicate whether or not they were received.

The arbitrator shall be the judge of the relevancy and materiality of the evidence offered and conformity to legal rules of evidence shall not be necessary.

Whenever the arbitrator deems it necessary he may make an inspection in connection with the subject matter of the controversy upon notice to the parties.

The arbitrator may hear argument and receive briefs.

VII. CLOSING AND REOPENING THE PROCEEDING

After all parties have indicated that they have no further evidence to offer, the arbitrator shall declare the proceeding closed.

Prior to the expiration of the time for making an award the arbitrator may reopen the proceeding upon his own initiative, or for good cause upon the written application of any party on five days notice to all other parties.

At any time within twenty days after the award has been filed the arbitrator may also reopen the proceeding for the purpose of correcting inadvertent errors in the award.

VIII. DEFAULTS AND WITHDRAWALS

If any party to a proceeding defaults by failure to comply with the fourth paragraph of Rule XI or withdraws from the proceeding after an arbitrator is appointed, the proceeding shall nevertheless continue to an award unless all other parties to the proceeding consent to a dismissal. A party who defaults or withdraws shall not be entitled to participate further in the proceeding but shall be bound by the award.

IX. POWERS OF ARBITRATORS

The arbitrator shall have the powers and shall perform the duties granted to and imposed upon him by the Decree and these Rules, and in making his award he shall comply with the Decree and these Rules.

X. AWARDS

The award shall be filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal within thirty days from the date of closing the proceeding, or from the date fixed by the arbitrator for the filing of briefs, whichever is later.

The award shall be specific, shall contain such findings as are required by the Decree and shall be signed by the arbitrator and acknowledged before a notary public or other officer duly authorized to administer oaths.

In his award the arbitrator shall assess costs against the losing party or parties or apportion them among the parties as he may deem proper. Costs shall be limited to the arbitrator's fee and the filing fees.

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith deliver a copy of the award and any corrected award to each party, with the date of filing endorsed thereon.

The award, or, if corrected, the corrected award, shall become final and binding upon the parties upon the expiration of the time for filing a notice of appeal therefrom, unless an appeal is taken in accordance with these Rules.

XI. ARBITRATOR'S FEES

The American Arbitration Association shall fix for each Arbitration District the per diem rate of the arbitrator's fee, which in no event shall exceed $50.00 per diem. The arbitrator shall be entitled to the per diem fee for each day or part thereof that he shall attend a hearing or make an inspection.

Any expenses incurred by an arbitrator in making inspections as provided in Rule VI, and in conducting hearings at other places than the Tribunal office as provided in Rule V, shall be borne equally by the parties.

No other compensation or expenses and no gratuities or benefits of any kind shall be paid to or conferred upon an arbitrator by any party.

Prior to the commencement of each day's hearing or inspection, each party to the proceeding shall deposit with the Clerk of the Tribunal a sum equal to the arbitrator's per diem fee. Failure to make such deposit shall constitute a default.

After the award is filed, the arbitrator shall be paid his fee out of the sums deposited by the parties to the proceeding. The Clerk of the Tribunal shall return any undisbursed sums to the parties entitled thereto upon the final disposition of the controversy.

XII. STENOGRAPHIC COST[1]

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall make the necessary arrangements for the taking of a stenographic record of the testimony when such a record is requested by one or more of the parties, who shall deposit the cost thereof with the Clerk of the Tribunal.

Any party desiring a transcript of the stenographic record of the hearing shall pay the cost thereof and in the event that such party did not pay the cost of taking the stenographic record it shall reimburse the other party or parties for the cost thereof.

XIII. EXTENSIONS OF TIME

The parties may in writing unanimously agree to extend the time specified in any of the foregoing Rules and, except as to Rule X, the arbitrator may extend such time upon the written application of any party upon five days notice to all other parties.

XIV. NOTICE OF APPEAL

Any party to a proceeding may appeal from an award by filing a notice of appeal with, and paying a filing fee of $25.00 to the Clerk of the Tribunal in which the award was made, not later than twenty days after the date of filing of the award or the corrected award. The clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith deliver a copy of the notice of appeal with the date of filing endorsed thereon to each party to the proceeding and to the Clerk of the Appeal Board.

[1] Under Rule XIV no appeal can be taken unless three copies of the transcript of the record or an abbreviation thereof are filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal.

The appellant shall have made at his own expense, and, within ten days after filing the notice of appeal, shall file with the Clerk of the Tribunal in which the award was made, three copies of the transcript of the stenographic record of the hearing or such abbreviation thereof as may be agreed upon by the parties.

XV. RECORD ON APPEAL

Upon receipt of the three copies of the transcript or an agreed abbreviation thereof filed by the appellant the Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith prepare the record on appeal which shall consist of the following:

1. The Demand for Arbitration and the submission.
2. Statements and submissions of intervening parties.
3. Notice of appointment and signed acceptance of the arbitrator.
4. Clerk's record of hearing.
5. Three copies of the transcript of the stenographic record of hearing or such abbreviation thereof as may have been agreed upon by the parties.
6. Exhibits received in evidence and exhibits offered but not received in evidence, except such as may be omitted by stipulation of the parties.
7. The award.

Unless otherwise directed by the Appeal Board, the record on appeal shall remain on file in the Tribunal until the expiration of the time for filing of all briefs as provided in Rule XVI.

Immediately upon the expiration of such time the Clerk of the Tribunal shall transmit the record on appeal to the Clerk of the Appeal Board.

XVI. PROCEEDINGS ON APPEAL

Within thirty days after the filing of the notice of appeal, each party shall deliver a copy of his brief on appeal to every other party and file with the Clerk of the Appeal Board six copies of such brief with proof of delivery of a copy thereof to each other party.

Within forty days after the filing of the notice of appeal, each party shall deliver a copy of any answering brief to each other party and file with the Clerk of the Appeal Board six copies of such brief with proof of delivery of a copy thereof to each other party.

Upon the written agreement of all parties the Appeal Board shall, and upon its own initiative may, order oral argument. At any time not later than five days after the expiration of the time for filing answering briefs any party may apply to the Appeal Board for permission to present oral argument. Such application shall be in writing, shall state the reasons therefor and shall be filed with the Clerk of the Appeal Board, together with proof of delivery of a copy thereof to each other party. Any objection to such application shall be made in writing and filed with the Clerk of the Appeal Board, together with proof of delivery of a copy thereof to each other party, within five days after the filing of the application. The ruling on such application shall be made by the Appeal Board forthwith after the expiration of the five-day period allowed for the filing of objections, and a copy of the ruling shall forthwith be delivered by the Clerk of the Appeal Board to all parties.

When the Appeal Board has ordered oral argument it shall fix the date thereof. The Clerk of the Appeal Board shall deliver to the parties notice in writing of the time and place of such argument, at least ten days prior thereto.

Oral arguments shall be heard by the Appeal Board only in New York, New York.

XVII. DECISION AND OPINION OF THE APPEAL BOARD.

All members of the Appeal Board shall pass on all appeals and, except as provided in Rule XIX, on all other matters, and the concurrence of two shall be necessary to a decision.

The decision of the Appeal Board together with an opinion stating the reasons therefor shall be in writing and signed by the members of the Appeal Board or a majority thereof. The decision shall be acknowledged before a notary public or other officer duly authorized to administer oaths. The decision and opinion shall be filed with the Clerk of the Appeal Board, who shall forthwith file a copy thereof with the Clerk of the Tribunal and shall forthwith deliver a copy thereof to each of the parties. The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith notify each of the parties of the date of filing with him.

The Appeal Board in its decision may affirm, modify, correct or reverse the award of the arbitrator, including provision for costs therein, or may remand the proceeding to the Tribunal for a rehearing or for further action in accordance with the decision of the Appeal Board.

The Appeal Board in its decision may assess the cost of the stenographic record and of the transcript thereof against the losing party or parties or apportion it among the parties, as it deems proper.

XVIII. PROCEEDINGS SUBSEQUENT TO DECISION OF APPEAL BOARD

Unless the Appeal Board remands the proceeding to the Tribunal or reopens the proceeding as hereinafter provided, the decision of the Appeal Board shall become the final award and shall become binding on all parties ten days after it is filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal.

When the Appeal Board remands a proceeding the arbitration shall thereupon proceed in accordance with the decision of the Appeal Board.

Within ten days after the decision of the Appeal Board has been filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal, the Appeal Board may reopen the proceeding for the purpose of correcting inadvertent errors. In such case the corrected decision shall be signed and acknowledged, and copies thereof shall be delivered and filed as provided in Rule XVII. Such corrected decision, unless it remands the proceeding to the Tribunal, shall become the final award and shall become binding on all parties when it is filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal, or ten days after the decision corrected thereby was filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal, whichever is later.

XIX. EXTENSION OF TIME

The parties may, by written agreement, extend the time specified in any of the Rules relating to appeals, and any member of the Appeal Board may do so upon the written application of any party made upon five days' notice to all other parties.

XX. SUBMISSION OF OTHER CONTROVERSIES

Controversies between exhibitors and distributors other than those referred to in subdivision 1 of Section XXII of the Decree may be submitted to the arbitration system by the parties thereto, provided:

a) At least one of the parties thereto is a distributor defendant as defined in the Decree; and

b) A submission in writing setting forth the controversy to be arbitrated is signed by all the parties thereto and filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal having jurisdiction.

These Rules in so far as they are applicable, shall apply to the arbitration of such controversies except as the submission may otherwise provide and except that no exhibitor or distributor may intervene therein.

XXI. ACCESS TO RECORDS

At no time shall access to the record of any proceeding or appeal be permitted to any person not a party, except that awards, decisions, and opinions may be made public.

XXII. DEFINITIONS

"Decree" means the Consent Decree dated November 20, 1940, entered in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York in an action entitled "United States of America v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al."

V. GOVERNMENT'S DIGESTS OF DECISIONS AND AWARDS UNDER THE CONSENT DECREE

A. Appeal Board Decisions

Ex. 1 (R. 276, 305-8). Appeal Board Decision No. 10, decided November 14, 1941:

A. Unfair practices.—Situation where a defendant has more than one theatre in a community—control over the playing time of other theatres.

B. Complainant.—Kogod and Buka, independent operators of Apex theatre in Washington, D. C.

C. Nature of complaint.—Unreasonable clearance given Warner theatres Calvert and Uptown over Apex by Loew: Section VIII of consent decree involved.

D. Decision.—Clearance unreasonable.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—The Appeal Board said:

> "Uptown and Calvert are both owned and operated by the same exhibitor. There is no clearance between them. Both theatres, so far as the existing contracts are concerned, enjoy the same run. The exhibitor, however, in practice exhibits pictures in one of these theatres before the other. At one time the pictures were shown in the Uptown first and then in the Calvert. They are now shown in the Calvert before being shown in the Uptown. At the will of the exhibitor they may at any time be again played at the Uptown first. The record shows that the Calvert plays very few of its pictures on, or immediately after, its availability date. It delays playing many of its pictures from ten to sixteen days after availability. Uptown plays many of its pictures on or ahead of its availability date. The actual playing dates, however, at Calvert and Uptown have been such as to prevent, under existing clearances, Apex from having pictures available for it to play until an unreasonably long time has elapsed after completion of the first run downtown. This is unfair to Apex and the existing clearances against it are unreasonable."

Ex. 1. Appeal Board Decision, No. 12, decided December 5, 1941:

A. Unfair practices.—Clearance given circuit operator to preserve its local monopoly—clearance imposed without written contract.

B. Complainant.—Esquire-Great Neck Corporation, operator of Squire Theatre at Great Neck, Long Island.

C. Nature of Complaint.—Unreasonable clearance imposed on Squire Theatre in favor of the Playhouse, a Skouras theatre, and the Little Neck Theatre, by Fox, Warner, Loew, Paramount, and RK.

D. Decision.—Unreasonable clearance reduced.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—The Appeal Board quotes from the arbitrator's decision as follows:

"So far as Great Neck is concerned, the Arbitrator is convinced, and, therefore, finds that the historical development of clearance has been based upon the desire of the Playhouse to exclude all competition from the town in which it enjoyed a monopoly for seventeen years.

Ex. 1. Appeal Board Decision No. 18, decided February 17, 1942:

A. Unfair practices.—One defendant's affiliate given 1st runs in all circuit towns—unreasonable clearance, even though not expressed in writing.

B. Complainant.—B. R. McLendon, operating the State and Texas Theatres in Atlanta, Texas.

C. Nature of complaint.—Unreasonable clearance given Paramount-Richards Theatres, Inc., Theatres in Texarkana by Fox, RKO, and Warner.

D. Decision.—Unreasonable clearance reduced from 28 days to 1 day.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—In this case RKO admitted that it gave the Texarkana theatres a 30-day clearance. The other defendants took the position that no clearance existed by agreement in favor of Texarkana over Atlanta and that there was nothing to arbitrate. Texarkana was found to be 28 miles from Atlanta. The Appeal Board found to the contrary and stated as follows:

"The only other contract in evidence is that between Paramount-Richards, Inc., and Fox, dated September 9, 1941. It covers only five features, but provides for their exhibition in fifty theatres in seventeen different cities and towns, including the Paramount and Strand Theatres in Texarkana. It provides that each theatre has first run, presumably in its respective community. There is no clearance against any of these theatres. On the face of the contract, therefore, all of these fifty theatres, including the two in Texarkana, are entitled to play on exchange release date.

"The contract situation affecting Texarkana and Atlanta is, then, that Texarkana is entitled to play pictures on exchange-release date, while Atlanta must wait at least forty-five days after exchange-release date before it can play. In practice the actual clearance of Texarkana over Atlanta is the number of days which elapse between the end of the run of a picture in Texarkana and forty-five days after the picture was released by the exchange. Inasmuch as the distributor is not required to give Atlanta the picture until the expiration of sixty days, the period of waiting time may be even longer. To hold upon such a state of facts that Texarkana has no clearance over Atlanta which can be arbitrated under Section VIII, would be highly technical and would in our opinion tend to nullify the purpose of Section VIII.

"Complainant opened his first theatre in Atlanta in 1935. For some two years he was not subjected to any clearance, nor was there any availability clause in his contracts. Later on Texarkana was granted a thirty-day clearance over Atlanta. Then, as a result of an antitrust suit commenced by complainant, the availability clause, heretofore quoted, was inserted in his contracts. Vitagraph claims that this clause has been eliminated from its contracts with complainant and that this proceeding should therefore be dismissed as to it. But its 1940–41 contract with complainant included this clause and that contract had not been completed when the demand for arbitration was filed. Furthermore, on the hearing Vitagraph's representative refused to stipulate that the clause would not be reinstated in future contracts. Vitagraph is a proper party."

Ex. 2 (R. 276, 305–8). Appeal Board Decision No. 24, decided May 4, 1942:

A. Unfair practices.—Changing availability after affiliated theatre comes into hands of independent—unreasonable clearance.

B. Complainant.—Dipson Theatres, Inc., operating the Bailey Theatre in Buffalo, New York.

C. Nature of complaint.—While the Kensington and Bailey theatres were operated by affiliated interests the two theatres had the same availability. After acquisition of the Bailey by the complainant, the Kensington, for the most part was given not only a prior run but also clearance over the Bailey. Complaint against Fox, R. K. O., Loew, Paramount, and Warner.

D. Decision.—Complaint dismissed as to Loew and Paramount because of their interest in the Kensington. Clearance reduced.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's Opinion.—"Subdivision 7 of Section VIII requires an Arbitrator to disregard the fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres. This means, as counsel for producers have often stated in their briefs, that the theatres involved in these clearance cases should be judged on their merits as theatres and not otherwise. This just and salutary rule should be equally applicable to the producers themselves. Applying that test, the Bailey theatre is fairly entitled to the same treatment accorded to it by these defendants prior to its acquisition by the complainant. By reason of this change of ownership only, the defendants, with the exception of Vitagraph, have attempted to deprive the Bailey theatre of the run and playing position which it had held for many years. This is an obvious injustice."

Ex. 2. Appeal Board Decision No. 27, decided June 22, 1942:

A. Unfair practices.—Domination of exhibition in metropolitan area by one defendant-system of distribution in area originated by a defendant producer-exhibitor acquiesced in by other defendants; unreasonable clearance over independent theatre; defendant producer-exhibitor favoring own theatre over theatre which is its customer.

B. Complainant.—Dickinson, Inc., operating Dickinson Theatre in Mission Township outside of Kansas City, Mo.

C. Nature of complaint.—Unreasonable clearance given affiliated theatres in Kansas City by Loew, Fox, RKO, Paramount, and Warner.

D. Decision.—Unreasonable clearance reduced as to Plaza Theatre and eliminated as to 4 other theatres. Clearance of 56 days after first run reduced to 14 days.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—The Appeal Board said:

"The intervenor, Fox Kansas City Corporation, operates some fifteen theatres in Kansas City, Missouri. It is an affiliate of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation within the meaning of Section XVII of the Decree. The record shows that Fox and this affiliate have been the dominating factors in the distribution of pictures in Kansas City proper and to a lesser extent in the suburban area. The system of distribution, originated in 1935 by Fox, was acquiesced in by the other distributors.

"There are five large, high class, first run theatres in Kansas City, Missouri, each owned and operated by an affiliate of one of the defendants. * * *

"The system under which pictures are exhibited in Kansas City, Missouri, and in neighboring areas comprising what is known as Greater Kansas City, is one fixed by 'availabilities' after the first run downtown theatres. Specific clearances are not granted to theatres having availabilities after first run nor are specific clearances fixed between subsequent run theatres. * * *

"The Kansas City system of distribution, based on availabilities after first run downtown, is similar to the systems prevailing in Columbus, Oakland and Chicago, where the Board has held that the actual clearance of a prior run theatre over a subsequent run theatre is the number of days elapsing between the last showing of a picture at a prior run theatre and the time when that picture becomes available to a subsequent run theatre. * * *"

The Appeal Board held that no clearance was justified in favor of the Isis, Waldo, Brookside, and Waldo over the Dickinson.

All the distributor defendants except Vitagraph challenged the authority of the arbitrator to make any award affecting the clearance granted by them to theatres with which they were affiliated and the Appeal Board reversed the arbitrator's denial of their motion.

Ex. 2. Appeal Board Decision No. 35, decided August 21, 1942:

A. Unfair practices.—Withholding pictures from an independent who was building a theatre in order to give them to a circuit which made plans to build in some vicinity after the independent's plans were projected.

B. Complainant.—Lakeview Theatres, Inc., operating the Lakeview Theatre in Lakeview, a suburb of New Orleans.

C. Nature of complaint.—Paramount and RKO and Warner's reserving first run for a theatre of a circuit built after complainant's theatre was opened. Section VI complaint.

D. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—It appeared that Lakeview Theatres, Inc., was organized in July 1941, construction was begun on September 10, and was opened January 28, 1942. In July, first suburban run was requested from the defendants for the theatre and all except Warner replied indicating a willingness to negotiate.

By September 1941 the United Theatres, Inc., a circuit, was planning to build a theatre near the Lakeview. In the fall of 1941 the complainant was informed by RKO and Warner that it could not have suburban first run and RKO and Warner licensed their films to the United Theatres, Inc., for a theatre not yet in operation. The United Theatre did not open until after the Lakeview theatre was opened. Complainant negotiated with Paramount for first suburban run and while involved in a dispute as to terms Paramount home office negotiated a contract with United Theatres licensing certain films on first suburban run to any theatre which United Theatres might construct in Lakeview. This provision was included in an agreement which covered all the theatres owned by United Theatres, Inc.

"The apparent purpose of the defendants was to require complainant to await the opening of the theatre to be operated by United Theatres, Inc., before exhibiting defendant's films on any run. The terms and conditions of the offers were, as to each of the defendants, calculated to defeat the purpose of Section VI. Each offer imposed a limitation upon the license offered to the complainant which was essentially unjust and unreasonable. Standing alone in its area, as the Lakeview did at this time, it was entitled to a first run in that area. For a first run alone was possible under such circumstances.

"The offer of old films from the 1940–41 season was not a compliance with Section VI."

Ex. 2. Appeal Board Decision No. 40, decided October 5, 1942:

A. Unfair practices.—Inability of an independent exhibitor to secure pictures from defendants on reasonable terms because of defendants' dealings with his circuit opposition—fixing of admission prices to benefit circuit theatre.

B. Complainant.—Louis M. Sosna operating the Sosna Theatre in Mexico, Mo.

C. Nature of complaint.—Refusal of Fox, RKO, Warner, and Paramount to negotiate with Sosna for 1st or 2d run, or for any run on reasonable terms.

D. Decision.—Defendants directed to offer pictures on a run on terms consistent with Section VI of the decree.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—

"In July 1941, Sosna wrote to the defendants asking for an opportunity to negotiate for first run in Mexico on their pictures for the 1941–42 season. Receiving no favorable reply, he wrote again in August 1941, asking for an opportunity to negotiate for second run. Vitagraph did not reply. Paramount and Fox replied that they were negotiating with the Frisina circuit for second run. RKO offered to sell its pictures to the Sosna on third run.

"The Arbitrator found that prior to the filing of the complaint Vitagraph had refused to offer its pictures to Sosna on any run despite repeated requests by him for some run. After the complaint was filed Vitagraph offered Sosna a second run on every other block of five pictures, pictures to become available ninety days after the conclusion of first run. The Arbitrator found that this offer—assuming it could be considered—failed to satisfy the requirements of Section VI inasmuch as it was contrary to the purpose of that Section to reserve half of second run for the Frisina circuit which, having opportunity over six months to buy it, had failed to do so.

"In September 1941, Paramount offered the Sosna pictures of the 1939–40 and 1940–41 seasons on third run, thirty days after second run, at prices which Sosna admitted to be fair. The offer was conditioned on Sosna's agreeing to charge a minimum adult admission price of fifteen cents. There is evidence that Paramount pictures are played first run in Mexico at an adult admission price of fifteen cents, and fifteen cents is the minimum required by Paramount's contracts with the Liberty and Rex. To require a third run theatre to charge the same admission price as the price at which Paramount's pictures are shown first run seems unreasonable. Even Fox and RKO, which have shown little disposition to deal with complainant, are willing to allow Sosna to charge a minimum admission of ten cents. Whether thirty days clearance between second and third run in Mexico is reasonable depends, as we have said, on facts which are not in evidence. Furthermore, the only uncontroverted offer which Paramount has made to Sosna is an offer of pictures of the 1939–40 and 1940–41 seasons. The requirement that distributors offer their pictures on some run on terms and conditions not calculated to defeat the purpose of Section VI refers, in the absence of particular specification, to current pictures. Although pictures released late in the 1940–41 season would in September 1941 be current pictures for a third run theatre, the evidence discloses only that a 'selection' of 1940–41 pictures was offered to complainant.

"In February 1942, RKO offered the Sosna a third run on pictures of the 1938 through 1941 seasons, some of which had not been shown on second run, and third run on three groups of five pictures of the 1941–42 season. At this time, and through the time of the hearing, RKO had not sold a second run in Mexico, and there was no evidence that anyone but Sosna wanted to buy it. RKO's branch manager testified, nevertheless, that he would not offer second run to the Sosna until an attempt to sell it to Frisina had failed. It appears that RKO requires second run in Mexico to play ninety days after first run and third run sixty days after second run. Whether considered as a refusal to offer the Sosna the earliest run for which there was no other interested customer, or as an offer of pictures to be played after 150 days clearance in favor of the first run theatre, the offer appears to be unreasonable.

"The defendants have shown little disposition to meet the complainant half way in negotiation; and they have apparently proceeded during the hearing upon the plan of disclosing as few facts as possible with respect to the various factors which we pointed out in complainant's first appeal should be put in evidence in a case under Section VI. Proof of many of these factors is in the possession or control of the defendants alone, yet little of it can be found in the record. It is necessary that it be produced. It is not clear whether the Liberty or the Rex is the first run theatre or whether they share first run. There is no proof of the availability of the Liberty and the Rex; or whether they habitually play on availability; or the rental fees charged them; or the revenue they bring to the defendants."

RKO, Fox, Paramount, and Warners were directed to offer their pictures for exhibition in the Sosna theatre on a run on the terms of conditions not calculated to defeat the purpose of Section VI.

Ex. 3 (R. 276, 305–8). Appeal Board Decision No. 52, decided February 1, 1943:

A. Unfair practices.—Unreasonable clearance given defendants' theatres—excuse of unavailability of prints.

B. Complainant.—J. N. Bills, operating the Bountiful Theatre at Bountiful, Utah.

C. Nature of complaint.—1st run theatres of a Paramount affiliate given a clearance of 60 to 67 days over complainant's theatre by RKO, Paramount, Warner, Loew, and Fox.

D. Decision.—Clearance unreasonable; reduction to 21 days maximum after the Centre, Utah, Studio, and Rialto theatres, and from 28 days to 14 days after the Capitol and Victory. Complaint dismissed as to Paramount under Section XVII of the Decree.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—

"The Salt Lake City downtown first run theatres are the Centre, Capitol, and Victory operated by Intermountain, the Utah and Studio operated by Saltmount, and the Paramount (also known as Uptown) operated by one Lawrence, who also operates the theatres of the complaining intervenors. The Rialto, also operated by Lawrence, has the privilege of first run on RKO pictures. The Victory is not exclusively first run, but shows some pictures on second or subsequent run. The Studio is not an initial first run theatre, but is used as a 'move-over' house to continue first runs commenced at the Utah or the Centre, the continued exhibition at the Studio after the move-over being properly considered as still first run. With the exception of the Paramount and Rialto these first run theatres have enjoyed a clearance over the complainant and over the complaining intervenors of sixty or in some instances sixty-seven days.

"Clearance as long as sixty days in favor of first run city theatres is abnormal. Forty-five days, and even thirty-eight days, is more than has usually been deemed reasonable in metropolitan areas for protection of first run theatres against either second run houses downtown or first run neighborhood or suburban theatres. The defendants emphasize the wide expanse of the Salt Lake City exchange district, and argue that the great distances which each print must travel between exhibitions make longer clearances appropriate and diminish the probability that shortening the clearance will hasten the showing of a picture at a particular theatre. But the competition on which clearance is based is competition for the patronage of customers, and is not governed by the availability of prints."

Ex. 3. Appeal Board Decision No. 58, decided March 11, 1943:

A. Unfair practices.—Independent exhibitor refused a reasonable run or reasonable clearance in order to favor a circuit theatre. Ineffectiveness of consent decree.

B. Complainant.—Lakeview Theatres, Inc., operating the Lakeview Theatre in Lakeview, a suburb of New Orleans.

C. Nature of complaint.—Paramount, RKO, and Warner refused to sell the Lakeview a run ahead of the Beacon, although the Beacon, a circuit theatre was not opened until after the Lakeview.

D. Decision.—Defendants should offer pictures to complainant on a run and on terms not inconsistent with Section VI of the decree, and a clearance of 60 or 30 days as proposed by Warner and RKO, respectively, would be unreasonable.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's decision.—

"That the complainant has received less than fair dealing at the hands of these distributors, the Board does not question. This was sufficiently indicated in our prior opinion. The statement in that opinion last quoted we have reconsidered, to see whether, within the limits of the Decree, a basis can be found for affording complainant relief which the facts seem to warrant. We are compelled again to conclude that it is not within our power to do so. Section VI, by its terms, expressly reserves to the distributors the right to determine the run which shall be offered to an exhibitor.

"We are constrained to do likewise in the present case. The present distribution of pictures between the two theatres, which we have previously stated, sufficiently shows the apparent injustice which has been done to the complainant by the action of the defendant distributors. We are frank to say that a split of first run between these two theatres by these distributors seems entirely reasonable and appropriate under the circumstances, particularly as the Lakeview was the pioneer theatre in the neighborhood and is in every way equal, if not superior, to the Beacon."

Ex. 3. Appeal Board Decision No. 65, decided April 19, 1943:

A. Unfair practices.—In town where circuit has several theatres, independent theatre bound to follow all of circuit's theatres—clearance without written contract.

B. Complainant.—W. V. Adwell, operating the Roxy Theatre in San Angelo, Texas.

C. Nature of complaint.—Inability of independent operator to get a run from Warner, Fox, Paramount, and Metro until all theatres of a circuit played the pictures, including a circuit theatre opened later than complainant's theatre.

D. Decision.—Current pictures should be offered complainant on some run and an offer of availability of 150 days after 1st run would not comply with Section VI of the consent decree. Complaint dismissed as to Sections VIII and X of the Decree.

The Appeal Board found that all the other theatres in the city, seven in number, were operated by an affiliate of Robb and Rowley Circuit. The complainant sought a reasonable clearance and the right to prior runs over the Lyric theatre. The Appeal Board said:

"All of them, except the Lyric, have been operated by the Circuit for many years and there have been no theatres, other than the Circuit's theatres, in San Angelo for at least twenty-five years. On August 27, 1942, complainant, an independent operator, opened the Roxy theatre on Concho Street. On September 17, 1942, the Circuit opened the Lyric theatre also on Concho Street and almost directly opposite the Roxy and immediately adjoining the Ritz. The Lyric theatre building had originally been a theatre but for some sixteen years prior to 1942 had been used for other purposes."

The Appeal Board held that the complainant under section 10 must be dismissed because complainant theatre was not owned until August 27, 1942, and must be dismissed under section 8 because it did not appear from the record that any theatre in San Angelo had any specific contract clearance over the Roxy.

"The Ritz plays the better quality pictures third run. Prior to December 1942, it charged 28¢ when it played second run. In December 1942, the Circuit exchanged the policies of the Lyric and the Ritz. The Ritz's admission price was reduced to 22¢ and the Lyric's raised to 28¢. The Lyric became the second run theatre and the Ritz the third run theatre with respect to the better pictures.

"During the many years when the Circuit had no competition for its theatres in San Angelo, it would appear, although the record is very meagre, that pictures were played at its six theatres about as it saw fit, with very little attention, if any, paid to runs and clearances. There is, however, evidence that, in Texas cities similar to San Angelo runs are played on the following availability: Second run 60 days after first run; third run 90 days after first run; fourth run 120 days after first run; fifth run 150 days after first run, and sixth run 180 days after first run.

"We are unable to agree with the Arbitrator, however, that complainant is entitled to no relief. The situation in San Angelo is an extraordinary one. The Circuit operates seven theatres, and apparently desires to obtain runs for all, or as many as possible, of them ahead of the Roxy, notwithstanding the fact that two at least of its theatres charge admission prices substantially less than the twenty-two cents charged by the Roxy. So far complainant has been unable to license from any defendant any of the current 1942–43 releases, although there is evidence that, in the case of at least one defendant first and second run on some current product had been licensed in San Angelo and the pictures had been exhibited in one or more of the Circuit's theatres prior to the date of the hearing. The excuse given by this defendant for not negotiating with complainant for a subsequent run on current pictures, although at the date of the hearing on January 11, 1943, some four months had elapsed since some current product had been trade shown, was that it had been unable up to that date to come to terms with the Circuit on third and fourth runs. Such a long delay is clearly unreasonable, and the excuse given for it is no justification for refusing to negotiate with complainant for some run."

Ex. 3. Appeal Board Decision No. 67, decided April 29, 1943.

A. Unfair practices.—Theatre subjected to an unreasonable clearance given 3 circuit theatres differing considerably in revenue returns to distributors.

B. Complainant.—Smalley Theatres, Inc., operating the Smalley Theatre in Johnstown, New York.

C. Nature of complaint.—Unreasonable clearance given to Schine Circuit theatres, the Glove and Hippodrome in Gloversville over Smalley Theatre in Johnstown, by Paramount, Fox, RKO, and Warner.

D. Decision.—The Appeal Board found that a clearance of 30 days was unreasonable with respect to the Glove theatre and with respect to the Hippodrome. It found that the Glove and Hippodrome although given the same clearance were distinctly different in revenue possibilities and held that the clearance of the Glove should be reduced to 21 days and the clearance of the Hippodrome to 14 days.

Ex. 3. Appeal Board Decision No. 68, decided May 10, 1943:

A. Unfair practices.—Independent theatre subject to same clearance in favor of two affiliated theatres, differing in revenue returns to distributors—ineffectiveness of decree.

B. Complainant.—Samuel Hochberg operating the Savoy Theatre in Bloomfield, New Jersey.

C. Nature of complaint.—Warner, Fox, Paramount, RKO, and Loew gave Warner affiliated theatres, the Royal and Broadmoor, an unreasonable clearance of 14 days over the Savoy.

D. Decision.—Clearance of Royal unaffected. Clearance of Broadmoor reduced to 7 days, as to Fox, Paramount, Loew, and RKO pictures.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—Appeal Board found that there was sufficient affiliation for Warner to be dismissed from the suit. The Appeal Board found that the Broadmoor was playing the poorer pictures and was not entitled to as much protection over the Savoy as the Royal. The Appeal Board found that there was some competition between the Broadmoor and the Savoy and in such situation the arbitrator could not abolish clearance entirely.

Ex. 3. Appeal Board Decision No. 70, decided May 20, 1943:

A. Unfair practices.—Use by defendants of restrictive admission prices, unreasonable clearances, and late runs to favor circuit theatres.

B. Complainant.—Louis M. Sosna, operating the Sosna Theatre in Mexico, Missouri.

C. Nature of complaint.—Warner, RKO, Fox, and Paramount refused to negotiate with Sosna except on unreasonable terms.

D. Decision.—RKO, Fox, and Paramount should offer pictures to Sosna on terms calculated not to defeat purposes of Section VI of consent decree.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—Warner licensed Sosna a second run and a stipulation was filed agreeing it had complied with Section VI.

"The RKO licenses to the Frisina circuit provided that second run should follow first run by sixty days, while the Fox and Paramount licenses provided for a clearance in favor of first run over second run of ninety days. The complainant's contention as to these clearances, so far as they affect the Sosna, is that a first run clearance of sixty days for the Liberty over either the Rex or the Sosna, second run, is reasonable, but ninety days is unreasonable; that the Rex should have no clearance over the Sosna; and that no theatre should have any protection whatever in the case of a picture shown first run at a ten-cent adult evening admission price.

"The offers of all three distributor defendants to Sosna contained conditions with respect to admission prices. RKO requires an admission price of not less than 10 cents at all times. Fox requires a minimum admission price of 10 cents except on pictures which were shown at 10 cents on first run. Paramount requires that the admission price be 5 cents less than charged on second run, except that there is a 10 cent minimum and children may be admitted for 10 cents at any time. Complainant asserts that these are unfair requirements for third run in Mexico, Missouri, and demands the privilege of showing pictures for an adult night admission price of 10 cents, with a 5-cent matinee charge and 5 cents for children at all times.

"While the Liberty and the Rex usually charge higher prices—the Liberty much higher—each of them has a weekly bargain night with an adult admission price of 10 cents. The defendants' contracts with the Frisina circuit stipulate a minimum admission price of 15 cents, and the defendants assert that none of their pictures are shown with their consent on bargain nights. The evidence proves that this sometimes happens, nevertheless, and the complainant charges that serious efforts are not made to prevent it. The complainant has two bargain days a week, at 10 cents, with a 5-cent matinee, and claims to take in more money at these prices than at higher ones. He desires the defendants' pictures to fill out his programs, and contends that he has no fair chance to compete with Frisina unless he can show some of them at his bargain day rates.

"The Arbitrator has expressed the view that, if the complainant is unable to make his theatre succeed, the result is not due to any action on the part of the distributors or any just grievance with respect to the terms on which he is allowed to buy pictures, but rather to the fact that there is no legitimate place in Mexico for a third run theatre. It is not the function of the Arbitrator or of this Board to pass upon the wisdom or folly of commercial ventures. It may be true that Mexico does not furnish sufficient patronage for a third run, and that the Sosna theatre, so long as it is obliged to play third run, will eventually fail no matter what terms are offered. It is undoubtedly true, as we took pains to make clear on the former appeal, that the terms are not required to be such as to ensure successful operation by the exhibitor where such success is impossible because of circumstances for which the distributor is not responsible. (Matter of Sosna, Dec. No. 40, Oct. 5, 1942.) On the other hand, the future may justify complainant's persistence. The complainant has a right to try the experiment unhampered by any unjust terms imposed upon him, and while our authority under Section VI does not extend to interference with the distributor's choice of run, we have jurisdiction to disapprove terms and conditions which add unfairly to the complainant's burden.

"It will be noted that the reasonableness of a minimum admission price must be judged in relation to other terms and conditions, including clearance, as well as to the admission prices charged on prior run exhibitions. In this connection it is appropriate to enlarge what we said on the former appeal about admission prices and to declare that in our opinion it is unreasonable to require the same admission prices to be charged for third run as for second run when all other factors are equal. A relationship between admission prices and clearance is recognized in Section VIII of the Decree. As to clearance, appropriate criteria of reasonableness have been developed in the decisions of this Board in cases arising under Section VIII."

Ex. 3. Appeal Board Decision No. 71, decided June 1, 1943:

A. Unfair practices.—Compelling exhibitor to buy pictures for more than one of his theatres.

B. Complainant.—Welden Theatre, Inc., operating the Welden Theatre in St. Albans, Vermont.

C. Nature of complaint.—Paramount refused to sell its pictures first run to complainant unless its pictures were bought for other theatres in other towns.

D. Decision.—No relief available under decree.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—In St. Albans the theatres were the Welden, the Bellevue, the Empire. The Welden was the newest theatre and was a de luxe theatre. It had also been a first run theatre exclusively. From its opening to November 1942 it played Paramount pictures first run. The Empire is a much inferior theatre. On November 16, 1942, Paramount shifted its first run pictures from the Welden to the Empire, and since that day refused to license its pictures first run to the Welden. Around March 1942, the complainant had joined up with a booking agency, the Affiliated Theatres, Inc., which bought and booked pictures for a number of theatres. The Appeal Board quoted as follows from the opinion of the Arbitrator:

"In the spring of 1942 Affiliated Theatres Corporation licensed a block of pictures from the respondent for first-run showings at the Welden Theatre. At the same time it also licensed pictures from the respondent to be shown at other theatres for which it acted as licensing agent. Although Affiliated represented and acted for several exhibitors as already stated and that fact was known to the respondent, negotiations for licenses in all cases were for particular theatres. Price arrangements were distinct and subject to individual agreement in respect of each theatre. In September of 1942 Albert M. Kane, the respondent's branch manager at its Boston office, offered Affiliated one or more blocks of its forthcoming releases. Included among the pictures offered was 'Holiday Inn' which Kane insisted be purchased on a percentage basis. At the same time Kane informed Mr. Howard, President and Manager of Affiliated Theatres Corp., that Paramount's policy for the new season would be to sell top pictures entirely on a percentage basis. Howard was unwilling to accept the proposed arrangements and refused the pictures on the terms offered. Shortly thereafter, however, Howard spoke with William Erbb, district manager of the Paramount Film Distributing Corp. in Boston, and advised him that he desired and was willing to buy Paramount pictures for exhibition at Welden Theatre upon the distributor's terms. Howard testified that Erbb then told him that Affiliated would have to buy for all of the theatres which it represented or for none at all. This testimony was not contradicted and is corroborated in a letter from Neil Agnew, General Sales Manager of Paramount Pictures, Inc., addressed to Mr. Howard under date of December 4, 1942, in which the writer said:

"'Your letter makes mention of the fact that we were able to agree as to terms for certain of our pictures at the Welden Theatre, St. Albans, but says nothing with respect to the balance of your circuit. The difficulty seems to be that we could not agree as to terms in the other 10 situations, and, therefore, we were unable to make a deal.'

"It is further substantiated by the fact that Welden enjoyed first-run pictures from Paramount from the time of its opening until September of 1942, shortly after it had designated Affiliated as its buying agent. Prior to entering into this contract Mr. Mathieu, who was President and General Manager of Welden Theatre, Inc., informed one Duane, respondent's salesman in the St. Albans district, of his intention to join the Affiliated group. Mr. Duane thereupon cautioned him that if he did so Paramount would refuse to license pictures to him. I find that the respondent's refusal to license pictures to be shown at the Welden Theatre on first run was dictated solely by the decision taken by it that Affiliated would have to buy for all of its associated theatres or could buy for none at all."

The Arbitrator had found that Paramount had violated section 6.

The Appeal Board said:

"The undisputed facts fully sustain the Arbitrator's conclusion that Paramount's refusal to continue licensing its pictures first run to the Welden was due solely to the unwillingness of Affiliated Theatres to buy the pictures on Paramount's terms for the other theatres represented by it.

"The Decree contemplated that the distributors should deal with theatres on their individual merits. This is clearly indicated by the provisions of paragraph (7) of Section VIII which specifically direct an Arbitrator in a Section VIII proceeding to disregard the fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a circuit. Paramount's refusal under the circumstances to deal with the Welden on its own merits, when it knew that the Welden was willing to meet its terms and had been a satisfactory customer for years, is a type of discrimination utterly at variance with the spirit of the Decree. This is not the case of an exhibitor attempting to use the concentrated economic power of a group of theatres to obtain favorable terms from the distributor, but that of a distributor arbitrarily penalizing an independent exhibitor for employing a booking agent with which the distributor was in controversy as to other theatres. If its action were governed by the individual merits of the theatres it is hard to conceive that Paramount would not be far better off in continuing to license its pictures first run to the Welden, a newer, larger, better situated and better operated theatre than the Empire.

"Counsel for Paramount makes no attempt in his brief either to answer or to mitigate the severe criticisms made by the Arbitrator of his client's conduct. He confines his argument wholly to the lack of power of the Arbitrator under the Decree to redress an injustice clearly shown by the record to have been done to the Welden. We share the Arbitrator's conviction that the Welden deserves a first run ahead of the Empire, and were it not for the limitations imposed by the Decree we should either direct the restoration of first run to the Welden, which is what the complainant really desires and deserves, or else we should affirm the award without question on the ground that it does equity and justice between the parties concerned. Section VI of the Decree, however, grants no authority to an Arbitrator or to the Board to make an award directing the offer to an exhibitor of any specified run. The Decree unquestionably reserves to each distributor, where two theatres are in the same competitive area, the right, subject only to the provisions of Section X which are not applicable here, to decide which theatre shall have the prior run."

Ex. 3. Appeal Board Decision No. 72, decided June 8, 1943:

A. Unfair practices.—Independent theatre relegated by distributors to a playing time behind a circuit theatre and subjected to unreasonable clearance—ineffectiveness of decree.

B. Complainant.—Mrs. William L. Paternostro, operating the Delta Theatre about a mile outside the city limits of Lake Charles, La.

C. Nature of complaint.—Section VI and Section VIII. Independent theatre could not buy RKO or Paramount pictures except after they ran at circuit theatres.

D. Decision.—Complaint dismissed. Relief not afforded by decree.

E. Situation stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—There were five theatres in Lake Charles, all operated by the Southern Amusement Company.

"On September 2, 1941, complainant caused an announcement to be published in the Lake Charles newspaper that she planned to erect and operate a new theatre at the present site of the theatre here involved, the Delta. The next day the same paper carried an announcement that the Southern Amusement Company 'will build two suburban theatres in Lake Charles.'

"The construction of the complainant's Delta theatre began about September 20, 1941, on land which complainant had owned for about a year. Immediately thereafter construction was begun by the Southern Amusement Company of a theatre, later named the Victory, which it located eighty feet from the Delta. By forced construction work, the Victory theatre was opened some two weeks prior to December 13, 1941, when the Delta was opened."

In October 1941 Paternostro had negotiated with Paramount for some pictures and the contracts had no provisions with respect to the Victory theatre but later Paramount refused to play pictures ahead of the Victory and after June 1942 Paramount made no further effort to offer her pictures. While the theatre was being built she signed contracts with RKO for pictures but the contracts were never approved because the pictures were sold to the Victory.

"There is nothing in the record which indicates that the defendants investigated the respective merits of the Delta and Victory as theatres before deciding which should have the prior run. It seems apparent that the conclusive factor was that the Victory was operated by a large and important circuit and the Delta by a small independent exhibitor. Southern Amusement Company is considered, as Paramount's representative testified, an important account and complainant a good but small customer.

"It is apparent that complainant's chief concern, both before and after the inception of the proceeding, is not clearance but run. She expressed herself satisfied with being permitted to play pictures at the Delta sixty days after first run, provided the Delta could play ahead of the Victory. What she sought was a run ahead of the Victory, not a reduction of clearance.

"The Board has repeatedly held that under Section VI it has no power to direct that one theatre be given a run ahead of another.

"The defendants, during the trial, made offers of a run which the Arbitrator found proper. He says 'Award is denied under Section VI of the Consent Decree because the defendant distributors have now offered to license their pictures to complainant on minimum terms with reasonable clearances in accordance with the spirit of that section. Both offers appear in the record.' We do not find in the record adequate proof to support this finding. So far as RKO is concerned it is to be noted that its offer did not even include any current releases. We have held that an offer under Section VI must include current releases.

"Nor is there in this record anything which would justify a finding that a fourteen or fifteen day clearance in favor of the Victory is reasonable. We know nothing whatever about the Victory except the circumstances and apparent purpose under which it was built, and that it is the property of the Southern Amusement Company which seeks to extend its dominance over the motion-picture business of Lake Charles by excluding complainant from the suburban field in which she was apparently the pioneer.

"Nor is it clear to us from the record that complainant should justly be required to wait sixty days after first run downtown. This is an unusually long clearance for first run city theatres.

"The present record would seem to indicate, as we have previously stated, the purpose of defendants to license their films first to all of the Southern Amusement Company's theatres in Lake Charles, including the Victory, giving them an aggregate of sixty days playing time 'to clear' and then to require complainant's new theatre to wait fourteen days after the Victory before defendants' features are available to it.

"The terms and conditions which may be properly imposed on the Delta must consider the five theatres of the Southern Amusement Company as a unit and the terms and conditions attached to the Delta's run must recognize its merits as a theatre and establish a just relationship with these other theatres. Any other approach to this problem would be in effect to warn every independent theatre owner that in entering an area controlled by a single unit it does so at the peril of having its theatre, regardless of its merits, relegated to a position in which it cannot survive in case such dominating unit concludes to extend its operation."

Ex. 4 (R. 276, 305–8). Appeal Board Decision No. 85, decided August 17, 1943:

A. Unfair practices.—Independent theatre subject to unreasonable clearance in favor of a number of affiliated theatres—effect of monopoly power—manipulation of availabilities.

B. Complainant.—Edsol Corporation operating the Scotia Theatre in Scotia, New York.

C. Nature of complaint.—Unreasonable clearance given by Fox, Warner, RKO, Paramount, and Loew to a number of theatres affiliated with RKO.

D. Decision.—Unreasonable clearance reduced.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—The complaint was brought with respect to Fast Theatres, Inc., operating the Proctor, State, Plaza, Erie, and Strand theatres in Schenectady, New York. Because RKO had an interest in these theatres within the meaning of section 17 of the Decree it was dismissed as a party. The clearance complained of was the clearance given the Plaza, State, and Proctor theatres.

"Until the 1936–37 season the clearance of the first run theatres in Schenectady was generally thirty days over a sixteen mile radius, excluding Amsterdam, Troy, and Albany. From the 1936–37 season until the 1941–42 season, inclusive, the Schenectady first run theatres had a forty-two day clearance over the same area. In the 1941–42 season this clearance was reduced to thirty-five days.

"The proof is convincing that there is active competition between the Scotia and the Plaza theatre. This competition, however, is clearly a one way competition. There is no evidence whatever that any residents of Schenectady cross the bridge to Scotia in order to go to the Scotia theatre. There can be no question but that sufficient competition exists to warrant clearance between the State, Proctor, and Plaza theatres on the one hand and the Scotia on the other. There is no evidence, however, of any substantial competition between the Scotia theatre and the subsequent run theatres in Schenectady of which the Strand is one.

"The situation briefly is this: The intervenor, through its operation of the Proctor, State, Erie, and Plaza theatres, has a complete monopoly in Schenectady of the exhibition of the defendant distributors' first and second run pictures and, by using the Erie as a move-over theatre for pictures previously played at the Proctor or State, is able materially to extend the so-called first run playing time of the best pictures. Although the move-over at the Erie does not in any way affect the availability of the Plaza or the Scotia the result is that a picture played at Erie will have played in two theatres before reaching the Plaza and in three theatres before reaching the Scotia. The practical effect of this, except as to availability, is substantially the same as if the Erie had a second run without intermediate clearance, the Plaza a third run and the Scotia a fourth run. Furthermore, the intervenor, by any delay in playing pictures at the Plaza, is in a position to extend indefinitely the priority in playing time of the Proctor, State, and Erie theatres over subsequent run theatres. Whether any such delay is intentional or not is quite immaterial in its effect on subsequent run theatres.

"There is some dispute as to the actual playing dates of the Plaza and, based thereon, the actual availabilities of the Scotia.

"It is apparent from the foregoing that the thirty-five day clearance in favor of the first run theatres has not had any great significance. When the operator of this group of theatres and the distributors as well are willing to permit a second run theatre to play nearly 30% of its pictures ahead of availability even though it may be, as in this case, only a few days ahead, it is a pretty clear indication that the theatres having the prior run are not considered as needing thirty-five days' protection."

Ex. 4. Appeal Board Decision No. 87, decided January 19, 1944:

A. Unfair practices.—Taking a run away from independent to give it to a circuit. Unreasonable clearance established on basis of a circuit's demands.

B. Complainant.—Anthony Demharter, operating the Peacock theatre in New Orleans.

C. Nature of complaint.—Section 10 complaint against Paramount, RKO, Fox, and Warner. Demharter complained—

"That prior to 1935 the Peacock theatre enjoyed a run sixty days following this first run downtown Canal Street, New Orleans; that in or about the motion picture season of 1934–35 the defendants refused to license the Peacock on the said run and thereafter would only sell their features to complainant on a subsequent suburban run subject to sixty days' clearance in favor of the Rivoli theatre and, in the case of Vitagraph, subject to sixty days' clearance in favor of the Rivoli and Dreamland theatres, both of which theatres had a run sixty days after first run downtown Canal Street; that the Rivoli and Dreamland were operated by United Theatres, Inc., a circuit operating more than fifteen theatres; and that the run previously enjoyed by the Peacock of sixty days after first run downtown Canal Street had been arbitrarily taken away from the Peacock and given to theatres operated by a circuit within the meaning of Section X. Complainant asked for relief under Section X."

D. Decision.—Distributors to negotiate on the basis of individual theatres as between the Peacock, Rivoli, and Dreamland.

E. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—

"We cannot agree with the Arbitrator that complainant failed to prove his case under this paragraph.

"Complainant testified that the Peacock theatre plays a minimum of 208 pictures a year and that the only pictures that he was able to buy on a run sixty days after first run Canal Street were from Universal and Republic, together with a few miscellaneous pictures aggregating not more than about sixty per annum. This testimony was not contraverted by the defendants and there is no question in our minds but that complainant's theatre has not available to its features sufficient in nature and quantity to enable it to operate on the run requested by him.

"This brings us to a consideration of paragraph (6) of subsection B of Section X, which reads as follows:

'Such refusal to license the exhibition of said features in the complainant's theatre specified in his complaint was in fact because the theatre licensed to exhibit them on the run requested by the complainant was a circuit theatre.'

"To support complainant's claim under the foregoing paragraph the record shows the following facts. In the first place, according to complainant's uncontroverted testimony, the Peacock had enjoyed a run from one or more of the defendants sixty days after first run downtown, for about two and one-half to three years, from 1927 to about 1930, and this run was then taken away from the Peacock and given to the Capitol, a circuit theatre, while the Peacock was made to play sixty days after the Capitol and the Dreamland. The Capitol was located about half-way between the Dreamland and the Rivoli. When the Capitol burned down a few years later the Peacock was subjected to a clearance of sixty days in favor of the Rivoli, which was operated by the same circuit."

Referring to award of the NRA Code Authority, the Appeal Board said:

"The award of the Code Authority previously quoted was in accord with the final zoning plan. It clearly recognizes that the Peacock and the Gentilly should be in one zone, that either or both might be given a first suburban run in that zone, and that first suburban run is sixty days after the first run downtown, the run requested by complainant. The award then provides that the second suburban run shall be thirty days after first suburban run. The defendants, however, paid no attention to the award notwithstanding the fact that it was made some months before the decision declaring the NRA unconstitutional, but they continued to grant the Rivoli sixty days' clearance over the Peacock and, in the case of Vitagraph, both the Rivoli and the Dreamland sixty days' clearance over the Peacock.

"In the absence of any evidence on the part of the defendants, we think the only legitimate inference that can be drawn from the evidence introduced by the complainant is that the reason for licensing the run in question to the Rivoli and Dreamland is that the latter are circuit theatres."

At the hearing, the complainant introduced in evidence a clearance schedule for United Theatres, Inc., for the 1936–37 season. The Appeal Board said:

"While the testimony does not make it clear who prepared this schedule or in what manner it was used, it bears the earmarks of having been prepared not by the distributors but by the circuit to show the runs and clearances demanded for its own theatres, and of having been accepted by the distributors and put into effect by them. On its face it reveals a contemptuous disregard of the interests and probable rights not only of the Peacock but of practically every theatre not belonging to the circuit. It prescribes in every case the abnormally long clearance of sixty days between suburban runs. It attempts to subject the Peacock, Gentilly, and other theatres to a clearance in favor of the New Almonaster Avenue theatre, not yet even built, before there could be adequate opportunity to measure the factors on which clearance depends. The schedule even goes so far as to subject the Lafayette, for example, to a sixty-day clearance in favor of no less than twenty-one separate circuit theatres, and the Palace to twelve.

"With this schedule before us, it would be a wholly unjustified assumption for us to conclude that the transfer of the run previously enjoyed by complainant's theatre to the Rivoli and Dreamland theatres belonging to this circuit was not made because these theatres formed a part of that circuit. The record amply supports a quite contrary conclusion."

Ex. 291 (R. 276, 305–8). Appeal Board Decision No. 109, decided May 24, 1945:

A. Unfair practices.—Unreasonable clearance not disclosed to independent exhibitor.

B. Complainant.—National Theatre Company operating the National Theatre in Boston.

C. Nature of complaint.—Unreasonable clearance given by Fox, Paramount, RKO, Warners, and Loew to Dudley and Rivoli theatres.

D. Decision.—Complaint dismissed as to Loew and Warner as to Rivoli theatre because clearance not unreasonable. Dismissed as to Paramount because of latter's interest in the Dudley and Rivoli. Clearance over National Theatre reduced.

E. Situation as set out in Appeal Board's opinion.—

"In the Boston metropolitan area the first run suburban or neighborhood houses ordinarily follow downtown Boston by 28 days. The amount things as they are, but that had Skouras rented the Strand, Skouras could have dictated the run of his Company's product which that theatre should enjoy. He said that nothing could induce him to sell the Strand ahead of the theatres of the Skouras Circuit in Astoria so long as the Skouras Circuit account was satisfactory.

"Mr. Randel for Paramount Pictures, Inc., while evasive, admitted that he would sell Skouras first although also admitting that the Strand was outstanding as compared with the other theatres in the district. He further admitted that a new theatre company into any district could not get a run until all those with whom the defendant distributors had previously dealt had been satisfied.

"Two pertinent and significant questions persist in the mind of the Arbitrator.

"1. Why did not Skouras Theatres, Inc., which either owns or operates five theatres in the Astoria District, after receiving notice, intervene in this proceeding? Legitimately the Arbitrator may infer that this Skouras aggregation has no interest in the outcome of the proceeding. More logically for a man of legal and practical experience, the Arbitrator concludes that Skouras Theatres, Inc., did not intervene because it had complete confidence that its interests would be amply protected by the defendant distributors. This inference the Arbitrator believes is freighted with unhealthy implications.

"2. Why do the defendant distributors, while offering no proof whatever that their revenues in the Astoria district will be impaired by granting to the Strand Theatre their product on a comparable basis with competing theatres of Skouras, nevertheless stand here in this proceeding as the champions not of their own interests, but rather as the guardians of the Skouras holdings in Astoria?

"The fact that Skouras Theatres, Inc. did not appear as an intervenor drives the Arbitrator to the unescapable conclusion that that Corporation has nothing to fear from any award of the Arbitrator in this proceeding. If this absence of apprehension is due to the fact that any award made by the Arbitrator will not financially affect them, then some of the testimony of the defendant distributors must be disregarded. If the sense of security enjoyed by Skouras be due to their reliance on their associations with the defendant distributors and their belief that this association and their contractual relations would be amply protected by these defendants free from disturbance from the Arbitrator, then the Arbitrator is unable to escape the conclusion either that there is an agreement undisclosed between Skouras Circuit and these defendants, or that the Consent Decree in Section VI is disturbingly lacking in provisions adequate to deal with the situation such as presently exists in the Astoria district."

The Arbitrator reluctantly dismissed the complaint on the ground that it had been filed prior to the opening of the theatre.

"If, as is seriously contended by all the defendants, the Decree protects unreservedly the right of distributors to designate the run of their product, then the Decree is woefully defective in protecting the rights of new theatre owners in a district where circuit theatres are already entrenched. It was contended by a representative of Vitagraph that this action should have been brought under Section X. Of course, Section X is inapplicable because this theatre was not in existence at the time the Decree was made and yet Section X would permit an Arbitrator after certain findings of fact to remedy a situation such as is apparent in this case."

Ex. 297 (R. 276, 305-8). Arbitration Decision No. 28-1H-42, decided July 21, 1942:

A. Unfair practices.—Inability of independent theatre to get a run until all circuit theatres in opposition got pictures.

B. Complainant.—Gem Theatre Co. operating the Gem theatre in Tulsa, Oklahoma.

C. Nature of complaint.—Independent could not get a run from Warner, Loew, Paramount, Fox, and RKO until Griffith Circuit Theatres given 10 runs. Section X complaint.

D. Decision. Distributors to license Griffith's theatres in Tulsa by separate contracts.

E. Situation as stated in arbitrator's opinion.—It was alleged that Loew, Paramount, and RKO did not offer the Gem pictures until they had been first offered to Griffith on 10 runs following first run in Tulsa. Certain pictures were offered to complainant only after being offered to Griffith and refused by Griffith. In Tulsa there were 12 theatres, Griffith owned 10. At the time of the hearing there were four first-run theatres in Tulsa and thirteen subsequent-run theatres, ten of which were owned by Griffith.

The Arbitrator said the evidence showed that for this season all of the distributors had first offered every group of pictures to Griffith for all the runs it wanted, usually 10, and what was left after Griffith made its choice was offered to the Gem and Cozy. Arbitrator concluded that the refusal to license features 5th and 6th run to the Gem and Cozy was because the theatres licensed to exhibit them on the run requested by the complainant was a circuit theatre. The Arbitrator said "the run position in the Griffith theatres is left as a matter of policy with Griffith, but the run position of the Gem and Cozy is determined by the respondent."

Ex. 298 (R. 276, 305–8), Arbitration Decision No. 7–4F–41, decided Nov. 1, 1941:

A. Unfair practices.—Inability of independent with better theatre to get pictures on early run or on reasonable clearance because of preference shown affiliated theatre.

B. Complainant.—Overton Amusement Co., Inc., operating the Overton Theatre in Overton, Texas.

C. Nature of complaint.—Loew, Fox, RKO, and Warner gave Paramount's affiliated theatre unreasonable clearance over complainant's theatre.

D. Decision.—Unreasonable clearance reduced.

E. Situation as stated in arbitrator's opinion.—

"(2) Evidence leads the Arbitrator to believe that the Jefferson Amusement Company and/or East Texas Theatres, Inc. (herinafter referred to as the Jefferson Amusement Company), failed to properly serve the consumer public of Overton and its immediate trade territory after the burning of the original Gem Theatre. The Jefferson Amusement Company was given ample time in which to rebuild its theatre in Overton but did not see fit to do so.

"(3) As a result of popular demand and a natural desire to hold that part of the business of his trade territory which was being drawn elsewhere by lack of a motion picture house which would adequately serve the people of the trade territory as to capacity, appointments, etc., interested local citizens formed the Overton Amusement Company, Inc., and built a theatre in keeping with the population and purchasing power of the community, which theatre was named the Overton Theatre.

"(4) At about or shortly after the time the Overton Theatre was opened, the Jefferson Amusement Company leased a small store building and opened a theatre therein, giving it the same name as that of the burned theatre, namely, the Gem.

"The distributors saw fit to sell first run not only to the Strand (the other theatre operated by the Jefferson Amusement Company), but also to the inferior Gem theatre which pretty well absorbed the vast majority of the better pictures. Management of the Overton concluded to become a second run house.

"(5) Operation as a second run house with clearance such as has prevailed in the past was satisfactory for a few months until such time as the Jefferson Amusement Company reduced admission prices of its first run theatres to the same as that charged by the Overton Theatre for second run. The admission price of the theatres involved is one of the factors which shall be taken into consideration under the terms of the Consent Decree. The evidence presented indicates that it is an almost unheard of situation in this territory where the first run theatre does not make any higher charge than the second of clearance enjoyed in turn by these houses over the subsequent runs appears from the evidence to depend chiefly on admission prices.

"A chart put in evidence by the intervenors and not challenged by the complainant shows that there is no subsequent run theatre, with an admission price as low as that of the National, which has an availability of less than 92 days after downtown Boston. So far as Fox at least is concerned, the complainant has a right at any time to shorten the clearance by increasing its admission price.

"It follows that the 21 days allowed in the Warner contracts is not unreasonable. Furthermore, we agree with the Arbitrator that any clearance provision specified merely 'as available' or as 'subsequent run' is unreasonable if it can be understood to mean more than thirty days. The sixty days included in the current Fox contracts is in our opinion clearly unreasonable even in view of the large admission price differential. This is an unusually long clearance between second and third run theatres in populous cities and we find no exceptional circumstances to warrant it in this case.

"The discrepancies which have appeared in this case between some of the clearance provisions in the contracts of the complainant as compared with the contracts of the intervenors, while having little effect upon our decision, make it appropriate to reemphasize and extend our previous comments on the unfairness of this method of granting clearance (Matter of Ayer Playhouse, Dec. No. 104, Dec. 21, 1944). The clearance provisions should be harmonious, and should be disclosed to both parties."

Ex. 292 (R. 276, 305–8). Appeal Board Decision No. 111, decided June 20, 1945:

A. Unfair practices.—Independent theatre in opposition to a circuit theatre not given opportunity to negotiate for 1st or 2nd run.

B. Complainant.—Benton Roy, operating the Roy Theatre in Mansura, Louisiana.

C. Nature of complaint.—Section VI complaint against Fox, Warner, and Paramount—inability to get first runs.

D. Situation as stated in Appeal Board's opinion.—First runs were being first offered to the Joy theatre, a circuit theatre. The Appeal Board said it had no jurisdiction to grant complainant a right to first runs. Until sometime after the Roy theatre was opened, Fox was unwilling to sell second run but in October 1944 decided to sell second run to the Joy theatre although the Roy theatre had asked for second run. Appeal Board said:

"Although the Joy theatre apparently purchased only a few Fox pictures second run, it was given the privilege of taking them all and the pictures it did purchase were some of the best pictures distributed by Fox. There can be no question but that the offer by Fox of a second run to the Joy theatre ahead of the Roy theatre was an act calculated to defeat the purposes of Section VI."

B. Arbitration Awards

Ex. 293 (R. 276, 305–8). Arbitration Decision No. 14–IFH–42, decided October 14, 1942 (no appeal):

A. Unfair practices.—Affiliate with several theatres allowed to juggle clearance and bookings among its theatres to detriment of independent—Ineffectiveness of decree.

B. Complainant.—Henry Hiser operating the Hiser Theatre, Bethesda, Md.

C. Nature of complaint.—Section 8—clearance, and Section 10—run complaint. Loew, Warners, RKO, and Paramount, relegated the Hiser to an inferior position to the Avalon, Uptown, and Calvert and Silver, Warner theatres, and to the Apex, an independent theatre. These were Washington, D. C., theatres. Bethesda is a suburb of Washington.

D. Decision.—Complaint under Section X dismissed. Complaint under Section VIII dismissed as to Warner and Paramount, Loew and RKO clearance reduced.

E. Situation as stated in arbitrator's decision.—

"The other theatres named have been built subsequently to the building of the Hiser, and though their runs, by reason of arrangements hereinafter noted, are prior to that of Hiser, no contractual provisions relate the Hiser's playing dates to those of any of the named theatres excepting the Avalon.

"In the Washington area there do not exist successive runs which can be definitely classified as first, second, third, fourth, etc. The larger downtown theatres have a first run, but after that the succession of playing dates is accomplished by the granting to particular theatres of clearance over other named theatres and, as to the Warner theatres between themselves, by decision of the Warner operating company.

"But to dispose of the controversy upon these considerations alone would be to oversimplify the problem.

"Complainant points out that changes have occurred since his theatre was pegged behind the Avalon which should be taken into account.

"Notable among those changes are the erection of the Uptown in 1936, the Calvert in 1937, the Silver in 1938, and the Apex in 1939, all of which he complains have been granted runs prior to those of the Avalon and the Hiser, thus postponing his playing position and resulting in his getting feature pictures after they have lost their pulling power by lapse of time and frequency of showing.

"As to clearance, or waiting time, between the showing at the Avalon and the showing at the Hiser, the justification for which must be competition to a degree requiring the prior run theatre to have this protection, the parties respondent by their own actions in the past year and a half appear to have adjudged that no clearance is necessary. The distributors have voluntarily reduced it to one day or zero, with the consent of the Warner interests who operate the Avalon. The Arbitrator therefore decides as to this clearance that what the parties have done is reasonable, and that the former 14-day clearance accorded the Avalon over the Hiser has become unreasonable.

"There is another respect in which, in the opinion of the Arbitrator, the clearance granted the Avalon over the Hiser has become unreasonable.

"Granting, as one must, the right of the distributors to give to the Warner controlled Calvert, Uptown and Avalon runs prior to that of the Hiser, yet there are elements in the situation which offend a common sense of justice, and if a remedy can be found within the bounds set out in the Consent Decree, it should be applied.

"The Calvert, the Uptown, and so far as contractual provisions are concerned the Avalon, have runs 21 days after first run down town. The Warner theatres do not contract with distributors for clearance as between themselves. As counsel for the Warner interests puts it in his brief—'suitable clearance is accorded by a distributor to one Warner theatre over another competing Warner theatre by staggering availabilities and in practical booking and playing operation.' In practice, the Calvert and the Uptown run contemporaneously, the run in one usually starting a day after that in the other. The Avalon plays not earlier than 7 days after the first playing date at the Uptown. The playing sequence and the intervals between these three theatres are subject to practical booking and availability problems, wholly at the election of Warner. Warner's counsel computes the earliest availability to Hiser as 31 days after first run down town, as follows, 21 days before availability to the Uptown and the Calvert, 7 days thereafter before availability to the Avalon, 2 days run at the Avalon, and the availability to the Hiser.

"Complainant's booking agent testified that in practice the present availability to Hiser varied from twenty-eight (28) days after down town to fifty (50) to sixty (60) days after down town, dependent upon whether and when Warner played the picture at the Avalon.

"Whether or not the longer interval from down town playing occurs frequently, the fact remains that it can occur whenever Warner so solves its own booking problems, and the determination of a circuit having fifteen theatres in the Washington area is necessarily not always dictated by the separate interests of Avalon considered independently. If Avalon were an independent theatre having a run of clearance defined as twenty-eight (28) days after down town Washington, the situation of a theatre whose playing time follows that of the Avalon would be different from that here presented, as the motives of self interest leading to prompt booking stressed in the Warner brief, might then more safely be relied on to protest the Hiser, which is pegged behind the Avalon.

"It is true that the Consent Decree directs that in proceedings under Section VII the arbitrator shall disregard the fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a distributor or with a circuit. Nevertheless, the fact that there are no fixed clearances or runs as between the several theatres which include the Avalon, which alone of them is determinative of the Hiser's playing date, which in the present case results from their being parts of a circuit, is a fact which is being taken into account."

Warner and Paramount said that they were not currently supplying the Hiser and had no precontractual relations and therefore should be dismissed from the complaint. The complainant said he stopped buying from them because he could not get from them the playing position he sought.

"If the matter were one of first impression, one might well hold that an exhibitor need not make a contract containing an objectionable term, in order to put himself in a position to complain of the term to which he objects, but the cited holding of the Appeal Board appears unequivocal, no qualifying or countrary decisions have been cited, and the Arbitrator feels bound to dismiss the complaint as to these distributors on the ground stated."

Ex. 294 (R. 276, 305–8). Arbitration Decision No. 14–4FH–41, decided August 8, 1941. (No appeal):

A. Unfair practices.—Unreasonable clearance given affiliated theatres, independent unable to negotiate for first runs, holding back availabilities.

B. Complaint.—L. W. Lea, operating the Lea Theatre in Danville, Virginia.

C. Nature of complaint.—Section VIII—clearance and Section VI—run, complaint. 1st run given theatres operated by a Paramount affiliate and unreasonable clearance given them by Fox, Lowe, Paramount, RKO, and Warners.

D. Decision.—Complaint dismissed under Section X. Paramount dismissed from case because of its affiliation. Clearance reduced.

E. Situation as stated in Arbitrator's opinion.—

"Prior to 1933 the only clearance in Danville, Virginia, was thirty days between first run theatres and second run theatres. The second run theatres did not take clearance over any subsequent run.

"After intervenor began to do business in Danville, and beginning with the 1932–33 season, the clearance in Danville was increased as follows: The contracts with first run theatres provided they should have clearance over second run of from sixty to ninety days; the contracts with the second run theatres provided they should have clearance of thirty days over subsequent runs.

"In many of the contracts which the distributors have with the complainant in respect of the Lea Theatre, there is a provision, under the heading CLEARANCE-RUN, reading as follows: 'Third run in Danville, Virginia. Thirty days after the second run, Danville, Virginia. Not more than one hundred twenty days after first run or six months after national release.'

"Complainant maintains that the above quoted provision in his contracts results, in effect, in granting aggregate clearances of one hundred twenty days between the first run and the third run, to which complainant is entitled, and urges that such clearances are unreasonable. Respondents and intervenor maintain that the provision in the various contracts does not fix the clearance, as defined by the Consent Decree, but that reference must be made to the contracts with the first and second run theatres in order to determine what the applicable clearance is; that upon reference it will be found that for the most part such clearances consist of from sixty to ninety days in favor of the first run over the second run, and thirty days over subsequent runs."

"Moreover, there is uncontradicted testimony in this case that the shortest time after national release when any picture has been made available to complainant was one hundred nine days; that the longest time between release and the date made available has been one hundred sixty-five days. Uncontradicted testimony also was given that the shortest time between the first run in Danville and an exhibition, there being no intermediate runs, was seventy-one days, the longest time after first run in Danville being one hundred ninety days.

"It is recognized that clearance is necessary between first and second runs, and, in some instances, between subsequent runs. It is also recognized that minds may reasonably differ as to what a reasonable clearance is. But a clearance which at once tends to stifle competition and is not necessary to protect prior run theatres is unreasonable. It seems to me that so far as the Lea Theatre is concerned, sixty or ninety days after a first run in Danville is unreasonable, and that thirty between second and third runs is unreasonable, particularly so where the third run theatre has no assurance of an exhibition prior to four months after a first run in Danville, or six months after national release, and the charges of the third run theatre are practically the same as those of the prior run theatres."

Ex. 295 (R. 276, 305–8). Arbitration Decision No. 1–18D–41, decided December 12, 1941 (No appeal):

A. Unfair practices.—Independent not given an opportunity to negotiate for pictures—monopoly practices—ineffectiveness of consent decree.

B. Complainant.—Cedar Operating Co., Inc., operating the Strand Theatre in Astoria, Long Island.

C. Nature of complaint.—Section VI complaint against Paramount, Loew, RKO, Fox, and Warner.

D. Decision.—Complaint dismissed because brought before theatre opened. RKO was dismissed because of its interest in Skouras Theatres Corp.

E. Situation as stated in Arbitrator's opinion.—Skouras Theatres, Inc., had the Astoria, the Broadway, the Grant, the Crescent, and the Steinway theatres in that district. The Arbitrator found as a fact that negotiations between the owners of the Strand and Skouras for the leasing of the theatre were terminated because Skouras would pay about only one-half of the fair rental value. He found that had Skouras Theatres rented the Strand that that theatre could have dictated the run to be enjoyed by the Strand for the product of all five defendant distributors. He found:

"13. The income of the defendant distributors in the district will not be lessened by granting to the complaining party a run upon such terms and conditions as will give the complainant a fair opportunity to operate the Strand Theatre with profit.

"14. Some time prior to the completion of the Strand Theatre and within the year 1941, the Broadway Theatre, Strand's nearest competitor and one of the Skouras theatres, changed its long-time policy of two double feature programs per week to three such programs weekly.

"The theatre provides a fine, modern housing for displaying motion pictures with sound. It is air-conditioned, equipped with the lastest improved sound-production devices, and has sponge rubber cushioned seats. It is clean, has ample facilities, and is ably managed by an experienced motion picture theatre manager, Mr. Jacques Horn, who was an intelligent and frank witness for the complainant.

"The upshot of numerous conferences with all representatives of all the defendant distributors seems to have been that the complaining party was refused the run it wanted on the 1940–41 product of the 'Big Five,' but was offered the 'last run' in Astoria on its product because, according to the unfailing testimony of all the defendants, the 1940-41 product had already been fully contracted for by existing theatres in the district.

"The complaining party also repeatedly requested of the defendant distributors a run on the 1941-42 product. The answer of the distributor defendants as to this product was that they were forbidden by the Decree to contract for that product until the trade showings of it had been held; or if, as in a few cases the trade showings of the first block of the 1941-42 product had already been held prior to August 15th (the date of filing the submission) then the defendants answered that these feature pictures were still showing in metropolitan theatres and that no contracts could be made with any theatres in Astoria until these metropolitan showings and further 'road showings' had been concluded.

"Skouras Theatres, Inc., called throughout the proceedings Skouras Circuit, with wide holdings of motion-picture theatres, owns or operates five theatres in Astoria district, the Astoria, the Broadway, the Grant, the Crescent, and the Steinway. They, partly owned by RKO, have a preferential license for pictures from 20th Century-Fox terminating in 1948. While the witnesses of the other defendants were reluctant to admit the fact, the fact is nevertheless evident to the Arbitrator that Vitagraph, Loew's and Paramount did not and do not intend to deal with the complaining party until Skouras Bros. have been satisfied.

"The Broadway Theatre, one operated by Skouras and located within four blocks of the Strand, has, for an unexplained reason, this year changed its former policy from two double feature shows weekly to three such shows. It is a fair inference that, had not such a change been made, certain pictures of the 1940-41 product of the defendants would have been available for the Strand. Query: Did Skouras demand and did the defendants grant to him these additional pictures in order that no pictures of the defendants should be available for the competing Strand Theatre?

"That Skouras at that time was negotiating with Jacob Levy for the lease of the Strand Theatre adds poignancy to this episode. The testimony of Jacob Levy that the negotiations with Skouras for the lease were terminated because Skouras would pay only half the fair rental value of the theatre was uncontradicted. It is apparent to the Arbitrator that Skouras, having control of the output of the defendants in the district, is perfectly capable of dictating his own terms for the rental of theatres, for it is obvious that a theatre unable to secure the output of the five defendants on a profitable run is a worthless piece of property. That such a deplorable threat to free enterprise remains possible under the Consent Decree, seems to the Arbitrator inimical to the public interest and unhealthy for the industry.

"The Arbitrator is satisfied that the five defendants do not intend to permit any new theatre to come into the Astoria district where five theatres are controlled by Skouras unless that new theatre is also controlled by Skouras and that irrespective of the fact that there has been in the district such an increase in population as might reasonably warrant a prudent businessman to invest his capital in a theatre providing more modern accommodations for the public.

"Mr. Hodes testifying for RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., stated that had Skouras obtained the Strand Theatre, he could have had any run for that house which he desired and further admitted that his Company would not disturb the status quo in Astoria so far as runs of their product are concerned.

"Mr. Rothenberg for Vitagraph, Inc., admitted that a new theatre coming into a district even though that district were 'underseated' could not get pictures from his Company except 'last run pictures'; that his policy was to leave run. The evidence also tends to bear out the fact that it is unusual in this territory for first run to be sold to an inferior theatre. The Arbitrator, however, recognizes the right of a distributor to sell runs to whomever he pleases.

The Arbitrator found that a 60-day clearance was unreasonable and the clearance allowed the Strand and Gem theatres over the Overton Theatre should be a maximum of 14 days.

VI—Corporate Structure of Each Defendant

In the following pages we have tabulated the most recent data introduced in evidence showing the names of each corporation in which a defendant owns voting stock which is engaged in any branch of the film industry, the branch in which it is engaged and the percentage of stock control held. The branch of the industry in which each corporation is engaged is indicated by "E" for exhibition, "P" for production, and "D" for distribution. The principal subsidiary corporations of each defendant have been listed in alphabetical order. Except for Loew, corporations in which these subsidiary corporations own voting stock are listed alphabetically under each subsidiary holding the stock interest in question. The percentage listed is in each case the percentage held, directly or indirectly, by the parent company, except where otherwise noted, and is given to the nearest whole number.

I. The court below correctly concluded that all of the defendants had individually and collectively violated the Sherman Act in the manner found	8
Introduction	8
1. How this case was tried	8
2. Uncontested findings and conclusions	12
A. Each distributor-defendant was correctly found to be a party to a horizontal conspiracy to fix admission prices and playing positions of competing theatres and to be a party to a vertical conspiracy between it and its licensees to fix admission prices	14
1. The use by each distributor of license restrictions intended to suppress admission price competition between competing theatres is substantially undisputed	16
2. The substantially uniform use of such restrictions by the distributor defendants in a discriminatory manner is also demonstrated by undisputed evidence	19
B. The major defendants restrained trade in films unreasonably by pooling theatres with independent exhibitors	29
1. The Government's prima facie case showed that all pooling of theatre interests between the defendants and otherwise independent exhibitors had an unreasonable trade-restraining purpose and effect	31
2. The defendants failed to rebut the Government's proof of the trade-restraining purpose and effect of these relationships	35

I. The court below correctly concluded that all of the defendants had individually and collectively violated the Sherman Act in the manner found—Continued

C. The non-exhibitor defendants violated the Sherman Act by tying one copyrighted film to another through franchise agreements and seasonal block booking and by making master agreements 39

1. Block booking, in the form of franchises or otherwise, is a copyright licensing abuse which violates the Sherman Act.... 41

2. Universal and United Artists violated the Sherman Act by making master agreements 46

II. The prohibitions of which the defendants complain are, except for competitive bidding, the kind traditionally used to prevent similar Sherman Act violations 48

A. The principal relief granted against the major defendants is sustained by the findings which their appeals assume to be valid 48

B. The court was justified in making the defendants' clearance agreements prima facie invalid and imposing the burden of showing that such a restriction is reasonable upon the distributor granting it 53

C. The prohibition against theatre expansion in the judgment below was a less drastic provision than the major defendants' violations warranted 58

D. The court properly terminated the arbitration established by the consent decree 60

E. The prohibitions against block booking, franchises, and master agreements were no broader than required to terminate the violations found 61

III. Appellant-intervenors are not entitled to intervention of right below or here to litigate the form of the final judgment 64

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA[1]

ON APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the district court (R. 3504–3563) is reported in 66 F. Supp. 323, and its findings of fact, conclusions of law and decree (R. 3659–3701) are reported in 70 F. Supp. 53.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the district court was entered on December 31, 1946 (R. 3694). Timely motions of all defendants to amend the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment were ruled upon on February 10, 1947 (R. 3719–3720). Petitions for appeal were filed by Loew's, RKO, Fox and Warner Brothers on February 26, 1947 (R. 3726), by Paramount on February 26, 1947 (R. 3738), by Columbia on February 6, 1947 (R. 3751), by United Artists on February 20, 1947 (R. 3766), by Universal on February 20, 1947 (R. 3788), by American Theatres Association, Inc., et al. on February 25, 1947 (R. 3812–3813), and by W. C. Allred, et al. on February 28, 1947 (R. 3816). The appeals were allowed on the same day the petitions were filed (R. 3737, 3751, 3762, 3767, 3804, 3819) except for the appeal of American Theatres Association, Inc. et al., which was allowed on February 26, 1947 (R. 3811–3812).

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823, 36 Stat. 1167, 15 U. S. C. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157, 38 Stat. 804, 43 Stat. 938, 28 U. S. C. 345). In Nos. 80–84, this Court noted probable jurisdiction on June 23, 1947 (R. 3840). In Nos. 85 and 86, this Court, on the same day, postponed further consideration of the question of its jurisdiction to the hearing of the cases on the merits (R. 3841).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the trial court properly found that the defendants conspired with each other to fix admission prices and playing positions, and that each defendant distributor conspired with its exhibitors to fix admission prices.

2. Whether the trial court properly found that pooling arrangements pursuant to which theatre interests of the major defendants were combined with those of independent exhibitors violated the Sherman Act.

3. Whether the trial court properly found that Paramount, Columbia, and Universal violated the Sherman Act by conditioning the licensing of one copyrighted film upon the licensing of another.[2]

4. Whether the trial court properly held that the master agreements and franchises made by Universal and United Artists violated the Sherman Act.[3]

5. Whether the relief granted by the trial court was an appropriate means of terminating the violations referred to in the preceding questions.

---

[2] The trial court found that United Artists did not engage in this practice. The other defendants do not appeal from the court's findings and judgment in this respect.

[3] The other defendants do not appeal from the court's findings and judgment in this respect.

6. Whether the trial court properly terminated the system of arbitration established by the 1940 consent decree.

7.* Whether certain exhibitors were entitled to intervene below or here for the purpose of being heard in opposition to the competitive bidding provisions of the judgment.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The relevant provisions of the Sherman Act (Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. 1, et seq.) and of the Copyright Act (Act of March 4, 1909, 35 Stat. 1075, 17 U. S. C. 1) are set out at pp. 3–5 of the brief for the United States in No. 79, this Term.

STATEMENT

The facts are fully stated at pp. 5–46 of the brief for the United States in No. 79, this Term.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The appeals of six of the eight defendants assume that they have violated the Sherman Act, but all eight insist that the violations found below were more extensive than those they committed and that some or all of the relief granted should be set aside. Undisputed documentary evidence supplied by them shows that all eight were guilty of the precise forms of trade-restraining conduct found by the court below. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, shows that such conduct violates the Sherman Act and is unsanctioned by the Copyright Act. The provisions of the judgment appealed from are no broader than necessary to terminate the violations found and the only abuse of discretion below lies in the failure of the trial court to grant the relief sought on the Government's appeal.

I

All of the distributor defendants deliberately and with substantial uniformity used film licensing restrictions as a means of controlling and suppressing competition among theatres in selling the product of all to the public. This suppression was accomplished by an abuse of privileges granted by the Copyright Act. The Sherman Act would have been clearly violated by this use of copyright license restrictions even if they had not been used to give special protection to the theatres affiliated with the five major defendants. As the court below found, the net result of the conspiratorial use of these restrictions was the imposition of a system of fixed admission prices and theatre playing positions which benefited all eight distributors in all areas. However, the system also conferred special benefits upon the affiliated theatres in the areas where they operated and upon the large independent circuits in the areas where they operated.

The theatre pooling arrangements among the major defendants and between them and others were a striking manifestation of the suppression of competition inherent in the general conspiracy, but the trial court's judgment that such arrangements alone represented illegal theatre ownership arbitrarily cut off the major defendants' liability in a manner extremely favorable to them.

The findings as to illegality of the defendants' franchises, master agreements and seasonal block booking contracts are challenged only by the non-exhibitor defendants. The findings are sustained by agreements made by these defendants which, on their face, have precisely the same trade-restraining effects as those made by the other defendants. Their complaint is really that the prohibition of the future use of such restrictions works a hardship on them because such restrictions are necessary to counter-balance the market control of the major defendants resulting from their theatre affiliations.

II

All of the defendants, except Columbia, attack the prohibitions against price-fixing, systems of clearance, and the use of clearance to do anything more than give the licensee restrictive privileges which could be justified as reasonable under Sherman Act standards. A mere statement of the prohibitions attacked is adequate to show that they are necessary to prevent the continuance of the precise conspiracies and individual licensing practices found illegal below. Their validity therefore rests upon the validity of the findings discussed above.

The major defendants complain of the judgment against their theatre expansion, not upon the ground that it should not be subject to some judicial control, but upon the ground that the control should permit them to expand as a means of protecting their investments or entering a competitive field. To do this would be to sanction a continued expansion of the power to discriminate inherent in their vertical integration. Their assumption that their power to discriminate should be subject to continuous judicial regulation in this suit implies that continued possession of that power carries with it a continuing threat of discriminatory treatment of competitors in violation of the Sherman Act.

The complaint of the non-exhibitor defendants as to the judgment below is founded principally on their claim that since the major defendants may force their films into the market by the use of their affiliated theatres, the distributors without affiliated theatres are compelled to use franchises, block booking, and master agreements to force their films into the market. Since the judgment will terminate their privilege of securing an adequate share of the market by conspiracy with the major defendants, their complaint has practical merit. However, the only way to meet this objection by any judgment in this suit is not an exemption which will permit the continued use of illegal practices by them, but the adoption of provisions which will terminate the major defendants' illegal power. The net effect of all the appellants' arguments is to show that adequate relief in this suit requires the termination of that power by divorcement and cross-licensing relief, as shown in the Government's main brief.

ARGUMENT

I

The court below correctly concluded that all of the defendants had individually and collectively violated the Sherman Act in the manner found

Introduction

The manner in which this case was tried and the limited nature of the assignments of error on which most of the defendants rely show that the issues raised by their appeals are extremely narrow. We shall therefore summarize the kind of evidence in the record and the precise nature of their attacks upon the findings before answering their arguments.

1. How this case was tried.—The Government's case consisted of (1) an exposition of the corporate structure of each defendant (see App. pp.

446–462);[5] (2) the general manner in which the major defendants' theatre holdings had been acquired, with a description of the extent and location of their individual and joint holdings (see App. pp. 207–255); (3) the express agreements, with each other and with other exhibitors, by which the major defendants pooled theatre operations in particular areas (see App. pp. 137–206); (4) the printed forms of agreements used by all the defendants in licensing films (see App. pp. 1–18), and representative executed written agreements by which they licensed each other and their affiliates upon terms which eliminated competition among themselves and which discriminated against others (see App. pp. 61–136); (5) tabulations of film rentals paid by theatres affiliated with the defendants to all distributors and film rentals received by the defendants as distributors from all domestic theatres showing a concentration of film receipts in the hands of affiliated theatres in the areas where they operated and in the hands of all eight defendants as film distributors from exhibition throughout the country (see App. pp. 256–284); (6) tabulations showing the pattern of distribution of feature films of all eight defendants among the first run theatres in the principal cities of the United States (see App. pp. 299–308); (7) the particular restrictive provisions by which a substantially uniform run, clearance, and admission price structure in all of the principal cities was maintained (see Exs. 41, R. 173; 42, R. 173; 57–1—57–49, R. 185; 94, R. 203; 126–128 (R. 221, 222, 2159), 139–139B, R. 228, 2271; 144, R. 231; 365, R. 346; 369–1—369–6, R. 346, 347);[1] and (8) arbitration and appeal board decisions under the consent decree disclosing a wide variety of discriminatory effects of the defendants' licensing practice upon specific independent exhibitors (see App. pp. 403–446).

[5] The Appendix filed with our main brief contains a summary of documentary evidence sufficient to show the basis for the court's findings, since the printed record was prepared under a stipulation that no exhibits need be included in such printing (R. 3825). In view of the large number of exhibits, we have in some cases printed only excerpts from or digests of documents in evidence, and where statistical exhibits have been printed which are not self-explanatory, we have added a summary or recapitulation of such exhibits intended to show their significance in the case. Wherever such excerpts, digests, or additional matter is used, that fact appears upon the face of the Appendix.

[1] These exhibits are interrogatory answers which show the clearance and admission price restrictions contained in licenses made by each distributor defendant for the exhibition of the first block of films released during the 1943–44 season by all exhibitors licensed on first run in cities of 25,000 or more, all exhibitors licensed on second run in cities of 50,000 or more, all exhibitors licensed on third run in cities of 200,000 or more, and all exhibitors licensed on fourth run in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, and Detroit. All of these exhibits are now on file with the Clerk of this Court, most in printed form. They are each so voluminous that no attempt was made to print or reprint any of them in the Appendix. An index of all the exhibits in evidence, with a general description of each, has been prepared by the Government and will be filed in printed form.

The defense consisted of extensive testimony of the defendants' executives and affiliated exhibitors intended to show that some of their theatre interests were acquired to meet competitive threats from others, that their theatre pools were created for operating efficiency or purposes other than to restrain trade in films unreasonably, and that their substantially uniform and discriminatory restrictive licensing practices were a product of business necessity rather than a specific intention to restrain trade. They also offered statistical data which did not contradict but merely amplified the plaintiff's statistical proof (see App. pp. 286–298, 339–361). Their principal executives also denied in general terms any specific intent to produce the discriminatory and exclusionary effects resulting from each distributor-defendant's individual licensing practice and also denied the existence of any unlawful combination or general conspiracy to produce these effects. They offered affirmative testimony to show that there was competition among all the defendants in their production activities and that the major defendants received substantial economic benefits from their theatre ownership.

From the foregoing summary of the evidence it will be seen that at no point was there any substantial conflict as to facts subject to objective proof. The question of whether or not the defendants violated the Act thus rests upon the inferences to be drawn from evidence of basic competitive facts about their business largely supplied by them.

2. Uncontested findings and conclusions.—By their failure to assign error to many of the findings and conclusions, we must take as established on the major defendants' appeals the following facts:

Each of them has violated the Sherman Act, as a distributor, by agreeing individually with theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits to grant unreasonable clearance (conclusion 8 (e), R. 3693), by making master agreements and franchises with such licensees (conclusion 8 (f), R. 3693), and by individually conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films (conclusion 8 (g), R. 3693).

All five majors attack conclusion 9 (d), that as exhibitors they have violated the Sherman Act by "Conspiring with the distributor-defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission price, run, clearance and other license terms" (R. 3693). However, the error alleged is in failing to make this conclusion read "Conspiring with the distributor-defendants to receive discriminatory license privileges as found in Finding No. 110 above" (R. 3735, 3748). The license privileges described in Finding No. 110 are contract provisions which discriminate "against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits" (R. 3681). These privileges are suspension of contract liability while a theatre remains closed, large film selection and elimination rights, film rental deductions where double bills are played, move-over, extended run and road-show privileges, underage and overage (the practice of using excess film rental earned in one circuit theatre to fulfill a rental commitment defaulted by another), unlimited playing time, exclusion of foreign and independently produced pictures, and the right to question the distributors' rental classification (R. 3681).

Thus their appeals assume that each has, as an exhibitor, made license agreements with other distributor-defendants and has, as a distributor, made license agreements with other exhibitor-defendants which discriminate against competing licensees and that such discriminations violated the Sherman Act.

Columbia attacks only the findings of fact (R. 3753, 3756) and conclusions of law (R. 3759) relating to block booking and blind selling. It thus assumes upon its appeal that it was correctly found to have violated the Sherman Act by conspiring with the other distributor-defendants and with its licensees to fix theatre admission prices generally and by discriminating in favor of the affiliated circuits and large independent circuits.

United Artists (R. 3767–3786) and Universal (R. 3789–3804) attack all of the findings that show a violation of the Act by them.

Since all of the defendants except Columbia challenge the court's findings of a general conspiracy among them as distributors to fix admission prices and playing positions of competing theatres, and a conspiracy between each of them and their licensees to fix their relative admission prices, we shall first show that the conspiracy findings were correct and then show that the particular defendants challenging other findings of individual unreasonable restraints by them were also correctly found to have violated the Sherman Act in these respects.

A. Each distributor-defendant was correctly found to be a party to a horizontal conspiracy to fix admission prices and playing positions of competing theatres and to be a party to a vertical conspiracy between it and its licensees to fix admission prices.

The court below found a horizontal conspiracy among all of the eight defendants, as distributors, to fix the admission prices and playing positions of all competing theatres by restrictive license provisions which controlled the run on which each theatre was to play, the minimum admission price which it should charge for that run, and the intervals between runs in competing theatres (R. 3670–3673). The trial court also found a vertical conspiracy between each distributor-defendant and its licensees to fix the admission prices of theatres competing with each other in exhibiting each dis-tributor's films (R. 3672). This result was accomplished by precisely the same license restrictions which were used to effectuate the horizontal conspiracy.

The court inferred the existence of the horizontal conspiracy among all distributors from their substantially uniform application of license restrictions in dealing with the same theatres (R. 3670) and a discriminatory application of those uniform restrictions in dealing with theatres affiliated with the defendants and with other large circuits (R. 3674). The eight vertical conspiracies were based upon subsidiary findings that each of the competing licensees knew the admission price restrictions which were being applied to its competitors' theatres when its license was made and was therefore a party to the maintenance by the distributor of restrictions which regulated price competition among all theatres of a particular competitive area in exhibiting its films (R. 3681–3682).

As noted above (pp. 10–12), the defendants cannot successfully challenge the accuracy of these subsidiary findings, and their effort to overturn the court's ultimate conclusions must rest upon whether or not the court was justified in drawing its ultimate inferences of conspiracy from the undisputed facts on which they were premised. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, expressly held that a conscious uniform application of admission price restrictions against independent competitors of a large circuit was itself a proper basis for finding a horizontal conspiracy among these distributors. Since the same case also sustained a holding that Paramount alone could not impose the same restrictions against other independent competitors of the circuit in other areas where they were not imposed by any other distributor, it was also a clear holding that independently of any conspiracy among distributors, the use of admission price restrictions by a single distributor to suppress price competition between theatres was also unlawful. That case, therefore, is alone conclusive on both conspiracy issues raised here unless it can be shown that the court's subsidiary findings which demonstrate that the purpose of their license restrictions was to control price competition (and are thus not sanctioned by the Copyright Act) are erroneous.

1. The use by each distributor of license restrictions intended to suppress admission price competition between competing theatres is substantially undisputed.—As pointed out in our main brief at pp. 98–101, the defendants' film licenses habitually impose explicit restrictions upon the use of their films, the effect of which is to stipulate admission prices for theatrical entertainment to which their sole contribution is the supplying of a positive print on a rental basis. Since the stipulated admission price is generally the price charged by the theatre for all films, such price-fixing bears no relation to the quality of the exhibition rights granted by any particular license. The elaborate series of restrictions on simultaneous or subsequent rental of prints of the same film to competing theatres, embodied in these licenses in the form of "run" and "clearance" or "protection" provisions are simply devices for fixing price differentials between competing theatres in order to maintain their relative playing position. Thus each series of such restrictions used by any single distributor is a system of price control in which each licensee consciously participates.

That such restrictions were used by each distributor to control admission prices of competing theatres appears on the face of clearance schedules in evidence. A clearance schedule which shows the manner in which the playing positions of all theatres in a large metropolitan area are related to their admission prices is Exhibit 369–6 (R. 347), a memorandum dated October 27, 1941, which sets out the clearance granted by United Artists to theatres affiliated with Paramount in Chicago and its suburbs. In this city, as disclosed in Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U. S. 251, and by this schedule, the playing positions of all theatres are fixed for clearance purposes as first run downtown, "A" pre-release (4th, 5th and 6th week after first run downtown), "B" pre-release (7th and 8th weeks after first run downtown), "C" pre-release (9th week after first run downtown), 1st week of general release (10th week after first run downtown), 2nd week of general release (11th week after first run downtown), etc. The admission prices governing these playing positions are set forth on the first page of this schedule as "'A' pre-release—Matinee 30¢—Evening 50¢—children at all times 15¢", with a separate schedule of admission prices for each playing position. Such a schedule merely illustrates in concrete form an obvious use of clearance as a device for controlling price competition among theatre operators.

That, in general, clearance intervals are geared to admission price differentials was tacitly admitted by defense witnesses Kupper (R. 1212–1213), Reagan (R. 718), and Keough (R. 951–959). Even though in many first run contracts the applicable minimum prices were not inserted in the license contract, this was claimed to be inadvertent and there was still an implied agreement to maintain the established price (R. 1210–1211). The close relationship between such prices and clearance restrictions is also shown by the standard license provisions, which reduce clearance as a penalty for admission price reduction. See App. p. 2 (Columbia) Ex. 286; p. 6 (Fox) Ex. 276; p. 8 (Loew) Ex. 278; p. 18 (RKO) Ex. 282; p. 17 (Universal) Ex. 290; p. 11 (Paramount) Ex. 280.

Even if the evidence showed that each distributor had independently maintained such systems, it would have been guilty of a conspiracy with its licensees to violate the Sherman Act. See

Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373. But the evidence shows that they also maintained such systems by agreement with each other.

2. The substantially uniform use of such restrictions by the distributor-defendants in a discriminatory manner is also demonstrated by undisputed evidence.—There is no dispute about the substantial uniformity of the application of the price restrictions in question by all the defendants in dealing with the same theatres. The defendants do challenge the court's finding of a horizontal conspiracy, upon the ground that the uniformity was simply a product of normal business methods desired by exhibitors. But even if it appeared that the system of admission price control described above had been uniformly applied without any intent to injure competition, it would illegally deprive the theatre-going public of the benefits it is presumed to obtain from price competition. See United States v. Socony-Vacuum Co., 310 U. S. 150, 221–222. Moreover, as applied here, it was plainly intended to injure independent exhibitors as well.

The evidence here shows a discriminatory application of such price control which is a natural consequence of the dual interest of the major defendants in protecting their theatre operating profits as well as film rentals, in areas where their affiliated theatres operate in direct competition with independents. For example, the clearance schedules agreed to by Fox, Columbia, Loew, and RKO for the exhibition of their films in Warner theatres first run in Appelton, Kenosha, Oshkosh, Racine, and Sheboygan, Wisconsin (Exs. 42, 139, 57—49, 94, R. 173, 228, 185, 203), provide that these theatres shall have clearance of 30 days over all others in those towns charging the same admission prices. The schedules go on to provide for clearances of 50 days, in the same situations, where the competitors' admission price is 5 cents less than Warner's and proceed to step up the clearance to 142 days in the situations where the theatres charge 35 cents less than the Warner first runs. On its face, a schedule of that character is plainly calculated to discriminate against Warner's competitors in those areas by establishing extensive clearance in favor of the Warner houses even where there is no admission price differential, and by expanding that clearance proportionately in cases where admission price differentials occur.

A similar discriminatory application of admission price restrictions occurs where the affiliated theatre is left free to fix its own price while the independent is controlled by a contract price. As Mullin, a Paramount partner, and Friedl, chief executive of one of its wholly owned exhibition affiliates, testified (R. 968, 999), the Paramount affiliates fix their own admission prices; as the exchange of letters between Mochrie of RKO and exhibitor Weiss of Macon, Georgia, showed, if one of these affiliated exhibitors (in that case Lucas and Jenkins) chooses to reduce his prior run admission price to the same price as that charged by an independent playing on a following run, the independent protests in vaid (Exs. 388, 389, R. 2236).

As shown by their interrogatory answers 6 through 11 (Exs. 41, 42, R. 173, Fox; Exs. 57–1 through 57–49, R. 185, Loew; Ex. 82, R. 196, Paramount; Ex. 94, R. 203, RKO; and Exs. 126–128, R. 221–222, 2159, Warner), in licensing their affiliated theatres the major defendants frequently enter into no formal contract, or if they do make a formal contract, the minimum admission price restrictions are frequently not filled in. Where the degree of affiliation is such that these theatres are in fact controlled by the major distributor in question, the terms of the agreements it makes with its own theatre affiliates are not decisive, in any event, but it is clear that this affiliation, in itself, provides an ever-present incentive for admission price discrimination. By leaving an affiliated theatre in a position where it could reduce first run prices to eliminate competition while independent competitors were at the same time held by their contracts to a fixed minimum price for the same films, the major defendants, as distributors, could and did protect their own affiliates from normal price competition.

Opportunities for similar admission price discriminations were extended by one major defendant to the theatres of another. This is shown by the general provision incorporated in the licenses made between the Warner circuit and Loew for the 1943–44 season, which gave Warner the right to reduce its first run admission prices as much as 25 percent, providing a 15 cent evening adult minimum was maintained.[1] Similarly, in dealing with Fox in Los Angeles, Loew made an express agreement with Fox, contained in a letter agreement dated September 15, 1943, attached to the license contract for that season (Ex. 249, R. 270), which gave Fox the right to reduce its admission price "not more than (25%) or ($.10), whichever is greater," below the September 1, 1940 price, provided that it did not go below $.15 or the price charged by a competing theatre on a following run. The effect of such discriminatory application of admission price restrictions is simply to intensify in specific local situations the general discrimination implicit in a system of admission price control collectively administered by theatre-owning distributors.

The precise kind of admission price discrimination condemned in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, was thus disclosed by this record to be inherent in the major defendants' standard practice.[8] The discrimination there resulted from compelling the independent theatres to increase their admission price to the 25-cent level maintained by Interstate's subsequent theatres, while permitting the latter theatres to maintain their run priority over the independent;[9] precisely the same adverse effect on the independent's ability to compete results from permitting the circuit operator to drop his admission price to the independent's level while maintaining run priority. In either event, the independent theatre operator is prevented from adjusting his admission price to the value of the entertainment he offers and the public is deprived of the obvious benefits derived from competitive pricing of what it buys.

Clearance arbitration under the consent decree also demonstrated a uniform use by the major defendants of restrictions which discriminated

[8] The record in Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, No. 10 this Term, also shows similar discrimination in favor of a large independent circuit. RKO points, at p. 63 of its brief, to a concession of Government counsel, made for the purpose of that case, that the court might assume these defendants' price-fixing restrictions to be lawful practices if employed in a reasonable manner. RKO's brief neglects to point out that notwithstanding the breadth of that concession, RKO and the other distributor-defendants here were found to have conspired with Schine to employ such restrictions in a manner which discriminated against Schine's smaller competitors.

[9] See Interstate Circuit record, first appeal, Nos. 709, 710, Oct. Term, 1937, Vol. 135, pp. 141, 149, 174, 185, 196.

against independent competitors. Thus, in the Matter of Bailey, App. Bd. No. 24 (Ex. 2), the Appeal Board found that the Bailey Theatre in affiliated hands had played with clearance from all of the major defendants over the affiliated Kensington. When the Bailey passed to independent hands and the Kensington remained affiliated, the situation was reversed by four of the major defendants and the Kensington was given clearance over the Bailey. See App. pp. 406–407. Similarly, in Overton, Texas, where a Paramount affiliate failed to serve the town adequately, the townspeople built a new theatre. When the new theatre was opened, the Paramount affiliate, Jefferson Amusement Co., opened a second old theatre, played all the major defendants' films on first run, and compelled the new independent theatre to play a second run 60 days after its first run, notwithstanding that this theatre was compelled to charge as high an admission price as Jefferson's first run theatres (see App. pp. 444–446).

The defendants offered no rebuttal of the Government's proof of discrimination except by testimony that they had no general policy or agreement to discriminate between affiliated and unaffiliated theatres, independent circuits and small independent exhibitors.

While all of them were, of course, extremely well supplied with factual data in their own files as to what their practice has been in specific situations, as disclosed by agreements they actually made with the theatres that licensed their films, none offered any executed license agreements or any summary of the terms of a group of license agreements made with the exhibitors of any particular class in any particular area to show that their performance measured up to their professions of a non-discriminatory policy. All except United Artists [10] relied merely upon proclamations by their chief sales executives that their policy was not to discriminate. Since the policy of all of them as it affects independent exhibitors is principally carried out in the field by persons whose testimony was not offered, that is to say, the exchange managers and salesmen (R. 681–682, 839–840, 1419–1420, 1312, 1055, 1468, 1505–1506, 1728, 534), there was little to be gained by testing these generalities through cross examination of the witnesses who were offered.

Under these circumstances, the production of unverified oral generalizations as to their performance, when concrete proof in documentary form as to what their performance has been was at hand, gave rise to the inference that the primary evidence in their control which they failed to offer was unfavorable to them. See Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, [10] United Artists offered no testimony of any person who negotiated licenses with exhibitors, large or small. Lazarus, its contract manager, merely said that the contracts taken for the exhibition of United Artists' pictures passed over his desk (R. 1406–1407).

225, 226. In any event, the concrete evidence of discriminatory licensing practices offered by plaintiff could not be overcome by general protestations of a contrary policy. Schroble v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 62 F. 2d 993, 996 (C. C. A. 2). Cf. Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293, 298.

The evidence of the major defendants to the effect that there was no exchange of information between their respective distribution and theatre departments suggests that the conspiracy made it unnecessary to obtain information which, in a competitive industry, would be essential. Their sales executives testified that they are not advised as to data in their respective theatre department's files which is of vital interest to them as distributors in licensing their films, to wit, the terms on which their theatre affiliates deal with their so-called competitors in the film distribution field (R. 534–535, 688–689, 1109–1110, 1511, 1725).[11]

Only two defendants offered any explanation whatsoever of this odd alleged practice. Paramount attempted to show that this nonexchange of information was a consequence of a program of decentralized theatre operations, but Goldenson, the head of Paramount's theatre department and Reagan, its sales head, are not decentralized, as they are both located in New York (R. 666, 824). Their asserted nonexchange of data which would normally be vital to the efficient conduct of both businesses cannot be explained in terms of decentralized theatre-operating policy, because Goldenson did receive summaries at New York of the general terms on which some of Paramount's 100% theatre affiliates licensed films from others (R. 839).[12]

Harry Warner said (R. 1559) that he operates the distribution and theatre-operating divisions of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. as separate departments because it is more efficient to do it that way. The record shows that he not only operates them as separate departments, but through separate corporations, which may be a more efficient form of operation than a single corporation would provide, yet it hardly explains the failure of the two "departments" to exchange data which would normally be an extremely useful guide to efficient competitive behavior.

But, assuming their complete truth, the assertions as to the way the major defendants carry on their businesses are entirely inconsistent with any claim of genuine film licensing competition among them. The sales departments of these integrated business units may only close their eyes to this vital information in their theatre departments' possession as to what their alleged competitors

[12] According to Reagan, he has tried unsuccessfully to get this data from Paramount's theatre department, but has no interest in it (R. 690). In trying to explain this inconsistency upon questioning by the court (R. 690), Reagan conceded that if he knew that his competitors were getting better terms from Paramount's affiliates he could improve his own.

are currently doing and still operate these businesses with a decent regard for their stockholders, upon the assumption that they need not concern themselves with current competitive developments.[18] Such an assumption is entirely consistent with the absence of any significant changes in the general pattern of first run distribution of the defendants' pictures among the affiliated theatres during the past ten years pointed out in our main brief at p. 18. This stable pattern and this practice both confirm a working agreement among these defendants not to compete with one another in licensing films.

Under such conditions it is clearly unnecessary for the distribution and theatre departments of the major defendants to exchange currently the license terms data in their possession. Any serious conflict among the major defendants as to the [18] It is also true that if Loew has furnished Fox with certified statements for ten years under its Washington, D. C. franchise (Ex. 188, App. p. 76), as to the terms on which Loew licensed its films in its own first run theatres, Kupper, the Fox general sales manager, has a fairly accurate idea as to what Fox ought to get for its films for first run in Washington in the same theatres without making inquiry of the Fox theatre department as to the terms on which it is licensing Loew's films. Thus, the failure to exchange information between the theatre department and the distribution department of a single integrated business unit may also be explained in terms of past exchange of information among the various distributor affiliates of these units. None of their sales executives denied such an interchange, their general denial of receipt of information as to other distributor's terms being carefully confined to current negotiations (R. 689–690, 1725, 436, 1511, 1109–1110).

terms they ought to get from each other may, and under the circumstances disclosed by this record, normally would be settled at the presidential level as they involve substantial policy rather than competitive considerations.[14]

In short, the documentary evidence of a concerted discriminatory suppression of independent competition was unrebutted and the defendants' affirmative testimony tended to implicate rather than exculpate them. The court below was clearly correct in finding that the entire run, clearance, and admission price structure was maintained by license agreements made by the defendants with each other and with theatre operators generally which were expressly calculated to discriminate against small independent exhibitors and to deprive the public of competitive pricing of the defendants' films.

B. The major defendants restrained trade in films unreasonably by pooling theatres with independent exhibitors

The major defendants all attack the provisions of the judgment dissolving theatre pooling arrangements between them and independent exhib-

[14] Harry Warner said that "if any question should arise which affected more than one department, the question should be cleared through me directly." (R. 1559). None of the major defendants' presidents claimed that both theatre operating and film distribution data was unavailable to or not examined by them. It was thus plainly usable in determining policies of these defendants toward each other and their competitors even if it had not been exchanged by the theatre-operating and film-distributing subsidiaries.

itors which involve ownership of stock in theatre corporations, and prohibiting the creation of similar arrangements in the future. This part of the court's judgment is limited to theatre corporations in which a defendant owns an interest of more than 5 and less than 95 percent and in which a "former, present, or putative" independent exhibitor owns a similar interest (R. 3699). It is thus expressly limited to those situations where a continuance of the relationship has a necessary tendency to protect the defendants against competition from persons who might otherwise compete with them in operating theatres.

These defendants make no objection to the provisions of the judgment which prohibit the continuance or creation of similar relationships by theatre leases or operating agreements (Pars. (2), (3), (4), Section III; R. 3698–3699), but they challenge the court's findings (Fdg. 67, R. 3671; Fdgs. 112–116, R. 3682–3683) which directly support those provisions since those findings also support the dissolution of the corporate relationships here involved. The pooling arrangements maintained by express agreement were ordered dissolved by July 1, 1947, and substantial compliance with this provision has already occurred. The defendants' position here thus comes down simply to a claim that they should be able to control potential price competition between themselves and independents through maintenance of stock interests in theatre corporations, although such control is obviously unreasonable when maintained by express lease or operating agreement.

The propriety of the remedy adopted by the court to cure the illegality inherent in these corporate relationships is discussed in Point II, infra, at pages 56—60. It is sufficient to note here that the defendants also seek permission to justify the maintenance of such existing relationships by showing in this suit, at some future date, that such relationships will not unreasonably restrain competition.[15] The argument which follows is limited to showing that the court's conclusion that all of the defendants' theatre pools, whether maintained through express agreement or by stock interests, were an unreasonable restraint of competition (R. 3683, 3693), is amply supported by evidence which the defendants failed to rebut at the trial, despite adequate opportunity to do so.

1. The Government's prima facie case showed that all pooling of theatre interests between the defendants and otherwise independent exhibitors had an unreasonable trade-restraining purpose and effect.—The complaint challenged the legality of partial interests held by the defendants in theatres in which independent exhibitors were also interested and put them on notice that the judgment might divest them of such interests." The Government proved as part of its case in chief the number and location of all theatres in which the defendants owned interests of any kind or degree, the names of the corporations through which they were held, and the extent of the defendants' interests in such corporations. The remainder of its case in chief showed that these and all other forms of theatre pooling in which the defendants engaged did more than merely eliminate potential competition between the defendants and independents involved. This evidence showed that they were created or maintained as a direct result of the major defendants' unlawful control of the playing positions and admission price policies of all independent theatres, described in the preceding section.

The direct connection between the major defendants' power to discriminate in supplying films and the creation of such relationships was amply demonstrated by the theatre pooling agreements, digested at App. 160–206. Thirteen of these agreements [17] involved otherwise independent interests. They show on their face that such pools restricted the independent parties' exhibition interests to particular areas (App. pp. 123, 163, 168), established joint control of the playing positions and admission prices of their theatres (App. pp. 122, 163, 164, 165, 166, 175, 176, 177, 178, 190, 191, 192), secured a share of the profits from their operations for the defendants (App. pp. 121, 163, 164, 165, 168, 177, 190, 192), and made films available to them which could not have been otherwise licensed from the defendants involved (App. pp. 121, 163, 165, 167, 175, 176, 190, 191).

[16] The complaint charged that each major defendant was an illegal combination which, inter alia, had coerced independent exhibitors into "relinquishing control of their theatres or a share of the profits thereof" by express or implied threats to deprive them of access to its films (R. 3196–3197). Part of the relief sought against such combinations was that the defendants be divested "of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, in any theatres" which the court should find had been used to violate the Sherman Act. (Par. 7, R. 3200.)

The court's finding that these corporate relationships not only suppressed competition between the theatres immediately involved but were aimed at others outside the pool (Fdg. 113, R. 3682) is further supported by the use of the pooled interests in furtherance of the general conspiracy. The evidence shows that the same discriminatory advantages extended by the defendant-distributors to their own theatres were extended to their pooled theatres. Thus the "formula deal" between Paramount and Evergreen Theatres Corporation (50 percent owned by Fox) (Ex. 241, App. pp. 45–50) follows closely in form the "formula deals" made between Paramount and its own exhibitor partners (Ex. 399, App. pp. 125–126). These "formula deals" in effect allocate film rental among the various affiliated circuits covered by them, each circuit paying an arbitrary percentage of a film's national gross unrelated to the actual performance of the film in the theatres licensed.[18]

The pooling agreements in evidence together with the use of all theatre pools in furtherance of the conspiracy were properly regarded by the court below as decisive of the purpose and competitive effect of pooling arrangements which took the form of ownership by a defendant and an independent of a theatre owning or operating corporation. The same results were accomplished through such joint ownership without further agreement, but the operating agreements in evidence made the purpose and effect of all such arrangements crystal clear. The defendants were free to show at the trial, if they could, that there were exceptional circumstances which might rebut the presumption of illegality resulting from the defendants' demonstrated illegal creation and use of similar arrangements. They were unable to do so and the assertion in their briefs that such circumstances may exist is hardly an occasion for relitigating their legality. No claim was made below that they had no fair opportunity to litigate that question at the trial and any such claim now has no support in the record.

2. The defendants failed to rebut the Government's proof of the trade-restraining purpose and effect of these relationships.—The defendants presented extensive testimony by some of the exhibitors involved in theatre pools with defendants which gave the complete history of these relationships (see Mullin, R. 962–985; Beatty, R. 1030–1042, 2489–2492; and Newman, R. 1999–2034). They also presented lengthy testimony of other exhibitors involved in similar relationships with them which showed the competitive position and physical characteristics of the theatres involved, but did not attempt to explain why the theatres were pooled. See Exs. P–25 (R. 1928); P–25A (R. 2492) (339 pages of affidavits, largely made by Paramount partners and their employees).

The history of all of the defendants' theatre acquisitions, of any kind, was covered by extensive testimony of defendants' theatre executives (R. 838–938, 985–1027, 1824–1826, 1966–1988, 2035–2132r), introduction of which was facilitated by a stipulation that affidavits might serve in lieu of oral testimony. No testimony offered by the defendants to justify their ownership of a total or partial interest in any theatre anywhere was excluded. The failure of this voluminous evidence to show any legitimate need for the defendants' extensive joint ownership of theatres with exhibitors who might otherwise compete with them is shown by the complete lack of reliance upon such evidence in their arguments in support of their attack on the finding that such ownership constituted an unreasonable restraint. Where such evidence descended from mere statements of innocent intentions to specific reasons for the creation and maintenance of specific joint relationships, the justification was simply in terms of the obvious business advantages resulting from a cooperative operation of theatres in a particular community rather than a competitive one. The failure of the defendants to offer any evidence whatsoever to justify most of their pooling relationships, was itself a strong indication that any attempt to become explicit about the reasons for their creation and maintenance would have done the defendants more harm than good.

The trial court's conclusion that these relationships were a direct result of the defendants' power to discriminate against independents in licensing films and were intended to suppress competition of others, as well as between the parties, received affirmative support from defense witnesses. Upon cross-examination of those who gave oral testimony, the Government was able to show that, in a number of instances, the films of a major defendant were made available to an independent theatre on first run only while a defendant owned an interest in it (R. 577–586, 955–959, 1221–1222). In one instance, the acquisition of a partial interest in an independent theatre which followed such discrimination led directly to the creation of a closed town by acquisition of the remaining independent theatres (R. 1222).

The witness Thalheimer, the only exhibitor called by any of the defendants who was not involved in a pool of some kind with one or more of them, was apparently selected to show that an independent could thrive in opposition to affiliated theatres. He owns three first run and six subsequent run theatres in Richmond, Virginia, where Loew has a first run theatre of its own (R. 1379), and an interest in two other first run theatres (R. 486) operated by Wilmer & Vincent (R. 1379). Upon his cross-examination it appeared that Loew and Wilmer & Vincent had in 1940, through a corporation in which both were interested, threatened Thalheimer's subsequent run business by building one subsequent run theatre and half completing another (R. 1403). Whereupon Thalheimer paid Loew and Wilmer & Vincent $6,800 each to abandon construction of the half-completed theatre (R. 1404). The pendency of this suit was apparently all that stood in the way of a settlement of that controversy by a transfer of an interest in Thalheimer's business instead of the payment of money.

Even as matters now stand, Loew and each of the major defendants has an accurate count of Thalheimer's receipts in all his theatres which play their films on percentage by virtue of elaborate auditing privileges specified in their licenses. See App. pp. 36–45 and Exs. 276, 278, 280, 282, and 284 (R. 273–274). In this respect they can and do obtain information, normally available only to shareholders, as to the business of every so-called independent theatre operator. The independence of any of these operators is dubious so long as they are faced with potential competition from vital sources of supply which have continuous access to the confidential details of their business."

The trial court, in any event, could not have recognized actual ownership by the major defendants of any theatre business in combination with independent exhibitors as a reasonable arrangement without ignoring completely their habitual use of advantages inherent in their vertical integration to control independent competition wherever it may exist, by all available means.

We believe that the trial court was clearly in error in failing to recognize all degrees of theatre ownership by the major defendants as continuing unreasonable restraints on competition, as shown at pages 90–119 of our main brief. When it restricted its findings of unlawful ownership to pooling arrangements in effect at the time of the trial it cut off liability in an arbitrary manner which was extremely favorable to the defendants. We respectfully submit that their claim that the line of demarcation between lawful and unlawful ownership was arbitrarily drawn supports the Government's argument for divorcement rather than their appeals.

[19] In April or May of 1945, Columbia, Paramount, RKO, Universal, and United Artists formed an agency called "Confidential Reports, Inc." to perform for them this auditing and checking function (R. 1322). The entire stock of this corporation was owned by them at the time of the trial (R. 1323). It is now owned by those five defendants and Fox and Warner.

C. The non-exhibitor defendants violated the Sherman Act by tying one copyrighted film to another through franchise agreements and seasonal block booking and by making master agreements.

Franchise agreements are film licenses which grant exhibition rights in a group of film copyrights which the licensor contemplates making available to the licensee over a period of more than one year (R. 3660). Block booking is the practice of licensing one copyrighted feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature, or group of features (R. 3659–3660). Universal and Columbia customarily make a single license with each exhibitor for all of the films they intend to release over a one-year period, which the exhibitor contracts to exhibit. At the time either a single season agreement or a franchise is made, substantially all of the copyrights involved have not yet issued. Master agreements are film licenses which may cover exhibition rights in only a single copyright but which fix blanket rental terms for an entire circuit of theatres (R. 3660).

The district court found that all of the distributor defendants had violated the Sherman Act by making master agreements and franchises with affiliated circuits and large independent circuits (R. 3693). It also found that each distributor-defendant, except United Artists, had violated the Sherman Act by conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon acceptance by the licensee of one or more others (R. 3693). It accordingly enjoined these defendants from making franchises and master agreements and from conditioning the right to exhibit one feature upon the licensee's taking one or more other features (R. 3696).

As already noted, the only defendants which question the court's findings and injunction as to master agreements and franchises are Universal and United Artists. Universal and Columbia challenge the court's findings and relief as to block booking. Paramount objects to the block booking relief (R. 3746), but does not assign error to the findings on which it is based. Columbia and Universal insist that they did not in fact condition their film licenses in the manner found and also assert that such conditioning is not a violation of the Sherman Act.

Since a franchise is simply an extreme form of block booking, we shall treat the appeals of Universal and Columbia with respect to both franchises and block booking together and show that such practices involve not only a violation of the Sherman Act but a serious abuse of copyright license privileges as well. We shall then show the illegality of the master agreements made by Universal and United Artists.

1. Block booking, in the form of franchises or otherwise, is a copyright licensing abuse which violates the Sherman Act.—"The sole interest of the United States and the primary object" in granting a copyright is to receive "benefits bestowed by the genius and meditations and skill of individuals * * *" Fox Film Corp. v. Doyal, 286 U. S. 123, 127. If the financial rewards to individual copyright owners are to serve their public purpose the reward of each owner must be directly related to the quality of his copyright. A single license which makes available exhibition rights in a large number of copyrights (most of which have not even been created) to an exhibitor upon restrictive terms uniformly applicable to all of them, is a form of license deliberately intended to equalize rather than differentiate the reward for the individual copyrights involved in the license.

An extreme example of a license which completely submerges the identity of a large group of miscellaneous copyrights in fixing exhibition terms is the franchise, Ex. 261, printed at App. pp. 50–58. Interstate Circuit there agreed to pay a weekly rental of $5,000 for the use of Universal's features, westerns, serials, and short subjects to be released during a three-year period. Such an agreement ties up a substantial segment of the playing time available in the circuit's theatres for a period of years without regard to the merits of the licensor's product and thus prevents other distributors from competing for that playing time upon the merits of such films as they may have available during those years. It also commits a substantial part of the film supply to the circuit's theatres without any consideration of the merits of competing theatres as outlets for the product. It is difficult to see how a more obviously unreasonable restraint of trade in films could be created by agreement.

Both Universal and Columbia habitually made franchises with affiliates of the major defendants and large independent circuits which had the trade-restraining purpose and effects explicitly found below (R. 3681–3682). This finding is supported by the provisions of the franchises in evidence made by Columbia and Universal, which are digested at App. pp. 86–87, 103–105, 109–110, 118–119, and 127–131.[20]

[20] Both Columbia and Universal had franchises current at the time of the trial covering numerous theatres affiliated with the major defendants. The franchises themselves were

As already noted, the unreasonable purpose and effect of these agreements is unquestioned by the affiliated exhibitor parties and Columbia has also assigned no error to the finding of this purpose and effect by the court below (conclusion 8 (d), (e), (f), R. 3692–3693). Columbia apparently insists that franchises are not agreements which are intended to tie a group of copyrights together for a trade-restraining purpose, but this effect is apparent from the face of such agreements, as noted above. Universal does not appear to deny the unreasonable competitive effects of these franchises, but complains that the court's judgment prevents it from making other franchises with small independents for the purpose of enabling them to compete with affiliated and large independent circuits. Their complaint, like Paramount's against block booking, is really that the relief against franchises was too broad, rather than entirely unwarranted, and it is therefore discussed in Section II, infra.

season or less also seems to be primarily directed at the form of the judgment rather than the finding that they had engaged in such a practice. Montague and Scully, the respective sales managers of Columbia and Universal, conceded that their general practice was to license in a single block as much of their season's product as they could and that the films were priced and the customers selected in accordance with this policy (R. 1313–1314, 1470). Their counsel also insist that this method of licensing is necessary to supply a relatively stable market for their product. Their block booking practice, of course, could not accomplish that end unless exhibitors were actually induced by this practice to make licenses for films which they did not particularly desire as a means of securing more valuable films that they had to have for profitable operation.[20a]

[20a] Under the standard block booking practice followed by Columbia and Universal, the exhibitor commits himself to take a group of films not yet produced or copyrighted—he often buys nothing more than the assurance that a well-known star will appear in a proposed picture. Under such circumstances, it has been recognized that the dramatic material involved in films makes a relatively small contribution to the total revenue received from the film. Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Corporation, 309 U. S. 390. Thus, the restraint which occurs by reason of his commitment to take a block of proposed films occurs prior to and is not related to the copyright to be secured upon the films when produced. Clearly, therefore, it would not be justified by reason of the Copyright Act—whatever restraints might lawfully be imposed after the issuance of a copyright, which, in any event, includes no tying privilege. In block booking the restraint is the cause, rather than the result, of the copyright.

Thus there is a serious dispute only as to the extent to which these defendants actually insisted upon the licensing of exhibition rights under one copyright as a condition of licensing similar rights in another and as to the form of the relief. There is no doubt that the practice condemned by the court was actually used by these defendants in the conduct of their business, and the real issue raised by their appeals as to block booking, as it is with respect to franchises, is simply whether or not the relief granted against them was broader than necessary. We shall show in Point II, infra, that it was not.

2. Universal and United Artists violated the Sherman Act by making master agreements.—As we have already shown, the argument of all of the defendants, except Universal and United Artists, assumes that they have made master agreements in the past which unreasonably restrain trade and that the relief granted against a repetition of this practice in the judgment below was proper. We shall show here that both United Artists and Universal have made master agreements which had the trade-restraining effects condemned by the court below, and we shall show in Point II, infra, that the relief granted in this respect was proper.

A master agreement differs from a franchise in that it may apply to the exhibition of only a single feature, and both forms of agreement are commonly used in dealing with theatre circuits. Both frequently license exhibition rights in a large number of theatres upon rental terms which bear no relation to the competitive merits of the theatres in which the particular runs licensed are to be exhibited. A master agreement, by its blanket film rental, prevents any comparison of competitive offers of a particular theatre for a particular run because it completely obscures the terms on which any particular theatre it covers is licensed. It thus arbitrarily prevents consideration of competing offers for the exhibition privileges embodied in the license, and thus unreasonably restrains the competition of exhibitors for the privilege of licensing the picture or pictures covered.

The franchise made by Universal, discussed above, was also in form a master agreement which took no more account of the diverse merits of the numerous theatres it covered than of the copyrights included. Master agreements in evidence made by United Artists, which show on their face similar trade-restraining effects are Exs. 270, 270A, App. pp. 112–113; Ex. 273, App. p. 116; Ex. 383, App. p. 117; Ex. 476, App. pp. 134–136. According to its interrogatory answers 6 through 11 (Ex. 369, R. 346), United Artists was unable to supply film rentals received for specific runs licensed to Warner Bros., Fox, and a number of Paramount affiliates,[21] because their master deals made no allocation of the blanket film rental involved to any of the theatres covered. Thus there is no serious dispute that either of these defendants engaged in the practices which the court found to violate the Act or that those practices had the trade-restraining effects which the court found.

II

The prohibitions of which the defendants complain are, except for competitive bidding, the kind traditionally used to prevent similar Sherman Act violations

A. The principal relief granted against the major defendants is sustained by the findings which their appeals assume to be valid

The brief of each major defendant assumes that it should be subject to a decree which will regulate its individual power both as a distributor and exhibitor to discriminate against others. The only differences among them concern the form that such regulation should take. Four of the major defendants do not object to the competitive bidding provisions of the judgment. While Paramount does object to competitive bidding as an appropriate means of such regulation, it suggests instead an injunction against an arbitrary refusal to license a run sought by an independent exhibitor as an appropriate substitute.[22] Their dispute with the Government, in so far as their continuing individual power to discriminate is concerned, is thus largely confined to the form of the remedy.

The major defendants' appeals thus assume, as the court below found, that their power to discriminate against others has been abused in the past in a manner which violates the Act and will be so abused in the future unless a decree adequate to eliminate such abuse is entered in this suit.

While they all deny that this continuing power to discriminate is inherent in their theatre ownership, and they deny that such ownership is itself a violation of the Sherman Act, it is difficult to rationalize upon any other basis their assumption that judicial regulation in this suit is an appropriate means of dealing with their individual power to discriminate. They insist that they have been guilty of no conspiracy to violate the Act and that they have achieved no film monopoly of any kind. Thus the threat of monopoly inherent in the continuing power and incentive which their theatre ownership gives them to discriminate against others is the only conceivable basis for the relief they assume to be appropriate. Any judgment now entered in this suit is one which may only have for its basis an appropriate finding of Sherman Act violation, and their dual concession, for the purposes of their appeals, that their individual power to discriminate against competitors has been illegally abused and that such power should be continuously regulated by an appropriate decree in this case, suggests a frank recognition by them that its continuing possession by them carries with it a continuous threat of future discriminatory conduct.

[22] Paragraph 9 of Section II of the judgment (R. 3698) is modeled after a provision proposed by all of the major defendants below (R. 3624–26) and was apparently adopted by the court as an appropriate supplement to the competitive bidding relief specified in paragraph 8 of this Section. The standards which determine whether or not the defendants' refusal is arbitrary are apparently those spelled out in paragraph 8.

All of the majors challenge the findings of a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy among them and other distributors and exhibitors, and a conspiracy between each of them and their exhibitor licensees arising out of their individual price-fixing practice. Yet the appeal of each assumes, as noted above, that it has made license agreements with exhibitors affiliated with other defendants and with other large circuits which, individually considered, violated the Sherman Act, and these agreements include agreements to impose unreasonable clearance against their independent competitors. Since this unreasonable clearance was itself a means of controlling admission price competition between exhibitors in such a way as to protect arbitrarily the affiliated theatre and was established by agreement between two defendants in each case, the challenge to the findings of general conspiracy have a very limited significance insofar as the major defendants are concerned. The findings of concerted action which were broader than mere agreements between two defendants, affect only the validity of relief intended to end the industry-wide conspiracies. Relief required to prevent concerted action in violation of the Act by any one defendant and another defendant, or exhibitor affiliated with it, is supported by the findings not appealed from.

The prohibitions against price-fixing and against systems of clearance (R. 3695–3696), which all of the defendants except Columbia attack, were plainly necessary to prevent continuance of the precise individual illegal conduct in which each distributor was found to have engaged, as well as to prevent the more general conspiracies to which they were all found to be parties. The propriety of these provisions of the judgment as to the major defendants is therefore supported by the findings of individual illegal conduct which they do not attack, as well as the more general findings of conspiracy which they do attack.

The major defendants still insist that they be allowed to continue stipulating minimum admission price restrictions in their license agreements and maintain systems of clearance while they continue to retain and expand theatre holdings acquired and maintained through a discriminatory use of such restrictions. They not only wish to be free, as the present judgment leaves them free, to fix admission prices in their own theatres in a manner which will most effectively control the competition of others, but they apparently desire to make such control even more effective by agreeing with other exhibitors as to the minimum prices they may charge. Each also apparently desires to continue the privilege of using clearance as a systematic means of controlling by agreement the relative playing positions of all competing theatres which play their films. These contentions add up to a candid admission of a common desire to continue the precise trade restraints found below with the benefit of a legal sanction to be created by what they regard as an appropriate judgment in this suit.

Universal and United Artists have joined in the majors' attack upon these provisions of the judgment upon somewhat different grounds, but their attack is also without merit since, as shown in Point I, A, supra, they made the same kind of film licenses with affiliated licensees for precisely the same trade-restraining purposes as the major defendants did. These provisions of the judgment are so obviously necessary to enjoin continuing restraints of the kind shown in Point I, A, to violate the Sherman Act, that no further discussion of their propriety is required here. In the ensuing discussion we shall deal first with the provisions requiring the distributor-defendants to justify any clearance agreement made in the future as "reasonably necessary to protect the licensee," the prohibition against the major defendants' theatre expansion, and the termination of the arbitration system, since the attack on those provisions is common to all of the major defendants. We shall then show that the provisions against franchises, block booking, and master agreements, attacked principally by the three non-exhibitor defendants, were also proper.

B. The court was justified in making the defendants' clearance agreements prima facie invalid and imposing the burden of showing that such a restriction is reasonable upon the distributor granting it

Each of the defendants was correctly found to have habitually made both an individual and collective trade-restraining use of clearance agreements as shown in Point I, A, supra. The court might, therefore, within existing precedents, have prohibited them from making any such agreements at all for a substantial period of time, even if such agreements were otherwise lawful. United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 724. Instead the court merely made such agreements prima facie invalid, and cast the burden of justifying the reasonableness of the restriction in question upon the distributor granting it (R. 3695–96). These provisions are attacked directly only by United Artists and Universal, but the major defendants insist that the presumption established by the judgment should not be regarded as one of illegality and that a particular clearance may be justified as reasonable by showing that it was necessary to assure "a reasonable return" to the licensor as well as by showing that it was "reasonably necessary to protect the licensee." So construed these provisions are unobjectionable to them (Warner brief, pp. 123–124), but are wholly objectionable to the Government.

Since the major defendants are both distributors and theatre owners, they apparently desire a flexible standard by which they can justify the reasonableness of clearance granted by other distributors in favor of their theatres in terms of the needs of those theatres, and at the same time justify the restrictions they impose against independent exhibitors in terms of the necessity of protecting their film rental as distributors. Cf. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 211–212. As shown in our main brief, prohibitions controlling the form and character of the defendants' license agreements with affiliated theatres cannot prevent continuance or recurrence of the conspiracies and discriminations found below, since such restrictions may and probably would be continued simply by the manner in which positive prints were made available to affiliated theatres and theatres competing with them, even if clearance agreements were prohibited. However, these provisions should effectively prevent the continued use of clearance by the defendants to protect large unaffiliated circuits from the competition of smaller independents. The court's judgment of prima facie invalidity would compel the distributor to justify any clearance granted in terms of protection to the licensee regarded as reasonable by Sherman Act standards.[23] The restriction would have to be justified by the party in the best position to know its competitive effects and the justification would have to be in terms of an especial need by the licensee for the competitive advantages which such restriction affords. If such a need were determined by Sherman Act standards, such an advantage would have to be shown as essential to the licensee's ability to compete rather than simply a restriction of the competition of others which might seem desirable to the licensee and to the distributor.

We think it is clear, therefore, that the clearance prohibitions now embodied in the judgment are no broader than the illegal licensing restrictions employed by the distributor defendants require. As pointed out in our main brief, an assured termination of such restrictions may only be had by divorcement and cross-licensing relief.

[23] It should be noted that the consent decree standards which the court stated in its opinion might control the determination of reasonable clearance in the future R. (3533–34) were not embodied in the final judgment. By its action in this connection the trial court recognized the validity of the Government's arguments at the hearing on the judgment that the consent decree standards were wholly inadequate to prevent the use of clearance in a manner which would violate the Sherman Act.

C. The prohibition against theatre expansion in the judgment below was a less drastic provision than the major defendants' violations warranted.

As we have already shown, the major defendants have virtually conceded the existence of a continuing power and incentive to discriminate against competitors which inheres in their continued ownership of any theatres. As pointed out in our main brief,[24] the proper remedy for such a Sherman Act violation is not mere regulation, but its complete termination. However, if a prohibition against theatre expansion, rather than affirmative theatre divestiture, is thought to be a proper remedy for the attempts to monopolize found below (R. 3692–93),[25] an unqualified prohibition against theatre expansion was certainly the minimum relief required.

[24] For an additional analysis of the economic power inherent in this integration see HUETTIG, ECONOMIC CONTROL, MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY, Univ. of Pa. Press, 1944.

[25] The court's failure to find actual monopolization was apparently a consequence of its assumption that since no one of the eight distributor-defendants controlled another through stock ownership, their businesses could not be aggregated in determining whether their domination of the market had reached monopoly proportions. This assumption was erroneous in view of the exclusionary nature of the conspiracy which bound them together. Having made concerted use of their power to exclude competitors, they were in no position to insist that the power to exclude possessed by each should be separately evaluated. In American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781, this Court expressly sanctioned aggregating the business of the three major tobacco companies for the purpose of determining whether or not they had actually monopolized the tobacco business in viola-

It was made clear in the course of the argument below that the existing provision does not even require court approval of mere replacement of existing theatres lost or abandoned (R. 3108–3109). What each major defendant seeks here is the power to expand its theatre business "in order to protect its investments or in order to enter a competitive field."[26] While they are willing to subject their new acquisitions to court approval, they apparently believe such approval could be obtained for establishing an affiliated theatre in any tion of section 2 of the Sherman Act. There, as here, no one of them did enough business to give it alone a monopoly position, but there, as here, they were all found to have engaged in an exclusionary price-fixing conspiracy. The exclusionary effect here is simply illustrated by the fact that Columbia, which licensed more independent theatres on first run in cities over 100,000 than any other defendant (see App. p. 303) had fewer independent first run accounts in 1945 than it had in 1936 in those cities and in all cities over 25,000 (Exs. C–6, R. 1281, C–7, App. 318–326), notwithstanding an increase from 1935 to 1945 of more than 4,000 in the number of independent theatres (R. 3688).

The lower court was thus clearly wrong in its conclusion of no actual monopolization and our assignment of error to that conclusion should be sustained. Whether or not the court below was right or wrong in this ultimate conclusion does not, in our opinion, affect our right to the relief we seek. The findings of conspiracy and attempted monopolization, in the manner described in the subsidiary findings, are themselves sufficient to require divorcement and a ban on cross-licensing, since, as pointed out in our main brief, relief short of such measures cannot terminate the conspiracies or attempts to monopolize arising from the continued vertical integrations.

[26] See Warner brief p. 32.

location where the independents may prove reluctant to show the films of a major upon terms which seem desirable to it.[27] This was, of course, precisely the form of activity which led to the creation of the numerous theatre pools condemned by the court below and discussed in Point I, B, supra.

The defendants also suggest that the Government has already given the existing judgment an unreasonable construction by suggesting that a civil contempt proceeding brought against Fox by an independent exhibitor[28] was justified. In that proceeding the petitioner charged that when it sought to build a new theatre in Watsonville, California, a Fox closed town, Fox commenced construction of a new theatre there for the purpose of preventing completion of petitioner's theatre. Although the construction of the new Fox theatre would mean possession by it of three theatres in a town where it now has only two, Fox claims that this is not expansion because the new theatre is intended merely to replace an obsolete one which Fox plans later to abandon. The obsolete theatre was apparently retained in that condition on the theory that even such a theatre may be useful in keeping a closed town closed.[29] If, as the court below intended through its judgment, an independent could compete with Fox for films, it would plainly be desirable for Fox to have a new theatre wherever new independent competition threatens to materialize. The contempt proceeding was dismissed below without a decision on the merits upon the ground that the petitioner did not have standing to maintain it, and we need not be concerned with its merits here.[30] However, its institution foreshadows a continuous litigation in this suit of justifications asserted by the defendants for specific theatre acquisitions unless such acquisitions are prohibited in unqualified terms.

The basis for prohibiting acquisitions by the major defendants in this suit is not, as they seem to assume, the mere possession by them of large theatre circuits involved in past illegal activity. The qualifications in the prohibitions against theatre acquisitions included in the Schine and Crescent judgments were plainly justified by the limited nature of their control over the film business. There is no occasion for any comparable qualification here, since acquisition by these defendants is enjoined not simply because of their dominating position and past illegal conduct as theatre operators, but because of the added power and incentive to discriminate which necessarily results from expanding the extent of their vertical integration. We submit that the only abuse of discretion involved in the court's prohibition against expansion was the exception it made in favor of acquisition by the defendants of independent pooled interests which we show to be unwarranted at pages 115–119 of our main brief.

D. The court properly terminated the arbitration established by the consent decree

No serious argument is made by any defendant that the court had power to continue the arbitration system established by the consent decree without the continuing consent of the Government. The suggestion that the arbitration system was not terminable as of right at the expiration of the three-year trial period needs no consideration, since even if it were assumed that a hearing, evidence, and judgment were required, the trial, findings, and judgment below were certainly adequate for this purpose. The consent decree was, of course, terminated because it was found inadequate to deal with the violations found. The arbitration system had no separate purpose or excuse for existence apart from this decree and was therefore necessarily terminated with it.

As shown in Part I, C of our main brief, trade practice arbitration is a form of regulation utterly inconsistent with the remedies essential to the effective elimination of the violations of law in this industry and now sought by the Government.

The cases relied on by the defendants for the proposition that Sherman Act decrees must necessarily be hand tailored in each case do not suggest that they must be hand tailored to the requirements of the principal defendants rather than to the necessities of law enforcement.[31] The fact that the five major defendants are willing and anxious to maintain such a system at their expense suggests that it has a special value for them that it does not have for general purposes of Sherman Act enforcement.

E. The prohibitions against block booking, franchises, and master agreements were no broader than required to terminate the violations found

Paramount, Columbia, and Universal are the only defendants which attack the prohibition against block booking (R 3696).[32] Only Universal and United Artists attack the prohibitions against franchises and master agreements (R. 3696). While the block booking injunction presents a difficult enforcement problem in view of the intangible means by which one film may be used to force a license for another owned by the same distributor, the form of this injunction is the only one consistent with its purpose. The evidence did not suggest that the tying of only two copyrights together for licensing purposes would necessarily have an insignificant trade-restraining effect, [31] See Fox brief, p. 41.

[32] It does not apply to United Artists.

since a single copyright may represent a distribution business worth several million dollars. See App. pp. 260–261. In this circumstance a finding of law violation by extensive use of tying film copyrights together for trade-restraining purposes in the past, even though generally found in the form of seasonal agreements or franchises, required a prohibition against tying any two or more to give assurance against similar future violations.

The prohibitions against franchises and master agreements are directed at a very narrow aspect of trade-restraining conduct since they control only a specific form of license in each case. Nevertheless, these prohibitions serve to define the standards of conduct required of the distributor-defendants in the future and they thus serve a useful purpose.

United Artists' attack on the franchise provision is wholly academic since it says it has no present desire to employ such an agreement. Its attack on the master agreement prohibition, of course, is dependent upon a showing that the master agreements admittedly made by it had no trade-restraining effect, and it is unable to make this showing since, as pointed out at pages 47, 48, supra, they have such effects on their face.

Universal does not seriously dispute the illegality of either the franchises or master agreements it has made with other defendants and their affiliated exhibitors, but argues that it should be permitted to make franchises with independent exhibitors in order to let them compete with large circuits and that it should be permitted thus to establish semi-permanent outlets by contract comparable to those affiliated with the major defendants by stock ownership.

The short answer to the contentions of both these defendants is that if either can show in the future that it has so completely reformed its licensing practice that such prohibitions are no longer appropriate, it may secure a modification of the injunction from the district court. See International Salt Co. v. United States, No. 46, this Term.

A practical objection common to all three non-exhibitor defendants to abolition of block booking, franchises, and master agreements, and the institution of the competitive bidding system on a theatre by theatre, picture by picture basis, is an asserted need to engage in the prohibited practices as a means of business survival. They assert that block booking, master agreements, and franchises are the only means they have of forcing their pictures into the preferred channels of distribution which are at all comparable to the major defendants' theatre affiliations. Therefore, they argue, they must use these devices in order to compete with the major defendants.

We do not dispute the soundness of this argument in so far as it is based upon an economic necessity arising from competing in a market dominated by the major defendants instead of conspiring with them. We do deny their assumption that antitrust violations by some members of an industry must be countenanced because they result from more basic violations by other members. See United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. As shown in our main brief, the only appropriate solution of their dilemma is the divestiture of the major defendants' theatres rather than a permissive use by these distributors of trade-restraining devices intended to counter-balance that control. The relief granted by the trial court against the use of these devices, while perhaps of doubtful enforceability so long as the relief sought by the Government against the major distributors is withheld, was certainly appropriate to deal with violations of this kind in so far as they may be prohibited at all by injunctive relief.

III

Appellant-intervenors are not entitled to intervention of right below or here to litigate the form of the final judgment

In Nos. 85 and 86, certain exhibitor groups[33] appeal from orders below denying their motions for leave to intervene (R. 3718). These groups

[33] Appellant-intervenors in No. 85 are two exhibitor associations and a number of independent exhibitors. Most of the members of the associations are independent exhibitors, but some are affiliated with the defendants. It is specifically alleged that one association does not represent the interests of its affiliated exhibitors in this case, and that no part of the

also have filed original motions for leave to intervene in this Court in Nos. 79–84. The five major defendants moved to dismiss the appeals in Nos. 85 and 86. On June 23, 1947, this Court postponed consideration of the original motions to intervene and of jurisdiction to hear the appeals until hearing of the cases on their merits (R. 3840–3841).

In both instances, appellant-intervenors seek to attack the competitive bidding provisions of the decree below. They claim intervention of right under Rule 24 (a) (2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (28 U. S. C., following Sec. 723c). They assert that they are or may be "bound by a judgment in the action" on the theory that an agreement among defendants to conform to the competitive bidding system would be an antitrust violation for which they could sue, but that the lower court's decree directing such a system insulates the defendants from such actions. They contend that present representation of their interests "is or may be inadequate" because the Government does not actively oppose competitive expense will be borne by them. There are no such allegations with respect to the other association. (R. 3565–3567.)

Appellant-intervenors in No. 86 are a number of independent exhibitors. Their application is supported by exhibitor associations, some of whose members are affiliated with the defendants. While no defendant-owned theatres are contributing to the expense of the application, theatres held jointly by independents with defendant Paramount are making such contributions. (R. 3582–3583.)

bidding, and the defendants who attack it (Paramount, Columbia, Universal and United Artists) have interests opposed to theirs.

We do not object to appellant-intervenors' being heard here as friends of the Court. We did not object below, and they were fully heard there. We are impelled to object, however, to their becoming parties to litigate the form of the final judgment since we are of the view that they fail to meet the requirements for intervention of right.

The appellant-intervenors are in error when they say that the Government does not actively oppose the competitive bidding system. The Government has assigned error to it, and argues in its main brief (pp. 54–89) that the system is so inadequate as to amount to an abuse of discretion. We do not, of course, claim to give specific representation to the purely private interests of appellant-intervenors. Our purpose is the larger one of protecting the public interest in free competition. But that also is the scope of this suit. Thus, insofar as this action is concerned, appellant-intervenors' interests are being adequately represented. Cf. In re Engelhard, 231 U. S. 646, 651; New York City v. New York Tel. Co., 261 U. S. 312, 316; Ex parte Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade, 222 U. S. 578.

Since these appellant-intervenors in any event may be fully heard as to the form of the judgment, the requested intervention would serve no useful purpose. The appellant-intervenors' standing in this respect is no different from that of thousands of other exhibitors. In any anti-trust case of this magnitude members of the industry and of the public may be sufficiently interested to want to present their views. A number of such persons have presented their views in this case as friends of the court. To permit intervention as parties by all such persons would expand the controversy beyond all reasonable bounds, to the prejudice of both the Government and the court. Cf. Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137, 141–142.

Since appellant-intervenors are not entitled to intervention of right, this Court lacks jurisdiction to set aside the denials below in the absence of an abuse of discretion. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. B. O. R. Co., 331 U. S. 519, 524–525; United States v. California Canneries, 279 U. S. 553, 556, and cases cited. Appellant-intervenors do not assert such an abuse of discretion, and clearly there was none. Consequently, this Court should dismiss the appeals and deny the original motions to intervene here.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of Sherman Act violations should be affirmed as to all defendants and the injunctive provisions sustained except as modified by the relief sought upon the Government's appeal.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE.

NOW COME AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION, INC., et al., and W. C. ALLRED, et al., jointly and severally, and move this Court for leave to intervene as parties in the above-entitled actions on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated. Their purpose in intervening is limited to asserting the matters set forth in their separate intervention petitions filed in the District Court for the Southern District of New York, which intervention petitions, together with their separate statements as to jurisdiction, are made by separate praecipae a part of the transcript of the record in their pending appeals before this Court from the final decree of the court below and from an order of the said District Court denying intervention; and which petitions, jurisdictional statements and the joint brief filed by them in opposition to the separate motions of certain defendants-respondent to dismiss their appeals they pray may be incorporated herein as a part hereof.

WHEREFORE, the premises and said documents considered, petitioners pray that they may be permitted to appear in these proceedings and be heard in these causes as intervenors, appearing herein by order of the Court under Rule 24(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure and under the decision of United States v. Terminal Railroad Assn. of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194, and that the plan for competitive bidding embodied in sub-paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Paragraph 8 of Section II of the decree of said Court of December 31, 1946, may be held erroneous and said decree accordingly reversed and the cause remanded for the elimination of the aforesaid paragraphs in the decree.

Dated: May 16, 1947.

REPLY OF AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION, INC., ET AL., AND W. C. ALLRED, ET AL., TO MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO THEIR MOTIONS FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE.

American Theatres Association, Inc., et al., and W. C. Allred, et al., respectfully submit the following in response to the memorandum filed in these proceedings by the Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, RKO, Paramount and Warner defendants in opposition to petitioner's joint motion for leave to intervene:

Point I.

Petitioners Should Be Permitted to Intervene Originally Under the Decision of this Court in United States v. Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194.

The defendants attempt to distinguish the St. Louis Terminal case on the ground that in that case the petitioners were deprived of a legal right against a public utility—the Terminal Association—whereas in the present case petitioners have no legal right against the defendants which is cut off by the decree. This distinction is based on a misstatement of the facts. In the absence of the decree, the petitioners would have a clear legal right to enjoin a plan for concerted action by the distributors to enforce competitive bidding which the decree attempts to legalize. The decree, by approving that plan, cuts off petitioners' legal right as effectively as the petitioners' legal right was cut off in the St. Louis Terminal case.

Further, the contention made by defendants that the consent of the Attorney General to intervention is necessary is without merit since the Attorney General's action cannot affect intervention as of right. The Attorney General certainly has no power to approve of the combination in restraint of trade set up in the court's decree.

In the case of United States v. Columbia Gas & Electric Corp., 27 F. Supp. 116, 121, relied on by defendants, the opposition of the Attorney General was based in part on the ground that Mokan was "not entitled to intervention of right." Moreover, when the intervention in that case came under the scrutiny of this Court[1] it was held that the arguments with respect to the Attorney General's guardianship of the public interest misconceived the basis of the right asserted by the intervenors and that "where the enforcement of a public law also demands distinct safeguarding of private interests. . . . the power to enforce rights thus sanctioned is not left to the public authorities nor put in the keeping of the district court's discretion." In other words, intervention in such cases is as of right, not permissive.

Point II.

The Spirit and Intent of Rule 24(a) Should Obtain in this Court as Well as in the District Courts of the United States.

Rule 24(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure was approved and adopted by this Court as a rule for the protection of those whose interests were vitally affected by a suit in the District Courts to which they were not parties. Petitioners recognize that the Rules of Civil Procedure are specifically restricted to proceedings in the District Courts. However, there being no rule of this Court providing for intervention in proceedings before this Court, it is contended that the spirit and intent of Rule 24(a) should be considered by this Court in determining whether one whose rights are vitally affected may be heard.

Conclusion.

Petitioners assert that they are in a position in the pending litigation before this Court similar to that of the intervenors in the St. Louis Terminal and Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line cases; that the interests they seek to protect by intervention are of as great consequence and importance as the interests accorded protection by this Court in those cases.

WHEREFORE, petitioners respectfully pray that their joint motion for leave to intervene in the appeals therein designated be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

ARNOLD & FORTAS,
Attorneys for American Theatres Association, Inc., et al., Petitioners.

OCTOBER TERM, 1947

Nos. 79-86

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant, vs.

JOINT BRIEF

IN REPLY TO BRIEFS OF AMICI CURIAE

This memorandum is submitted on behalf of the five theatre-owning defendants to record their disagreement with and opposition to the briefs submitted by certain groups as *amici curiae.

---

*W. C. Allred, et al., who are also appellants in No. 86;
American Theatres Association, Inc., et al., who are also appellants in No. 85;
The Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers; American Civil Liberties Union;
The Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations; and
The independent theatre owner and operator members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

These defendants have sufficiently elaborated in their respective separate briefs their views as to the issues involved in these several appeals. We do not wish, however, by silence to be deemed to have acquiesced in any arguments or to have admitted any statements made in the briefs of the amici which were not anticipated and refuted or explained in our several briefs. The briefs of amici curiae depart so frequently and so far from the record as to make it as unnecessary as it is impossible to answer them completely with record references. To a large extent the briefs are devoted to an assertion of assumed facts which have no support in or bearing on the proof and findings upon which this Court is here called upon to give its decision.

The District Court said (R. 3553; 66 F. Supp. 354):

> "Moreover, there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States; 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416 (C. C. A. 2). The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. They can only be restrained from the unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block-booking, and the other things we have criticized."

No evidence is or could be pointed to, to weaken this conclusion, and yet all the arguments of the amici proceed on the assumption that the five so-called "major" defendants not only may, but must be treated collectively as a monopoly for unless they are, the results sought by the amici cannot possibly follow.

We believe that what amici overlook is the basic fact that this case was tried on the theory that defendants had acquired a monopoly, and that the conspiracies alleged were intended to effectuate that monopoly (R. 2777-8). The Government wholly failed to prove this charge, and that failure cannot be remedied by mere ipse dixit of amici.

Finally, only a word need be said concerning the efforts of the Society of Independent Producers and the American Civil Liberties Union to inject in the case an asserted constitutional question. As the Civil Liberties Union reads the Constitution (brief, p. 20), the showing of a New York City first-run in the Times Square area, without a simultaneous or earlier showing in the Bronx, operates in some unexplained manner to deprive the Bronx and its residents of some unspecified constitutional right. We consider it unnecessary to enter into a debate as to whether the Constitution does in fact guarantee Bronxites an opportunity to see first-run films without riding the subway. For even if we were to concur in this bizarre constitutional doctrine, this Court would still require some showing as to how first-run performances in the Bronx or any other locality would be assured by the magic of divestiture.

Indeed, for similar reasons, the entire constitutional argument advanced by amici is quite irrelevant. It is founded upon the assumption that monopoly has been found when in fact the lower court found that no monopoly exists. It would impose a duty on defendants to insure their audiences of a "diversified" program of motion pictures. Yet it loses sight of the affirmative finding of the court below that divestiture would not accomplish that nor any useful purpose.

While we do not wish to yield to amici in their great regard for the command of the First Amendment, we venture to suggest that the Court would have been better served if their briefs had contained more references to the record and fewer references to the ringing phrases in which that great charter of freedom has been preserved.

MEMORANDUM OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX, LOEW, RKO, PARAMOUNT AND WARNER DEFENDANTS IN OPPOSITION TO THE MOTIONS FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE FILED BY AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION, INC., ET AL., AND W. C. ALLRED, ET AL.

The Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew, RKO, Paramount and Warner defendants respectfully submit this memorandum in opposition to the motions filed in this Court by the petitioners, American Theatres Association, Inc., et al. and W. C. Allred, et al., jointly and severally, for leave to intervene as parties in the above entitled appeals on behalf of themselves and others allegedly similarly situated.

The petitioners pray that they may be permitted to appear in these proceedings and be heard as intervenors, claiming the right to do so by virtue of Rule 24(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, and the decision of this Court in United States v. Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194. The purpose of the intervention as stated in their motions is in order to enable the petitioners to urge that the plan for competitive bidding embodied in subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Paragraph 8 of Section II of the decree of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, dated December 31, 1946, is erroneous, and that the decree should be accordingly reversed and the causes remanded for elimination of these paragraphs.

Point I.

PETITIONERS ARE NOT ENTITLED TO INTERVENE AS OF RIGHT

The Rules of Civil Procedure, including Rule 24(a) upon which the petitioners specifically rely, were adopted by the Supreme Court pursuant to authority granted it by the Act of June 19, 1934, Chapter 651 (28 U. S. C. § 723b), which act gave this Court the power to prescribe rules for the District Courts of the United States and the courts of the District of Columbia.

Rule 1 of the Rules of Civil Procedure specifically states that the rules are to govern procedure in the District Courts of the United States, and Rule 81 sets forth the proceedings in which the rules are to be applicable. It is clear, therefore, that the rules apply only to the District Courts and not to the Supreme Court (see Mookini v. United States, 303 U. S. 201, construing the applicability of the Criminal Appeals Rules).

Petitioners therefore cannot urge that Rule 24(a) entitles them to intervene by original motion in the Supreme Court as of right, even if it be assumed that their situation brings them within the terms of such rule, i.e., that they are inadequately represented and that they will be bound by the judgment. However, the opinion in Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137, makes it clear that they are not to be treated as being inadequately represented, and that they are not bound by the decree in the manner contemplated by the Rule.

Point II.

PETITIONERS SHOULD NOT BE PERMITTED TO INTERVENE AS A MATTER OF DISCRETION

Reliance is placed by the petitioners upon the decision of this Court in United States v. Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194, and particularly the language of the Court at page 199 where it was stated that, "* * * although the petitioners were not parties, they are entitled to be originally heard concerning the settlement of the decree in so far as it might operate prejudicially to their rights".

It is submitted, however, that this case is not applicable. In the first place, the case involved a public utility which the lower court had enjoined from carrying on a public transportation business. The case was before this Court upon application of the defendants for modification of the decree in order to make it clear that it was not intended to prohibit transportation incidental to the business which the Terminal Association was allowed to continue. The petitioners similarly urged modification. Had the defendant Terminal Association, a public service organization, sought voluntarily to terminate the service which it was rendering, the petitioning intervenors would have had a right to go to court to prevent that action. In the case at bar, however, had one or more of the defendants individually determined to distribute their motion pictures on a competitive bidding basis such as that provided for in the decree, and which the petitioners seek leave to attack, none of the petitioners would have possessed a similar legal right to require the defendants to license motion pictures to them in any other way or at all. This distinction is fundamental.

Furthermore, in the Terminal case the petitioners were not seeking reversal of the decree, but only to have it modified so as to make it clear that it was not intended to affect their rights. As this Court has clearly pointed out in United States v. California Cooperative Canneries, 279 U. S. 553 at page 556, it has long been the settled rule of practice that intervention will not be allowed for the purpose of impeaching a decree. See In Re Veach, 4 F. 2d 334; Union Trust Co. v. Jones, 16 F. 2d 236, and the numerous other cases cited by Mr. Justice Brandeis in the California Canneries case in a footnote at pages 556 to 557, cases arising under former Equity Rule 37 and cases arising prior to that rule.

Here petitioners seek to impeach the decree, and frankly state that their purpose in seeking to intervene is to persuade this Court that certain of its provisions, i.e., those having to do with competitive bidding, are erroneous and should be reversed and the cases remanded to the District Court with directions to eliminate the portions of the decree having to do with competitive bidding.

Even if it be assumed that Rule 24(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure is applicable, or that it states a rule of law as to when intervention may be had as a matter of right, the petitioners do not qualify. It was made amply clear in Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137, that their contentions must be rejected. There it was shown that Section 16 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C., par. 26) conferred no right to intervene, and that the petitioners would not be bound by the judgment in the sense in which the term is used in Rule 24(a). In the Cash Register case this Court distinguished Missouri-Kansas Pipeline Co. v. United States, 312 U. S. 502, upon which petitioners also rely, upon the express ground that there the petitioner for intervention was named in the decree as one who should be heard in the event certain action was taken affecting its property rights. The Court pointed out that intervention in an appellate court was unusual, saying at page 506 "Plainly enough, the circumstances under which interested outsiders should be allowed to become participants in a litigation, is, barring very special circumstances, a matter for the nisi prius court." (See also Morini v. City of Stuart (C. C. A. 5th) 112 F. 2nd 585.) And the Court stressed the fact, (p. 508), that there the petitioners were seeking to enforce and vindicate the decree, not to impeach it, as in the case at bar.

Furthermore, it has been held that an individual may not intervene in a suit brought under the Antitrust Laws by the Attorney General where the latter does not consent to such intervention. U. S. v. Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, 27 F. Supp. (D. C. Del.), appeal dismissed, 108 F. 2d 614, and cert. den. 319 U. S. 687. The Attorney General opposed intervention below, and, so far as we are presently advised, has not altered this position.

The case of U. S. v. Radio Corporation of America, et al., 3 F. Supp. 23 (D. C. Del.), indicates the proper procedure in case petitioners feel aggrieved by the decree, i.e., to file a bill in the court which entered the decree seeking appropriate relief.

None of the undersigned would oppose applications by the petitioners for leave to file briefs amicus curiae provided the Court feels they would be of assistance and they accurately state the facts.

WHEREFORE the undersigned respectfully request that the motions of American Theatres Association, Inc., et al. and W. C. Allred, et al. for leave to intervene in the Supreme Court be denied.

MEMORANDUM OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX, LOEW'S, RKO, PARAMOUNT AND WARNER APPELLEES IN OPPOSITION TO THE MOTIONS OF THE SOCIETY OF INDEPENDENT MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS AND THE CONFERENCE OF INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATIONS FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEFS AMICI CURIAE

The Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, RKO, Paramount and Warner appellees have declined to consent to, and now oppose, for the following reasons, the filing of briefs amici curiae on behalf of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers and the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations:

1. The briefs merely present the self-interested points of view of the applicants and urge action with respect to the decree which are different from and, in some respects, in conflict with the relief sought in this Court by the parties to the cause.

2. No claims are made that the public interest is not adequately represented by the Solicitor General, nor could such claims be properly made.

3. These appeals will require this Court to consider main and reply briefs by the Government and by eight separate groups of defendants, as well as briefs submitted on behalf of certain proposed intervenors. It seems probable that other groups will seek leave to file briefs as amici curiae. The present briefs go so far outside the record, and so inadequately treat of the decision below, that if they were to be accepted by this Court it would be necessary for the defendants to reply to each of them.

We do not believe that it will serve the convenience of the Court to have its record burdened with such a multiplicity of briefs by groups not directly concerned in the action.

STATEMENTS AS TO THE JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES ON APPEAL TO REVIEW THE JUDGMENT HEREIN.

In compliance with Rule 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, as amended, the above appellants severally submit herewith their statement particularly disclosing the basis upon which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction upon appeal to review the Judgment, Decree and Final Order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York entered in the office of the Clerk of said Court on December 31, 1946, and the Order of said Court entered February 11, 1947.

Petitions for Appeal were filed in the District Court on February 26, 1947, and were allowed by order of the same date.

The plaintiff, pursuant to an order dated February 21, 1947, appealed from the Decree entered December 31, 1946 and filed its Assignment of Errors therewith. Twenty-five specific assignments of errors are set forth in the plaintiff's appeal.

Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review by direct appeal the Judgment entered in this cause is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 272; 15 U. S. C. Sec. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925 (43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. Sec. 345).

The following decisions sustain the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review the judgment on direct appeal in this case:

U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944);

U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707 (1944);

Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208 (1939);

Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553 (1936);

United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106 (1911);

United States v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324 (1912).

Statutes Involved

The Sherman Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended (15 U. S. C. Sections 1 and 2), reading in part as follows:

"§ 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: . . .

§ 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, . . ."

The Copyright Act of March 4, 1909, 35 Stat. 1075-1088 (17 U. S. C.), and particularly those portions reading as follows:

"Section 1. Any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this title, shall have the exclusive right:

(a) To print, reprint, publish, copy, and vend the copyrighted work;

(b) To translate the copyrighted work into other languages or dialects, or make any other version thereof, if it be a literary work; to dramatize it if it be a nondramatic work; to convert it into a novel or other nondramatic work if it be a drama; to arrange or adapt it if it be a musical work; to complete, execute, and finish it if it be a model or design for a work of art;

(c) To deliver or authorize the delivery of the copyrighted work in public for profit if it be a lecture, sermon, address, or similar production;

(d) To perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama or, if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced in copies for sale, to vend any manuscript or any record whatsoever thereof; to make or to procure the making of any transcription or record thereof by or from which, in whole or in part, it may in any manner or by any method be exhibited, performed, represented, produced, or reproduced; and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce, or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever;

* * *

§ 4. The works for which copyright may be secured under this title shall include all the writings of an author.

§ 5. The application for registration shall specify to which of the following classes the work in which copyright is claimed belongs:

* * *

(l) Motion-picture photoplays;

(m) Motion pictures other than photoplays."

The Issues and the Rulings Below

The original petition in this action was filed on July 20, 1938. It charged concerted monopolization of the domestic motion picture industry by eight of the principal units therein, five of which (Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner) were engaged in producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures, two of which (Columbia and Universal) were producers and distributors, and one of which (United Artists) was engaged only in distributing motion pictures.

The petition prayed for injunctive relief against certain trade practices existent in the distribution branch of the motion picture industry, and also demanded that the five first named companies, which were designated in the petition as the producer-exhibitor defendants, be required to divest themselves of all their theatres and theatre interests and be enjoined from thereafter acquiring new ones.

The defendants answered the petition and denied its material allegations.

The case first came on for trial on June 1, 1940, before the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Before any testimony was taken, negotiations were begun for the disposition of the case by consent decree.

An amended and supplemental complaint was filed on November 14, 1940. This amended and supplemental complaint prayed: (1) that each of the alleged contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, together with the alleged attempts to monopolize the same, be declared illegal; (2) that the defendants be perpetually enjoined from continuing to carry out the alleged attempts at monopolization and all the alleged restraints of trade in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures; (3) that a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals, or such other means of enforcement as the Court might deem proper, be established in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices might be decreed; and (4) that the five major defendants and their subsidiaries be directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, in any theatres which the Court might find had been used by one or more of them unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in motion pictures.

The defendants filed answers denying the material allegations of the amended and supplemental complaint, and thereafter the plaintiff and the five producer-exhibitor defendants and their subsidiary corporations executed a written consent to the entry of a decree by the District Court.

On November 20, 1940, a decree was made and entered in accordance with such consent, upon plaintiff's motion and before any testimony had been taken, which decree among other things, enjoined the five producer-exhibitor defendants from engaging in certain trade practices, such as "block booking", "blind selling" and "forcing." In addition, the decree enjoined the five producer-exhibitor defendants from engaging in a general program of expanding their respective theatre holdings for a period of three years. The decree provided, however, that nothing contained therein should prevent any defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purposes of its business.

The Consent Decree also provided, as prayed in the amended and supplemental complaint, for the determination by arbitration of certain disputes between exhibitors and distributors.

As a result, Arbitration Tribunals were set up in the various exchange districts in the United States for the hearing of these arbitrable complaints, and an Appeal Board was constituted and the members thereof appointed by the District Court. These Arbitration Tribunals were established and procedure was prescribed by rules and regulations set forth in an appendix to the Consent Decree. The American Arbitration Association acted as the administrator of the arbitration system.

The Decree further provided that for a period of three years after its entry the plaintiff would not seek to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition, or to dissolve any defendant or break up any circuit of theatres of any defendant, or to require any defendant to divest itself of its interests in theatres.

The Court expressly retained jurisdiction for the purpose of enabling any party to the decree to apply to it at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of the Decree for any modification thereof.

After the expiration of the three year period referred to in the Consent Decree, the plaintiff moved to amend the decree of November 20, 1940, and on June 13, 1945, filed an application, pursuant to the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. § 28, with the senior Circuit Judge for the appointment of a special three-judge Expediting Court to hear and determine the issues. This court was duly constituted on June 16, 1945, with Augustus N. Hand, Circuit Judge, Henry W. Goddard, and John Bright, District Judges, and hearings commenced on October 8, 1945.

The Court rendered its Opinion on June 11, 1946, and its Judgment, Decree and Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Supplemental Opinion on December 31, 1946. Thereafter certain of the defendants moved to amend the Decree in certain respects, and to amend one of the Conclusions of Law. This motion was denied by order entered February 11, 1947, except that Paragraphs (2) and (4) of Section III were modified so as to provide that the arrangements therein referred to should be terminated prior to July 1, 1947, rather than within 60 days after the entry of the Decree. Copies of the Opinion, the Supplemental Opinion and the Decree, as well as the Order entered February 11, 1947 are submitted herewith.

In brief, the Court decided that the eight defendants had violated the Sherman Act by engaging in certain trade practices, which the Court enjoined. The Court found that the illegalities and restraints were not in the ownership of theatres, but in certain trade practices and arrangements dealt with in the Decree.

As it was conceded by the plaintiff at the trial that there was active competition in the production of motion pictures, the charges in respect thereto were formally abandoned by the plaintiff and dismissed by the Court in its Decree.

The Questions Involved Are Substantial

The following questions are substantial and are fully covered by these appellants' several Assignments of Errors. These questions were properly raised before the District Court, both during the trial and on arguments before the Court relating to the formulation of Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and the Decree.

The amended and supplemental complaint prayed, among other things, that a > "nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein."

An arbitration system was established by judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York entered November 20, 1940, pursuant to this prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint and the consent of the plaintiff and these appellants. The Court found that this arbitration system operated as follows:

> "160. The arbitration system created by the Consent Decree of November 20, 1940, has demonstrated its usefulness in dealing with exhibitors' complaints of unreasonable clearance and if extended to cover differences which may occur under the system to be established by the Decree herein, will be effective and result in quick and expeditious decisions and a saving of time and money."

In view of the fact that this arbitration system for settling trade disputes was established pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint, pursuant to the consent of the plaintiff and the appellants, and pursuant to the formal judgment of the Court, and since the trial of this action proceeded only after a motion to modify that judgment of November 20, 1940, it is the appellants' position that the Court had ample power to continue its judgment establishing the arbitration system. It is clear that the Court would have continued the arbitration system, if it had thought it had the power so to do. It stated in its Supplemental Opinion:

> "The arrangement for arbitration and an appeal board has been terminated except as to unfinished litigations and other matters referred to in the decree, because of the unwillingness of some of the parties to consent to their continuance. Nevertheless, as we have indicated in the opinion, these tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded.

> Indeed, the arbitration system set up under the consent decree of November 20, 1940, was created pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint by the United States filed November 14, 1940, in which, among other things, the plaintiff prayed that 'a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein.'
> We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree."

The Court's holding that it lacked power to continue the arbitration system is contrary to the decision in United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, 114-115, 117 (1931), and involves a substantial question for review.

The Decree entered by the Court below prohibits the owner of a feature motion picture from agreeing with a licensee that the latter shall charge a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of that licensed feature. Many features are licensed under terms which reserve to the licensor as film rental a percentage of the admissions received by the licensee during the period of exhibition. During such period, therefore, the licensor has an immediate and direct interest in the admission prices charged. The Decree deprives him of the right, which he has under the Copyright Laws and the common law, to protect his interest by contract.

The owner of a motion picture, copyrighted or not, may exhibit it to the public and charge an admission fee. The owner, without parting with his title to that picture, may authorize another to exhibit it to the public; when that other person so exhibits the picture he necessarily charges an admission price. It is submitted that there is nothing in the anti-trust laws which prohibits the owner and the person authorized (or permitted or licensed) to show the picture to the public at an admission price to agree as to what that admission price shall be.

The prohibition, imposed by the Court, has particular effect in the case of a feature of unusual cost, where it is necessary to "roadshow" the production at a specified admission price during the roadshow engagement, in order to recover the exceptional investment. The record shows that during a period of several years prior to the trial only four features, of all the releases of the eight defendants, were road shown. Each of these was an outstanding and unusual feature, costly in production, and of such importance as to warrant, if required, its exhibition as the sole item of a program, without accompanying shorts or other entertainment. The limited number of such features suitable for roadshow exhibition precludes the possibility that their continued production and exhibition as roadshows can be the basis of an unlawful monopoly. By their very nature, such unique features can not become the subject of any concerted action in unreasonable restraint of trade. The Decree as drawn will prevent the production in the future of such occasional and unusually costly features, since their production costs can only be recovered by roadshow exhibitions. Thus the Decree not only deprives each defendant of rights which he is entitled to enjoy under the Copyright Laws and the common law, but in addition, the public will be deprived of the entertainment value of the exceptional feature motion picture.

The Decree enjoins the five exhibitor-defendants from continuing to own any beneficial interest in any theatre with an independent exhibitor, unless the interest shall be 5% or less, or 95% or more (Section III, Paragraph (5) of the Decree). The Decree compels these exhibitor-defendants to dispose of many valuable theatre interests falling within the banned percentages, unless they can arrange to purchase the partial interests of their respective co-owners, and then only, if they can obtain Court approval of such purchase. The decision of the District Court prohibiting the continuation of arrangements between a defendant and an independent exhibitor for the joint ownership or operation of a theatre did not result from the trial of any issue tendered by the plaintiff or contested during the hearings. Therefore there is no justification for the portions of the Decree which condemn such theatre interests held with independent exhibitors. In this respect, the Decree is contrary to the decision in Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386 (1945).

4.

The Decree [Section III, Paragraph (6)] enjoins each of the theatre-owning defendants from expanding its present theatre holdings, except for the limited purpose of acquiring, if approved by the court, a co-owner's interest in theatres, in order to carry out the injunction against the continuance of the joint interests previously mentioned. In its opinion, the Court stated:

> "But it [the divestiture provision applying to joint interests] shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the later case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor."

Notwithstanding its position thus expressed, the Court denied the motion of certain of the defendants to amend this provision of its Decree so as to permit a defendant-exhibitor to expand its theatre holdings "for the purpose of acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field, if such defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures." The failure and refusal of the Court so to provide in its Decree, involves a substantial question for review. The Decree entered by the Court below in this case stands as a barrier to healthy growth on a competitive basis and does not permit future acquisitions even "after an affirmative showing that such acquisition will not unreasonably restrain competition." It is, therefore far more restrictive than the decree directed by the Supreme Court in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 187 (1944).

The foregoing are among the substantial questions raised by these several appeals. Other substantial questions are likewise raised in the Assignments of Errors herewith submitted and the defendants and each of them reserve the right to urge them upon their respective appeals.

Each of the appellants is of the belief that all questions here raised, as well as others raised by the respective Assignments of Errors, but not specifically referred to herein, are substantial and each respectfully petitions the Supreme Court to pass on them after plenary hearing.

Respectfully submitted:

AUGUSTUS N. HAND, Circuit Judge:

The United States brought suit under Section 4 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies", commonly known as the Sherman Act, in order to prevent alleged violations by the defendants of Sections 1 and 2 of that Act.

The following is a general description of the defendants:

1. (a) Paramount Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at 1501 Broadway, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Paramount Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1501 Broadway, New York, New York, and is engaged in the distribution branch of the industry.

2. Loew's, Incorporated, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 1540 Broadway, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

3. (a) Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the production and distribution branch of the industry.

(c) Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. Approximately 99% of its common stock and 33% of its preferred stock are held by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation.

(d) RKO Proctor Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

(e) RKO Midwest Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

4. (a) Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, having its principal place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) Vitagraph, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

(c) Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and, among other things, acts as booking agent for the exhibition interests of the said Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

5. (a) Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, having its principal place of business at 444 West 56th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) National Theatres Corporation is owned and controlled by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 2854 Hudson Boulevard, Jersey City, New Jersey, and is a holding company for the theatre interests of the said Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

6. (a) Columbia Pictures Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) Screen Gems, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Columbia Pictures Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, with a place of business at 700 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, California, and is engaged in the business of producing motion pictures.

(c) Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Columbia Pictures Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Louisiana, with a place of business at 150 South Liberty Street, New Orleans, Louisiana, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

7. (a) Universal Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) Universal Pictures Company, Inc., a subsidiary controlled by Universal Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing motion pictures.

(c) Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

(d) Big U Film Exchange, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Corporation and Universal Pictures Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

8. United Artists Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in distribution of motion pictures in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

The five major defendants—Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and their subsidiaries—were charged in the amended and supplemental complaint with combining and conspiring unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and to monopolize such trade and commerce in violation of the Sherman Act. The three minor defendants—Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Corporation, and their subsidiaries, which are producers and distributors, and not exhibitors, and United Artists Corporation, which is a distributor only, were likewise charged with combining and conspiring with the five major defendants and with each other unreasonably to restrain and to monopolize trade and commerce in motion pictures. As it appeared upon the trial that there was no violation of the Sherman Act in respect to production of motion pictures and that there was on the contrary active competition in production, the charge in respect to production was formally abandoned by the plaintiff. The issues therefore are whether there have been illegal restraints or monopolization in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

The plaintiff contends that an illegal conspiracy and monopoly were effected by: (1) concertedly fixing the license terms before the licensees have had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films were completed or shown; (2) concertedly fixing the run, clearance, and minimum admission price terms on which an exhibitor may show pictures through license agreements covering periods of a year or more; (3) concertedly conditioning the licensing of one film or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films and by conditioning the licensing of films in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of films in other theatres or group of theatres; (4) concertedly discriminating with respect to the license terms granted to theatres in large circuits because such theatres are part of a circuit. The means of such discrimination are said to be the licensing for exhibition in theatres of the five defendant exhibitors of runs ahead of those granted to competing independent exhibitors, and the continuance of these prior runs from season to season to the prejudice of independent exhibitors. As a result independent exhibitors are systematically excluded from the opportunity to procure preferred runs of pictures distributed by the defendants in the localities in which defendants' theatres operate and at times refused any run at all in order to protect defendants' theatres from competition.

It is further charged by the plaintiff that the distributor-exhibitor defendants have combined with each other: (1) by conditioning the licensing of film distributed by one defendant in theatres operated by another upon the licensing of films distributed by the latter in the theatres operated by the former; (2) by excluding independently produced films from affiliated theatres and by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from competing with first run or other run theatres in cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located; (3) by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from operating theatres on the same run as affiliated exhibitors; (4) by using the first and early runs of affiliated theatres to control the film supply.

runs, clearances and admission prices of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in cities and towns in which affiliated theatres are located; (5) by pooling or otherwise sharing with each other the profits of affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area and frequently by together operating on the same run in cases where they would be in competition with one another except for such pooling or profit sharing agreements; (6) by effecting a division of the territory of the entire United States among them for theatre operating purposes.

The amended and supplemental complaint prays: (1) That each of the contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, together with attempts to monopolize the same, be declared illegal; (2) that the defendants and their subsidiaries be perpetually enjoined from continuing to carry out attempts at monopolization and all restraints of trade in distribution and exhibition of motion pictures; (3) that a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals, or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper, be established in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained in the decree; (4) that the five major defendants and their subsidiaries be directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, in any theatres which the court shall find to have been used by one or more of them unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in motion pictures.

After the amended and supplemental complaint was filed, the plaintiff and the five major defendants and their subsidiary corporations that were parties to the suit executed a written consent to the entry of a decree by the District Court, signed November 20, 1940. A decree was made in accordance with the consent reciting that no testimony had been taken, that no provision of the decree should be construed as an admission or adjudication that any of the plaintiff's charges were true, or that the consenting defendants had violated any law, or that the doing or the failure to do any of the acts or things enjoined or directed to be done would constitute a violation of law.

The decree enjoined the consenting defendants as follows:

(1) No distributor defendant shall license feature motion pictures for public exhibition within the United States at which an admission fee is to be charged until the feature has been trade shown within the exchange district in which the exhibition is to be held.

(2) No distributor defendant shall offer for license or shall license more than five features in a single group. The license of one group of features shall not be conditioned upon the licensing of another features or group of features, nor shall any distributor defendant require an exhibitor to license shorts, reissues, westerns, or foreigns as a condition of licensing other features. Disputes as to violation of these provisions shall be subject to arbitration. The power of the arbitrator shall be limited to a determination of whether the offer to license or the license was conditioned and, if found to be conditioned, to imposing a penalty against the distributor of not to exceed $500.

(3) No license for features to be exhibited in theatres located in one exchange district shall include theatres located in another exchange district.

(4) No distributor defendant shall refuse to license its pictures for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run to be designated by the distributor upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor, if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located. Controveries arising from a complaint by an exhibitor for violation of the foregoing provision shall be subject to arbitration under which an award based on a finding of violation shall direct the distributor to offer its pictures to the complainant on a run to be designated by the distributor, and upon terms fixed by the distributor, which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of this subdivision.

(5) Controversies arising from the complaint of an exhibitor that a feature licensed by a distributor defendant for exhibition in a particular theatre is generally offensive in the locality on moral, religious, or racial grounds shall be subject to arbitration, and, if the feature shall be found to be thus offensive, an award shall be made cancelling the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of the feature in that theatre.

(6) Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to arbitration. Reasonable clearance as to time and area was stipulated and held by the consent decree to be essential to the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. In determining whether a clearance complained of is unreasonable the arbitrator should consider the historical development of clearance in the area, the admission price of the theatres involved; their character, location, and type of entertainment; the rental terms and license fees paid by them; the extent to which they compete for patronage, and all other business considerations except affiliation of the theatres with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres. If the clearance be found unreasonable, the award shall fix the maximum clearance between the theatres involved, which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by a distributor that is party to the arbitration. The award may also fix, subject to the provisions of Section XVII of the consent decree, such maximum clearance under any existing franchise, i.e., a licensing agreement, or a series of licensing agreements, covering more than one motion-picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by the distributor during the entire period of the agreement. Nothing contained in this subdivision, nor any award in arbitration, shall restrict the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which it is able to negotiate, nor shall restrict the distributor's right to license any run which it desires to grant, nor is license the exhibition of any special feature under a contract the terms of which, including provisions for clearance, are applicable only thereto.

(7) Controversies arising upon a complaint by an independent exhibitor that a distributor defendant has arbitrarily refused to license its features for exhibition on the run requested by the exhibitor in one of the latter's theatres shall be subject to arbitration, but the making of any award is to be subject to certain specified conditions and no award made shall affect the license to exhibit any features then under license, but only future licenses.

(8) For three years after the entry of the decree, the consenting defendants are to notify the Department of Justice of any legally binding commitment for the acquisition of any theatre or theatres. During such period, each defendant is to report monthly the changes in its theatre position, together with a statement for the reason of such changes. For three years following the entry of the decree, no consenting defendant shall enter upon a general program of expanding its theatre holdings. Nothing shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purposes of its business.

(9) The decree shall not be construed to limit, impair or alter the right of a distributor to license the exhibition of motion pictures, subject to such terms as may be satisfactory to it, (a) in any theatre in which, or in the proceeds of which, it is directly or indirectly interested; (b) in any theatre an interest in which of not less than 50% is acquired after the date of the decree and which it owns at the time of such license, and (c) in any theatre of which a company in which the defendant owned not less than 42% of the common stock at the date of the decree and at the time of such license acquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license a financial interest of not less than 50%.

(10) Except as otherwise expressly and specifically provided in the decree, nothing therein shall be construed to limit the right of any distributor to select its own customers, bargain with them in accordance with law, or negotiate with or license to or accept any offer from any exhibitor to license its motion pictures or any number thereof, upon such terms and conditions as it deems advisable or to its best interests.

(11) For a period of three years after the entry of the consent decree the plaintiff shall not seek either in this or any other action against the consenting defendants to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition or to dissolve any defendant or any corporation in which it has directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest and which is engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures, or holds directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest in any corporation so engaged, or to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres of any such defendant or of any such corporation, or to require any such defendant, corporation or circuit to divest itself of its interests or any thereof in motion picture theatres in which it had an interest at the time of the entry of the decree.
